It is certainly a very trying position for any woman to appear before a public which had so recently heard and applauded the remarkable genius of her husband, but Mme. de Pachmann proved herself to be so interesting an artist yesterday afternoon that the spirit of comparison which was almost inevitable was well tempered by genuine admiration for her own beautiful playing. Of course she could hardly be expected to be a genius, for this M. de Pachmann most certainly is, but at the same time she did prove herself to be an artist of unusual talent. She played the following programme:

Fantaisie Sonate, opus 78.....Schubert
Molto moderato. Menuetto.
Andante. Allegretto.
Variations Serieuses, opus 54....Mendelssohn
Barcarole No. 4.....Rubinstein
"Si oiseau j'etais".....Henselt
a Three Etudes, opus 25, Nos. 6 and 8; opus 10, No. 5. b Audante Spianato and Grand Polonaise.....Chopin
"Reverie du lac"....Marguerite de Pachmann
"Waldesrauschen".....Liszt
Etude "En Forme de Valse".....Saint-Saëns

The whole programme was interesting and it was all well played, and her own composition was a charming conceit. It was unfortunate that she put the Schubert number at the beginning, or, to be wholly truthful, it was unfortunate that she played it at all. It very rarely appears upon programmes, and the reason is evident. There is no use in mincing matters—it is very dull, prolix, and one can hardly understand how Schubert could have written a work so little like himself. It is, however, greatly to Mme. de Pachmann's credit that she should have played so uninteresting a work with such care and artistic endeavor. A very fine technique and musical intelligence and comprehension are the chief characteristics of her playing and they were all severely tasked in this work, and it is much to her credit that she succeeded in making any part of it interesting. She will soon be heard again in Boston, and she is certainly well worth a hearing.

ARTHUR WELD.

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, MAY 1.

MME. PACHMANN'S RECITAL.

The Wife of the Distinguished Russian Pianist Gains Concert Honors.

A very gifted and intelligent artist, Mme. Marguerite de Pachmann, made her debut in Boston yesterday afternoon. Her audience at Chickering Hall, though small in size, was extremely appreciative and the recital will take rank among the best liked of the season. Mme. Pachmann is a beautiful woman and her playing is systematic and very brilliant. As an interpreter of Chopin she is less successful than her husband, yet her performance of the etudes was wonderfully good, and the grand polonaise scarcely less acceptable. Perhaps Mme. Pachmann was heard to least advantage in the Schubert fantasy sonata, which opened the programme, although the minuet movement was given with admirable smoothness and grace. The Hensett morceau, "Were I a Bird," was simply charming. Here, as in Liszt's "Woodland Sounds," and her own dainty "Reverie on the Lakes," the pianist set forth her command over the resources of the pianoforte. That there is power as well as delicacy in her playing the Mendelssohn variations and the barcarolle by Rubinstein gave abundant proof. It is pleasant to know that there is a prospect of a concert in which both Mr. and Mme. Pachmann will be heard here.

Boston Journal.

THURSDAY MORNING, MAY 1, 1890.

Recital by Mme. De Pachmann.

Mme. Marguerite De Pachmann is not far behind her talented husband in the interpretation of the works of Chopin. She gave yesterday afternoon in Chickering Hall a recital which stirred the audience to the highest pitch of enthusiasm. It was miscellaneous, and gained for the lady a hearty welcome. Her playing is marked by the same characteristics as that of her husband—technical difficulties are but child's play to her, and the most elaborate pyrotechnics were played by her as easily as a young piano player will render the musical scale. She has none of the idiosyncracies of her husband, and is modest and graceful in appearance at the piano, displaying an intelligence which could not fail to accompany such masterly delivery of the compositions as were chosen yesterday afternoon. Not the least acceptable was a reverie of her own composition.

Boston Courier.

DAY MORNING, APRIL 27, 1890.

THE LAST SYMPHONY.

CLOSING OF THE FIRST SERIES UNDER MR. NIKISCH'S DIRECTORSHIP.

With the twenty-fourth and last concert which took place last evening, the ninth season, and the first under Mr. Nikisch, came to an end. And it may justly be said that it ended, figuratively speaking, in a "blaze of glory;" for the concerts at which the orchestra has played with such uniform fire and finish and at which the interpretations of the various numbers of the programme have given so much satisfaction, have been few in number. It began with an overture and closed with another, both of which have been called, with a strong show of truth, the two greatest overtures that have ever been given to the world. The first was Beethoven's overture to "Leonore" in C, number three. It was grandly performed. The pathetic phrases of the first measures of the introduction were most expressively played, the fortissimo climax was finely worked up and its closing measures were blended with the pianissimo entrance of the allegro in a manner as skillful as it was artistic. The trumpet call from without also was effectively rendered, and the short passage which precedes its repetition was far more smoothly and less abruptly given than it usually is. In fact, although Mr. Nikisch conducted from memory, the dynamic effects throughout the entire overture were remarkably accurate and well managed. An equally fine performance of Beethoven's fourth symphony followed. All the joyousness, the serene melancholy, the jollity of the work were given full expression, while the renderings of those particular passages that are always eagerly anticipated—the entrance of the second theme of the first movement, the passage for the clarinet in the adagio, the beautiful trio of the minuet, and the exquisitely delightful second theme of the closing allegro—were as felicitous as possible. But as the influence of many good lives is almost entirely lost through the perpetration of a single misdeed, so was the effect of this programme, which would have been wholly magnificent, nearly ruined by the interpolation at this point of Paganini's "Moto Perpetuo," which was played in unison by the thirty-two violin players of the orchestra, to the pianoforte accompaniment of Mr. Nikisch. "What a fall was there," what a blot on what might easily have been one of the few great evenings of the season! Of course, it was well played, and, of course, it was re-demanded; but fortunately good taste prevailed, and the clamor for its repitition was hissed into silence. 'Tis true, and pity 'tis, that the believers in the total depravity of mankind can find ample proof of the truth of their belief in every corner of the world's stage, even at the pet concerts of aesthetic Boston. The concert closed with the overture that came first on the opening programme of the season, the introduction to "Die Meistersinger." Without doubt it was rendered with much greater breadth, and freedom of tempo, than it was in the first instance; for, although the first performance was fine, the angularity of Mr. Nikisch's lead, at that time, caused apparently by nervousness, imbued it with a certain rigidity which was nowhere visible last evening. It was a great performance. Mr. Nikisch was received with prolonged applause at the beginning of the concert, and at close of the first overture, was presented with a large laurel wreath. At the end of the concert the audience, one of the largest of the season, evinced so much enthusiasm that he was compelled to bow his acknowledgments over and over. There can be no doubt left in his mind as to the kind of reception he will meet with next October. Before closing this report a word should be said regarding the programme book, which has become more and more valuable to the Symphony audiences during the past few years. The indefatigably energy displayed by Mr. George H. Wilson in compiling the great amount of information they have contained, and the ability with which he has met many emergencies that can hardly be realized by the public, deserve the warmest praise. The book is now a feature of the concerts that could not well be dispensed with.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

A few facts concerning this now famous organization so soon to visit this city may prove of interest. Founded in 1881 by the open-handed liberality of Mr. Henry L. Higginson, a Boston banker, and a genuine admirer of good music, this orchestra has increased in reputation until to-day it is acknowledged the finest orchestra in this country and the equal of any even in Europe, save possibly the famous Vienna Opera House orchestra, conducted by Hans Richter. The season in Boston opens usually about October 15, and closes late in April. Twenty-four Friday afternoon public rehearsals and twenty-four Saturday evening concerts, each a distinct series, by itself, are given in the famous Music Hall, which seats 2,400. Season tickets at a face value of $12 and $7.50 are sold for each series; but so great is the demand for these tickets that for the past six years the $12 seats have been sold at auction, leaving the $7.50 seats to be sold at their face value. For the past two seasons, every reserved seat in the house was sold for the season for each series of 24 concerts at the annual sale in September, a month before the first concert. The highest price paid at the auction last season for a $12 seat was $96 apiece for two seats; and this season $107 each was paid for a pair of seats, the average price being about $20 a ticket. Last September, the sale of the $7.50 seats at their face value was advertised for Tuesday, September 17; and on the Thursday previous, September 12, at ten o'clock in the morning, a party of four started a line in the entrance to the Music Hall box-office. By noon, this line had grown to fifty, by six o'clock that evening to over a hundred; and, with constant addition, this party waited in line five days and five nights, sleeping in their places and having their meals brought to them. The leading dailies of Boston printed pictures of this party, and crowds of interested spectators came to look on the novel sight. When the box-office was opened at eight o'clock on Tuesday morning, nearly 500 people were waiting in line. The limit was four tickets to each buyer; and in just one hour and a quarter every $7.50 seat in the house was sold, and at least 200 people were turned away, unable to secure tickets. All this was for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals. Then a second line was at once formed for the $7.50 tickets to the Saturday evening concerts, held on the following Friday. A second wait of three days and three nights followed; and in another hour and a half every seat was sold, and the season opened with actually not a seat of any description to sell, only admission tickets. No such sale was ever known, as it must be borne in mind that this was not a sale of tickets covering two or three weeks, but six months, with two concerts in each week. On Friday afternoons, in deference to students and others who had neither the inclination nor the means to attend the entire series, the second balcony, containing 466 seats, is thrown open to holders of what are called "rush" tickets,— first come, first served. 1,000 of these tickets are sold at 25 cents each; and as there are only seats for about one-half this number, the rest being obliged to either sit on the steps alongside the stage or stand up, the holders of these tickets begin to gather an hour before the doors open. Then at sharp half-past one, with six or seven hundred impatient music-lovers crowding each entrance to the hall, the doors are opened. The scene that follows almost beggars description. Old ladies, young girls, college students, Conservatory pupils, strangers unable to secure reserved seats, push, scramble, tug, and squeeze, all good-naturedly, in the mad race for the coveted seats in the second balcony, and in five minutes' time every seat is taken, and they sit quietly during the hour that intervenes before the concert begins, reading their analytical programmes or looking down on the more fortunate reserved seat-holders as they go to their places. This scene is repeated every Friday afternoon; and, when Conductor Nikisch lifts his bâton to commence the concert, the immense auditorium is filled in every nook and corner with over 3,000 expectant listeners. For the Saturday evening concerts, the entire house is reserved, admission selling at 50 cents; and another audience of 3,000 assembles to testify to the power of good music. The programme is so arranged as to last almost exactly an hour and a half, and usually comprises an overture, followed by a selection by the soloist, then an orchestral selection of a light order, another number by the soloist, and as a closing selection some standard symphony. In the months of December, January, February, and March, a week is devoted to a trip to New Haven, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, the Boston concerts being omitted. This season these trips have been literally a series of triumphs, notably in New York, Philadelphia, and Washington. In Philadelphia, the concerts are given in the Academy of Music, seating 3,000; and every seat in the house has been sold before the doors were opened. At the last concert in Washington, in March, the new Lincoln Hall, seating 1,600, was packed to the doors, the sale of tickets having been stopped at half-past seven, the capacity of the hall being sold. One feature of these performances that accounts in a great measure for the marked success of the orchestra away from home is the fact that the same high standard of artistic excellence is maintained everywhere, Conductor Nikisch always exacting from his men their very best efforts. Another strong point is the arranging of programmes to suit the tastes of the audience, an item of no slight interest to the patrons of the concerts on the coming Western tour.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.

MONDAY MORNING, APRIL 28, 1890.

MUSICAL MATTERS.

The Last Symphony Concert of the Season Saturday.

It was a strangely selected programme, that which ended the symphonic series on Saturday, yet the excellent execution of the different numbers atoned for the oddity of their sequence. The first number was the overture known as "Leonora No. 3," and this was read and performed in a most commendable manner. It is probably the very best example of the dramatic school of overture, and its contrasted emotions form a most exciting tone-picture. It was not exaggerated in any degree, and the tendency which some conductors have to turn the finale into a wild scramble was resisted. Equally successful was the fourth Beethoven symphony which followed. The interpretation was remarkable for its conservative style, and no attempt was made to individualize any of its effects. Even the kettledrums, which have often been overprominent, and which in this work have a most important part to play, were not allowed to dominate the strings in the great crescendo which ushers in the recapitulation of the themes. The symphony is one of the most radical of the nine, for although the sonata shape is faithfully followed, it is full of the boldest progressions and the most abrupt contrasts. It was but natural that Weber should have attacked its iconoclasm root and branch. The treatment of some of the instruments, too, was something entirely new at the time the work was composed (1806) and must have shocked many. Beethoven revelled in elevating the humbler instruments of the orchestra into positions of unexpected prominence. Take the kettledrums as an example; already in his first symphony he brings forward this instrument, which his predecessors had only used to strengthen the rhythm, and in this work they become an important factor in the proceedings. It is singular however that the trumpet was not raised into prominence also, but one may look through all the scores of the master and not find one difficult or unconventional trumpet passage. The contrabasses, however, were very often brought in the foreground, and not even the trio of the scherzo in the fifth symphony presents more difficulties for these, than the coda of the finale of this fourth symphony, and it is pleasant to note that they were played with absolute clearness, even in such trying passages as occur in this movement. It was altogether a performance which deserves cordial praise, a true Beethoven interpretation, in which the tempi and the thousand and one markings which the composer has so carefully placed in the work, were all respected.

And then the effect of such a masterpiece was destroyed by a piece of virtuosity below the dignity of these concerts and especially out of place after a great symphony. It seemed almost as a guantlet thrown down to those who have questioned the ensemble of the strings, and if it was intended in this sense, it was certainly successful, for the ensemble was perfect, every detail of shading being executed as if by one man. Yet David's arrangement of Paganini's "Moto Perpetuo" put one out of humor for the "Meistersinger" prelude which followed it, and destroyed the loftiness of the Beethoven symphony which preceded it. It had a Gilmorean flavor which was new to the programmes. It may be urged that Handel's Largo has been given in a similar manner at these concerts, but that work, although also an arrangement and designed to display the strings, was of intrinsically different content from this bit of musical fireworks. That the work was heartily applauded is undoubtedly true, but it is a question whether 32 banjos playing in unison would not have won as decisive a tribute from the unthinking. It was not unanimously applauded either, and for the first time signs of dissent quenched the enthusiasm of the majority.

The symphonic season of 1889-90 was in rondo form, and the theme of the beginning came back at the close, for as Mr. Nikisch began with the "Meistersinger" prelude, so also he ended with it. At the end of its performance the conductor was heartily applauded, the audience evidently desiring to speak their thanks in this manner, and in summing up the season's work it is impossible to withhold the tribute of hearty thanks to all concerned. There have been faults to find, and faultfinding is not a pleasant employment, but there has also been a manifest advance made in the most recent concerts. There has been more life and dash in the performances than ever before, and if this has been counterbalanced by occasional roughness of execution even this fault shows signs of amelioration. The programmes have not been as consistently educational as heretofore, but this is a failing that leans to virtue's side. The orchestra is still the best in the country, and with such artists in its ranks it would be difficult to deteriorate it from its present foremost position. LOUIS C. ELSON.

Boston Post

THURSDAY MORNING, MAY 1, 1890.

MME. MARGUERITE DE PACHMANN'S RECITAL.

It is certainly a very trying position for any woman to appear before a public which had so recently heard and applauded the remarkable genius of her husband, but Mme. de Pachmann proved herself to be so interesting an artist yesterday afternoon that the spirit of comparison which was almost inevitable was well tempered by genuine admiration for her own beautiful playing. Of course she could hardly be expected to be a genius, for this M. de Pachmann most certainly is, but at the same time she did prove herself to be an artist of unusual talent. She played the following programme:

Fantaisie Sonate, opus 78.....Schubert
Molto moderato. Menuetto.
Andante. Allegretto.
Variations Serieuses, opus 54....Meudelssohn
Barcarole No. 4.....Rubinstein
"Si oiseau j'etais".....Henselt
a Three Etudes, opus 25, Nos. 6 and 8; opus 10, No. 5. b Andante Spianato and Grand Polonaise.....Chopin
"Reverie du lac"....Marguerite de Pachmann
"Waldesrauschen".....Liszt
Etude "En Forme de Valse".....Saint-Saëns

The whole programme was interesting and it was all well played, and her own composition was a charming concoit. It was unfortunate that she put the Schubert number at the beginning, or, to be wholly truthful, it was unfortunate that she played it at all. It very rarely appears upon programmes, and the reason is evident. There is no use in mincing matters—it is very dull, prolix, and one can hardly understand how Schubert could have written a work so little like himself. It is, however, greatly to Mme. de Pachmann's credit that she should have played so uninteresting a work with such care and artistic endeavor. A very fine technique and musical intelligence and comprehension are the chief characteristics of her playing and they were all severely tasked in this work, and it is much to her credit that she succeeded in making any part of it interesting. She will soon be heard again in Boston, and she is certainly well worth a hearing.

ARTHUR WELD.

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, MAY 1.

MME. PACHMANN'S RECITAL.

The Wife of the Distinguished Russian Pianist Gains Concert Honors.

A very gifted and intelligent artist, Mme. Marguerite de Pachmann, made her debut in Boston yesterday afternoon. Her audience at Chickering Hall, though small in size, was extremely appreciative and the recital will take rank among the best liked of the season. Mme. Pachmann is a beautiful woman and her playing is systematic and very brilliant. As an interpreter of Chopin she is less successful than her husband, yet her performance of the studes was wonderfully good, and the grand polonaise scarcely less acceptable. Perhaps Mme. Pachmann was heard to least advantage in the Schubert fantasy sonata, which opened the programme, although the minuet movement was given with admirable smoothness and grace. The Hensett morceau, "Were I a Bird," was simply charming. Here, as in Liszt's "Woodland Sounds," and her own dainty "Reverie on the Lakes," the pianist set forth her command over the resources of the pianoforte. That there is power as well as delicacy in her playing the Mendelssohn variations and the barcarolle by Rubinstein gave abundant proof. It is pleasant to know that there is a prospect of a concert in which both Mr. and Mme. Pachmann will be heard here.

Boston Journal.

THURSDAY MORNING, MAY 1, 1890.

Recital by Mme. De Pachmann.

Mme. Marguerite De Pachmann is not far behind her talented husband in the interpretation of the works of Chopin. She gave yesterday afternoon in Chickering Hall a recital which stirred the audience to the highest pitch of enthusiasm. It was miscellaneous, and gained for the lady a hearty welcome. Her playing is marked by the same characteristics as that of her husband—technical difficulties are but child's play to her, and the most elaborate pyrotechnics were played by her as easily as a young piano player will render the musical scale. She has none of the idiosyncracies of her husband, and is modest and graceful in appearance at the piano, displaying an intelligence which could not fail to accompany such masterly delivery of the compositions as were chosen yesterday afternoon. Not the least acceptable was a reverie of her own composition.

[123]

Boston Daily Traveller
MONDAY, April 28, 1890.

Close of the Symphony Concert Season.

A Review of the Events of Mr. Nikisch's Year.

A Sketch of the Orchestra and Some Personal History.

The Spring Tour and its Outlook.

The Week in Boston—Paragraphs and Comment.

The ninth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra closed with the concert of last Saturday evening, when this programme was performed:

BEETHOVEN.	OVERTURE. "Leonore," No. 3.
BEETHOVEN.	SYMPHONY No. 4, in B flat.
PAGANINI.	MOTO PERPETUO, Allegro de Concert. Played by 32 violins.
WAGNER.	PRELUDE. "Die Meistersinger."

The performance of this programme was in every way noteworthy, the Beethoven numbers being given with a classicity worthy of Reinecke. The beautiful "Lenore" overture, and the sweet-tempered Fourth symphony were played with absolute regard for the expression marks indicated by the composer, and with a tonal beauty altogether grateful. Exception might be taken only to the slow adagios in both overture and symphony. Mr. Nikisch ended his season as he began it—by a performance of the "Meistersinger" prelude. No more poetic reading of Wagner could be asked than Mr. Nikisch gave; in short, the closing number of the twenty-four concerts was in many respects the finest played. The extraordinary exhibition of virtuosity by the violins of the orchestra in performing Paganini's "Perpetual Motion," a piece in very rapid tempo, written for a single instrument, is partial justification for the introduction of such a piece of pronounced sensationalism; for the 32 players were as if guided by one arm, so exquisite was their unison, so perfect their observance of the nuances, and so subtle the shades of expression revealed. The tone, too, was delicious, of power full and ample in the climaxes, and in the diminuendi of faintest sound. There is scarce another body of orchestral players, certainly not in this country, who would dare to attempt such a feat. But, notwithstandiug the wonderful performance and the effect upon the audience was electrical, we deplore the presence of this sort of thing in a dignified programme, and to introduce it at the final concert of the ccurse, gave it a prominence catculated to warp one's estimate of the entire season. As we have intimated the audience vociferously applauded the performance, but Mr. Nikisch very wisely did not permit a repetition, although at Friday's rehearsal he did succomb. There has been prepared an orchestral accompaniment to the piece, but the performances in question were given with accompaniment of pianoforte, played by Mr. Nikisch. [Mr. Nikisch was greeted with long-continued applause as he came to the desk to conduct Saturday's concert; after each number there was much enthusiasm, (and a lovely floral tribute was handed him after the overture), and at the close of the concert the audience stood and for many minutes the applause was continued. It was a hearty and sincere expression of enthusiasm, and Mr. Nikisch has every reason to be proud of his Auf Wiedersheim. We defer until next week a summing up of the artistic results of the season.

From the summary of works performed published in the analytical programme of the twenty-fourth concert, we extract the following:

Number of compositions, excluding selections by soloists, 69, divided as follows: German 52, modern French 1, classic French 2, Russian 2, Bohemian 1, Danish 3, English 3, American 5. Of these the following were played for the first time in Boston: Borodin, Symphony No. 1, in B flat; Bird, Arthur, two episodes for orchestra; Foote, Suite for String orchestra, No. 2, D major, op 21 (new); Floersheim, Scherzo; Goldmark, Overture, "Spring"; Haydn, Symphony "L'Ours"; MacDowell, Symphonic Poem, "Launcelot and Elaine"; Raff, Symphony, "In the Fatherland"; Stanford, Symphony, "The Irish"; Tschaikowsky, Overture-Fantasie, "Romeo and Juliet"; Weld, Dramatic Suite, "Italia." The American compositions performed were by Bird, Foote, Floersheim, MacDowell and Weld, all for the first time at these concerts.

The soloists were: Pianists—Mr. Carl Baermann (Beethoven's E flat concerto); Mrs. Bloomfield-Zeisler (Litolff's "Nationale Hollandaise" concerto), Rafael Joseffy (Liszt's second, A flat, concerto); Carl Faelten (Louis Maas's, concerto in C minor); Mme. Steiniger-Clark (Schumann's concerto); Miss Aus der Ohe (Rubinstein's, G major concerto). Violinists—Mr. Franz Kneisel (Brahms's concerto); C. M. Loeffler (Symphonie Espagnole, Lalo); T. Adamowski (Saint-Saëns's third, B minor concerto); Otto Roth (Vieux temps' fifth concerto, in A. minor). Violoncelists—Anton Hekking (two movements from Goltermann's concerto); Leo Schultz, [illegible] "Kol Nidrei," and Eckert, concerto in A minor). Singers—Miss Gertrude Franklin, Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, sopranos; Miss Gertrude Edmands, Mrs. W. C. Wyman, contraltos; tenor, Mr. W. J. Winch; bass, Mr. Emil Fischer. The following soloists introduced novelties: Mr. Kneisel, Mr. Adamowski, Mr. Schultz (two).

The management give out the following regarding the attendance during the season:

Attendance at 24 rehearsals, at 25 cents each	20,985
503 Season (Rehearsal) tickets, at $7.50, or 31⅓ cents each	12,192
974 Season (Concert) tickets, at $7.50, or 31⅓ cents each	23,376
Attendance at Evening concerts on Admission tickets, at 50 cents each	3,697
Total attendance, at an expense of 50 cents or less	60,250
To this amount add number of higher-priced ($12.50) tickets for both concerts and rehearsals, 1423x48	68,304
Total attendance regular performances	128,554
Add attendance at three Afternoon Young People's Concerts	6,900
Total attendance at concerts by Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston	135,454

This is an extraordinary showing, and one entirely unparalleled in this or any other country.

Tonight in Philadelphia the fourth annual tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be begun. No trip of equal extent has ever been undertaken by the organization. The soloists, not including members of the orchestra, who will appear en route, are Mme. Steinbach Jahns, soprano, and Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield Zersler, pianist. The following members of the orchestra will be heard: Mr. Kneisel, Mr. Adamowski, Mr. Loeffler, Mr. Hekking, Mr. Schultz, Mr. Mole. The itinerary is as follows: Monday evening, April 28, final concert in series of five. The following night a similar series in Baltimore will be closed. Two concerts in Washington follow, the first by the orchestra alone, closing a series of five, the second with the Washington Choral Society, when Dudley Buck's "Light of Asia" will be given. On Friday and Saturday, May 2 and 3, the orchestra will make its first appearance in Richmond, Va., under the auspices of the Mozart Association. At Columbus, O., will be given a single performance on Monday evening, May 5, under the auspices of the Orpheus Club. At Cincinnati two concerts, on Tuesday and Wednesday, and a single concert in Louisville, Ky., on Thursday, May 8, follows. Two concerts will be given in St. Louis on Friday and Saturday, May 9 and 10, and one at Minneapolis on Monday evening, May 12. On Tuesday, May 13, the orchestra makes its debut in St. Paul, and then at Chicago a single concert will be given in Central Music Hall on Wednesday evening, May 14. From Chicago to Milwaukee for a concert under the auspices of the Arion Club. The next is at Ann Arbor, Mich., where the University Musical Society undertakes the concert on Friday, May 16. On Saturday evening, May 17, a single concert will be given in Detroit, and directly after the concert the orchestra goes by steamer across Lake Erie to Cleveland, then on to Pittsburg for two concerts in connection with the Mozart Club, Monday and Tuesday, May 19 and 20, presenting on the second night Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise." From Pittsburg back to Cleveland for one concert on Wednesday evening, May 21. Buffalo has a concert on Thursday, the 22d, and Albany on Friday, the 23d, the orchestra reaching Boston again on Saturday, May 24. Both Mr. Ellis, the manager, and Mr. F. R. Comee, the deputy manager, are to travel with the orchestra, Mr. Comee going as its particular courier and charge d'affairs.

Personnel of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, season of 1889-90 (see [illegible] on page five of this issue):

Conductor—Mr. Arthur Nikisch (first season).

First violins—Franz Kneisel, leader (fifth season), C. M. Loeffler, T. Adamowski, Svecenski, Roth, Mullaly, Moldauer, Kuntz, Gantzberg, Human, Fiedler, Winternitz, Kuehn, Mahn, Delisle, Krafft.

Second violins—Akeroyd, Fiumara Swornssbourne, Marble, Schuchmann, J. Kneisel, Tischer-Zeitz, Hannemann, Korth, Eichler, Goldstein, Michael, Eichler, Kneer.

Violas—H. Heindl, Zach, Rietzel, Grünberg, Kluge, Hoyer, Patz, Taubert, Kolster, Post, Knecht.

Violoncellos—Hekking, Schultz, J. Adamowski, Mingels, Loeffler, G. Campanari, Reibl, Korth, A. Heindl.

Basses—Goldstein, Green, Jennewein, Gerhardt, Barth, Bareither, Reinhart, Butler.

Piccolo—Fox.
Flutes—Molé, E. M. Heindl.
Oboes—Sautet, Demuth.
English horn—Muller.
Clarinets—Goldschmidt, Metzger.
Bassoons—Gunzel, Dietsch.
Horns—J. Reiter (successor to X. Reiter), Schneider, Schormann, Schumann.
Trumpets—P. Muller, Lafricain.
Trombones—Hampe, Behr, Stewart.
Tuba—Golde.
Harp—Schuecker.
Tympani—Simpson.
Great drum—Moore.
Librarian—W. C. Nichols.

We are tempted to write a few lines of personal biography regarding the orchestra, but as the plan was not premeditated, and is entirely an affair of the memory, must be pardoned if all the talent, people of the band are not named, or artistic pedigree of those who are is completely stated. We also hope that among [illegible] the length of individual sketches.

Mr. Kneisel succeeded Mr. Listemann as violin leader at the beginning of Mr. Gericke's second term. He is a graduate of the Vienna Conservatory, and had had experience in orchestral and solo work before coming to Boston. As leader of the Kneisel quartet, he is quite as well known in the East as in the West he is known as concertmeister and soloist. Mr. Kneisel married the daughter of a Viennese violin maker, herself a player of good parts. Mr. Loeffler has been with the orchestra since its organization; he is French-taught, and has the faculty extremely well developed of knowing exactly what he can play best; next season Mr. Loeffler will be known both as composer and violinist. Mr. Adamowski's coming to Boston antedates the formation of the orchestra; he is a Pole, and a very musical one; two years since he organized the string quartet that bears his name, which already has a reputation more than local; Mr. Adamowski is progressive, and has played several concertos for the first time in Boston. Mr. Svecenski is the best viola quartet player belonging in Boston; he came from Vienna with Mr. Kneisel, likewise Mr. Fiedler; both were original members of the Kneisel Quartet, Mr. Fiedler being succeeded two years ago by Mr. Roth. Mr. Roth is of Vienese extraction. We have an impression that he ran away from a military school, so ardent was his love for music, so determined his hatred of geometry and the theory of fortifications; at any rate, should he sail on the Trave May 28, he might be confronted by an embassy from the Austrian king, and the fate of the baritone, Blume, be his. Mr. Roth plays well. Mr Mullaly is a link to the old days of the Harvard Musical Association; he is not an old man, though a very accomplished musician; he is sometimes known as the High Priest of the orchestra. Mr. Kuntz has grown up in Boston orchestras and is always equal to the task assigned him. Mr. Kuntz and the spectacled young man at his left, Mr. Moldauer, are members of the Adamowski Quartet, Mr. Kuntz playing the "tenor." Mr. Mahn is related to Carl Zerrahn; this is especially noticeable when he stands up.

The Akeroyds have done honorable service in Boston; the present second violin leader of the orchestra is a capital chef. Mr. Swornssbourne, apart from his duties in the orchestra, fills a position of sanitary importance in Boston; at one of the hotels he leads a small orchestra during the dinner hour. Mr. Kneisel is, of course, related to his brother. Mr. Eichler, Mr. J. E. Eichler, (both are J. E.,) is a survivor of the old days, and is in every way a relic to be proud of; in the Germania brass band he is, may be, was, a familiar figure; and probably he has played waltzes at the debut of more pretty maids than any other veteran fiddler of Boston. Mr. Fiumara is as rotund and jolly as is the likeness of him printed above; he is a man of geneological tastes.

Henry Heindl and his brother Alex are just as young as they used to be—years ago, when the smaller cities of the State had "Conventions," and Mrs. Houston-West, W. J. and J. F. Winch, used to go in their company for the delectation of the budding tenors and basses of Lowell and Lawrence. Mr. Zach is a versatile man, can orchestrate a polka, pen a lyric, or compel the attention of an audience by his pianoforte accompaniments. Mr. Rietzel is an "old timer;" when he plays the piccolo it is his merry eye and bobbing head which set the rhythm. Mr. Rietzel is a good conductor and composer of popular music for orchestra. Mr. Grünberg, we believe, was once a divinity student; to be a viola player is no trifling matter, though as a vocation, it is a little less than serious.

Mr. Hekking is the admirable 'cello player of the Kneisel Quartet, as well as first 'cello of the orchestra. His dark-haired desk-mate, Mr. Schultz, is perhaps the most energetic player in the band; a good general musician, too; Mr. Schultz came from Leipzig with Mr. Nikisch. Mr. J. Adamowski has been in the orchestra one year, and one year in the quartet which his brother leads; for both positions he is eminently qualified. Messrs. Mingels, Loeffler, and Campanari are efficient chamber players, while the last named sings in a baritone voice. The solemn Mr. Goldstein, whose position is so near the statue of Mr. Beethoven, is one of the two legitimate successors of Bottisini; the other is his blonde associate, Henry Green. Mr. Green is a utility man; he can play the tympani, and really earn the large salary Mr. Simpson, his successor in the orchestra, now draws (and earns); Mr. Green plays the small drum in a manner to empty all the schoolhouses on the route of every public procession to which he happens to be attached; Mr. Green and the quarter of twelve stroke on the bells of Boston (signal for one session of the schools) are synonymous terms. Mr. Jennewein is known as a wit, he says so little; but as a copyist he is a man of deeds.

Now we come to the wind; strange though it be, all are modest men. Mr. Fox, whose ability to top a climax is second to none, is no new comer; we all know him and his worth, likewise Mr. Heindl, whose smooth tone is by no means forgotten in the shadow of the brilliant voice of his urbane companion, M. Molé, whose smile is as winsome as his phrasing is masterly. Mr. Sautet could not be spared to go back to Paris even if the great M. Carnot should offer to return to us in his stead. Miles. Eames and [illegible] men—blonde and brunette—are the "humorists" of the orchestra; Messrs. Gunzel and Dietsch are at all times so sedate as to make the statement a paradoxical one. The four hornists form a noble group. Mr. Muller has a trumpet tone of sweetness and strength, which adjectives can be applied to express the disposition of his associate, whose trumpetry is the result of hard study. The trombones are each and all geniuses; under Mr. Gericke their scope was somewhat circumscribed, but this season there is no denying their vigorous and masterful performances; Mr. Stewart is to be the next city bandmaster—that is when this stupid city of ours adopts the proper course towards open-air concerts; until then Mr. Stewart is satisfied with his study of languages and the activity which a busy musician experiences. Mr. Goldie plays one of the goldiest instruments of the brass family, from whose throat the theme of the Pilgrims in "Tannhauser" or the "Walhad" motif of the "Nibelungen," come with equal beauty and richness. Mr. Simpson never had such a year as the one that is passed; the tympani player, always an autocrat, has been elevated by Mr. Nikisch, to the rank of soloist, and Mr. Simpson has appreciated the situation and not abused his instrument. If any of our readers think the tympani easy of performance, that it is only a simple thud, thud, tonic, dominant thud-d-d-d-d-d—etc., let them stand behind Mr. Simpson during a modern symphony and note all the intricacies of "tuning." The tympani player deserves to rank with the ice man and the plumber in the "blue book" of the unimpoverished men of toil. Mr. Schuecker is the youngest player in the orchestra, a mere youth in point of age; but no son of Miriam ere played as he.

Mr. Nichols deserves a paragraph all by himself. It is not in a spirit of irreverence that we call him "Nichols." Since he played in the old Germania Orchestra for the parties our mothers and our sisters gave, has not "Nichols" been a household word? Who so well as he at triangle or zylophone, or bass drum or cymbals startles the timid or defies the ff marks? Who but "Nichols" disappoints us all in not pitching the pianoforte off the platform, as he trundles it along, with giant strength, to a place in the centre of or chestra? None so brave, so knowing, so witty, as "Nichols." May the first sign of old age find him still in the shadow of Beethoven on symphony nights in Boston!

BOSTON HERALD.
TUESDAY, APRIL 29, 1890.

THE DE PACHMANN RECITALS.

It is seldom that the Boston musical public is so thoroughly stirred from its habitual tranquility as it has been by Vladimir de Pachmann, the Russian pianist, whose recent cyclus of Chopin recitals created so much comment in musical circles. He returned to this city yesterday, and gave one more audience to his admirers in Chickering Hall, playing a programme including many of the brilliant successes of his earlier appearances. He was greeted by an audience which filled all available seats, and he charmed all who heard him quite as successfully as in his former appearances. He is an artist whose personality enters into all that he does, and as this personality is admirably in keeping with the compositions he has played here, it is not surprising that he has won his Boston audiences, one and all, and gained here the same appreciation of his gifts that continental Europe has accorded him for many years. Mme. de Pachmann, also an eminent pianist, is to give a single recital in this city at the same hall tomorrow afternoon, appearing in a brilliantly varied programme of piano music.

Boston Daily Globe.
TUESDAY, APRIL 29.

CHOPIN SUPERBLY PLAYED.

Vladimir de Pachmann Gives His Final Recital in Chickering Hall.

Vladimir de Pachmann gave another of his delightful Chopin piano recitals in Chickering Hall yesterday afternoon. The audience, which crowded the hall to its capacity, was unrestrained in enthusiasm, and insisted upon more than one encore. The programme was made up of selections heard at Mr. Pachmann's previous recitals here, and included the fantaisie, op. 49; impromptu, op. 29; barcarole, op. 60; berceuse, op. 57; three etudes, 2, 3 and 6, op. 25; ballade, op. 23; waltz op. 42; mazourka, op. 41, and tarantelle, op. 43.

The announcement that this was his last Chopin recital was regretted by many. It is not improbable, however, that he will soon be heard in a miscellaneous programme.

Wednesday afternoon Mme. Marguerite de Pachmann, whose playing has been warmly commended in New York, will make her first appearance here. The programme announced consists of selections from Schubert, Mendelssohn, Rubinstein, Heuselt, Chopin, Marguerite de Pachmann, Liszt and Saint-Saens.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.
TUESDAY MORNING, APRIL 29, 1890.

THE DE PACHMANN RECITAL.

The announcement of another and final recital of Chopin's music by Vladimir de Pachmann was sufficient to tax the capacity of Chickering Hall yesterday afternoon with an audience whose quality and enthusiasm showed plainly the impression made by the distinguished pianist on his former appearances. The programme was made up mainly of selections from the former series of recitals, and therefore calls for no extended review. There was the same wonderful technique, the same indefinable fascination of touch, and the same almost impossible production of a "singing" pianissimo. The great etude, op. 25, was given with all the defiance of technical difficulties that characterized it before. The ballade in B flat was another exhibition of great power and dignity, while the daintier element of the recital was beautifully represented by the berceuse, op. 57.

Boston Journal.

[illegible] RECITAL.

TUESDAY MORNING, APRIL 29, 1890.

The De Pachmann Concerts.

The series of Chopin recitals recently given by Mr. Vladimir de Pachmann, created such enthusiasm among the critics and musicians of this city that arrangements were made to give an additional recital in Chickering Hall yesterday afternoon. The hall was filled to its utmost, and when the performer made his appearance he was given a most hearty welcome. His programme was a very attractive one, and he again delighted and amazed his audience by his marvelous performances. We have heard many fine pianists this winter, but Mr. de Pachmann's playing has an indescribable charm, which added to his wonderfully clear and finished technique, places him at the head in this style of music. The etude in thirds, op. 25, No. 6 was applauded to the echo, as at the former recitals, and he repeated it in his inimitable song, which will long be remembered by those who were fortunate enough to hear it. His playing has indeed been both a pleasure and an education to the music-loving public. Madame Marguerite de Pachmann, his wife, will give a miscellaneous recital in Chickering Hall on Wednesday next, which will be awaited with much interest.

Boston Post
TUESDAY MORNING, APRIL 29, 1890.

MR. VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN'S RECITAL.

The extraordinary success of the three recent Pachmann recitals caused a lively desire among our musical public to hear him again, and in response to this very marked wish he returned and gave still another Chopin recital yesterday afternoon. There was a very large audience; in fact, the hall was completely filled, and it was for a Boston audience unusually enthusiastic. His programme was a selection of those works which had proved most successful in his former recitals, and he repeated the remarkable performances of the G minor ballade, the very difficult study in thirds, and the barcarole—all of which he played, if possible, even more beautifully than before. As has been said before in these columns, technical difficulties do not exist for him, and his extraordinary ability for understanding all the moods and caprices of Chopin's imaginative and varied character is more clearly shown in each concert. In short, it suffices to say that M. de Pachmann is in every sense of the word a great pianist, and his warm, sympathetic and deeply artistic readings of the mysterious works of the great Polish master have been not only a great pleasure to the public at large, but a liberal education to our local musicians.

ARTHUR WELD.

Boston Evening Transcript.
TUESDAY, APRIL 29, 1890.

MR. DE PACHMANN'S RECITAL.

Mr. Vladimir de Pachmann gave his extra Chopin recital in Chickering Hall yesterday afternoon, before a very large audience. The programme was:

Fantasie in F minor, Op. 49.
Impromptu in A-flat, Op. 29.
Barcarolle in F-sharp, Op. 60.
Berceuse in D-flat, Op. 57.
Studies in F minor, F major, and G-sharp minor, Op. 25, Nos. 2, 3 and 6.
Ballade in G minor, Op. 23,
Waltz in A-flat, Op. 42.
Mazurka in C-sharp minor, Op. 41, No. 1.
Tarentelle in A-flat, Op. 43.

Mr. de Pachmann has played all these numbers here before, so his performance calls for no further comment. The recital was evidently much enjoyed, and the audience repeatedly gave vent to its enthusiasm.

Clipping from Daily Pilot Pa
Date 4/28/90

tieth street.

The Boston Symphony Concert.

Two changes have been made in the original program of the Boston Symphony Concert at the Academy of Music to-night. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns will sing Weber's aria from "Der Freischutz," "Softly Sighs," instead of the scena from Mozart's "Seraglio," and the violins will play Paganini's famous "Moto Perpetuo," which was not at first announced.

[124]

Boston Daily Traveller
MONDAY, APRIL 28, 1890.

Close of the Symphony Concert Season.

A Review of the Events of Mr. Nikisch's Year.

A Sketch of the Orchestra and Some Personal History.

The Spring Tour and its Outlook.

The Week in Boston—Paragraphs and Comment.

The ninth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra closed with the concert of last Saturday evening, when this programme was performed:

BEETHOVEN.	OVERTURE. "Leonore," No. 3.
BEETHOVEN.	SYMPHONY No. 4, in B flat.
PAGANINI.	MOTO PERPETUO, Allegro de Concert. Played by 32 violins.
WAGNER.	PRELUDE, "Die Meistersinger."

The performance of this programme was in every way noteworthy, the Beethoven numbers being given with a classicity worthy of Reinecke. The beautiful "Lenore" overture, and the sweet-tempered Fourth symphony were played with absolute regard for the expression marks indicated by the composer, and with a tonal beauty altogether grateful. Exception might be taken only to the slow adagios in both overture and symphony. Mr. Nikisch ended his season as he began it—by a performance of the "Meistersinger" prelude. No more poetic reading of Wagner could be asked than Mr. Nikisch gave; in short, the closing number of the twenty-four concerts was in many respects the finest played. The extraordinary exhibition of virtuosity by the violins of the orchestra in performing Paganini's "Perpetual Motion," a piece in very rapid tempo, written for a single instrument, is partial justification for the introduction of such a piece of pronounced sensationalism; for the 32 players were as if guided by one arm, so exquisite was their unison, so perfect their observance of the nuances, and so subtle the shades of expression revealed. The tone, too, was delicious, of power full and ample in the climaxes, and in the diminuendi of faintest sound. There is scarce another body of orchestral players, certainly not in this country, who would dare to attempt such a feat. But, notwithstandiug the wonderful performance and the effect upon the audience was electrical, we deplore the presence of this sort of thing in a dignified programme, and to introduce it at the final concert of the ccurse, gave it a prominence catculated to warp one's estimate of the entire season. As we have intimated the audience vociferously applauded the performance, but Mr. Nikisch very wisely did not permit a repetition, although at Friday's rehearsal he did succomb. There has been prepared an orchestral accompaniment to the piece, but the performances in question were given with accompaniment of pianoforte, played by Mr. Nikisch. Mr. Nikisch was greeted with long-continued applause as he came to the desk to conduct Saturday's concert; after each number there was much enthusiasm, (and a lovely floral tribute was handed him after the overture), and at the close of the concert the audience stood and for many minutes the applause was continued. It was a hearty and sincere expression of enthusiasm, and Mr. Nikisch has every reason to be proud of his Auf Wiedersheim. We defer until next week a summing up of the artistic results of the season.

From the summary of works performed published in the analytical programme of the twenty-fourth concert, we extract the following:

Number of compositions, excluding selections by soloists, 69, divided as follows: German 52, modern French 1, classic French 2, Russian 2, Bohemian 1, Danish 3, English 3, American 5. Of these the following were played for the first time in Boston: Borodin, Symphony No. 1, in B flat; Bird, Arthur, two episodes for orchestra; Foote, Suite for String orchestra, No. 2, D major, op 21 (new); Floersheim, Scherzo; Goldmark, Overture, "Spring"; Haydn, Symphony "L'Ours"; MacDowell, Symphonic, Poem, "Launcelot and Elaine"; Raff, Symphony, "In the Fatherland"; Stanford, Symphony, "The Irish"; Tschaikowsky, Overture-Fantasie, "Romeo and Juliet"; Weld, Dramatic Suite, "Italia." The American compositions performed were by Bird, Foote, Floersheim, MacDowell and Weld, all for the first time at these concerts.

The soloists were: Pianists—Mr. Carl Baermann (Beethoven's E flat concerto); Mrs. Bloomfield-Zeisler (Litolff's "Nationale Hollandaise" concerto), Rafael Joseffy (Liszt's second, A flat, concerto); Carl Faelten (Louis Maas's, concerto in C minor); Mme. Steiniger-Clark (Schumann's concerto); Miss Aus der Ohe (Rubinstein's, G major concerto). Violinists—Mr. Franz Kneisel (Brahms's concerto); C. M. Loeffler (Symphonie Espagnole, Lalo); T. Adamowski (Saint-Saëns's third, B minor concerto); Otto Roth (Vieux temps' fifth concerto, in A minor). Violoncelists—Anton Hekking (two movements from Goltermann's A minor concerto), Leo Schultz (Bruch's "Kol Nidrei," and Eckert, concerto in A minor). Singers—Miss Gertrude Franklin, Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, sopranos; Miss Gertrude Edmands, Mrs. W. C. Wyman, contraltos; tenor, Mr. W. J. Winch; bass, Mr. Emil Fischer. The following soloists introduced novelties: Mr. Kneisel, Mr. Adamowski, Mr. Schultz (two).

The management give out the following regarding the attendance during the season:

Attendance at 24 rehearsals, at 25 cents each	20,985
508 Season (Rehearsal) tickets, at $7.50, or 31¼ cents each	12,192
974 Season (Concert) tickets, at $7.50, or 31¼ cents each	27,376
Attendance at Evening concerts on Admission tickets, at 50 cents each	3,697
Total attendance, at an expense of 50 cents or less	60,250
To this amount add number of higher-priced ($12.50) tickets for both concerts and rehearsals, 1423x48	68,304
Total attendance regular performances	128,554
Add attendance at three Afternoon Young People's Concerts	6,900
Total attendance at concerts by Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston	135,454

This is an extraordinary showing, and one entirely unparalleled in this or any other country.

Tonight in Philadelphia the fourth annual tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be begun. No trip of equal extent has ever been undertaken by the organization. The soloists, not including members of the orchestra, who will appear en route, are Mme. Steinbach Jahns, soprano, and Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield Zersler, pianist. The following members of the orchestra will be heard: Mr. Kneisel, Mr. Adamowski, Mr. Loeffler, Mr. Hekking, Mr. Schultz, Mr. Mole. The itinerary is as follows: Monday evening, April 28, final concert in series of five. The following night a similar series in Baltimore will be closed. Two concerts in Washington follow, the first by the orchestra alone, closing a series of five, the second with the Washington Choral Society, when Dudley Buck's "Light of Asia" will be given. On Friday and Saturday, May 2 and 3, the orchestra will make its first appearance in Richmond, Va., under the auspices of the Mozart Association. At Columbus, O., will be given a single performance on Monday evening, May 5, under the auspices of the Orpheus Club. At Cincinnati two concerts, on Tuesday and Wednesday, and a single concert in Louisville, Ky., on Thursday, May 8, follows. Two concerts will be given in St. Louis on Friday and Saturday, May 9 and 10, and one at Minneapolis on Monday evening, May 12. On Tuesday, May 13, the orchestra makes its debut in St. Paul, and then at Chicago a single concert will be given in Central Music Hall on Wednesday evening, May 14. From Chicago to Milwaukee for a concert under the auspices of the Arion Club. The next is at Ann Arbor, Mich., where the University Musical Society undertakes the concert on Friday, May 16. On Saturday evening, May 17, a single concert will be given in Detroit, and directly after the concert the orchestra goes by steamer across Lake Erie to Cleveland, then on to Pittsburg for two concerts in connection with the Mozart Club, Monday and Tuesday, May 19 and 20, presenting on the second night Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise." From Pittsburg back to Cleveland for one concert on Wednesday evening, May 21. Buffalo has a concert on Thursday, the 22d, and Albany on Friday, the 23d, the orchestra reaching Boston again on Saturday, May 24. Both Mr. Ellis, the manager, and Mr. F. R. Comee, the deputy manager, are to travel with the orchestra, Mr. Comee going as its particular courier and charge d'affairs.

Personnel of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, season of 1889-90 (see cut on page five of this issue):

Conductor—Mr. Arthur Nikisch (first season).

First violins—Franz Kneisel, leader (fifth season), C. M. Loeffler, T. Adamowski, Svecenski, Roth, Mullaly, Moldauer, Kuntz, Gantzberg, Human, Fiedler, Winternitz, Kuehn, Mahn, Delisle, Krafft.

Second violins—Akeroyd, Fiumara Swornssbourne, Marble, Schuchmann, J. Kneisel, Tischer-Zeitz, Hannemann, Korth, Eichler, Goldstein, Michael, Eichler, Kneer.

Violas—H. Heindl, Zach, Rietzel, Grünberg, Kluge, Hoyer, Patz, Taubert, Kolster, Post, Knecht.

Violoncellos—Hekking, Schultz, J. Adamowski, Mingels, Loeffler, G. Campanari, Reibl, Korth, A. Heindl.

Basses—Goldstein, Green, Jennewein, Gerhardt, Barth, Bareither, Reinhart, Butler.

Piccolo—Fox.
Flutes—Molé, E. M. Heindl.
Oboes—Sautet, Demuth.
English horn—Muller.
Clarinets—Goldschmidt, Metzger,
Bassoons—Gunzel, Dietsch.
Horns—J. Reiter (successor to X. Reiter), Schneider, Schormann, Schumann.
Trumpets—P. Muller, Lafricain.
Trombones—Hampe, Behr, Stewart.
Tuba—Golde.
Harp—Schuecker.
Tympani—Simpson.
Great drum—Moore.
Librarian—W. C. Nichols.

We are tempted to write a few lines of personal biography regarding the orchestra, but as the plan was not premeditated, and is entirely an affair of the memory, we must be pardoned if all the talented people of the band are not named, or the artistic pedigree of those who are is not completely stated. We also hope that discussion among members will arise concerning the length of individual sketches.

Mr. Kneisel succeeded Mr. Listemann as violin leader at the beginning of Mr. Gericke's second term. He is a graduate of the Vienna Conservatory, and had had experience in orchestral and solo work before coming to Boston. As leader of the Kneisel quartet, he is quite as well known in the East as in the West he is known as concertmeister and soloist. Mr. Kneisel married the daughter of a Viennese violin maker, herself a player of good parts. Mr. Loeffler has been with the orchestra since its organization; he is French-taught, and has the faculty extremely well developed of knowing exactly what he can play best; next season Mr. Loeffler will be known both as composer and violinist. Mr. Adamowski's coming to Boston antedates the formation of the orchestra; he is a Pole, and a very musical one; two years since he organized the string quartet that bears his name, which already has a reputation more than local; Mr. Adamowski is progressive, and has played several concertos for the first time in Boston. Mr. Svecenski is the best viola quartet player belonging in Boston; he came from Vienna with Mr. Kneisel, likewise Mr. Fiedler; both were original members of the Kneisel Quartet, Mr. Fiedler being succeeded two years ago by Mr. Roth. Mr. Roth is of Vienese extraction. We have an impression that he ran away from a military school, so ardent was his love for music, so determined his hatred of geometry and the theory of fortifications; at any rate, should he sail on the Trave May 28, he might be confronted by an embassy from the Austrian king, and the fate of the baritone, Blume, be his. Mr. Roth plays well. Mr Mullaly is a link to the old days of the Harvard Musical Association; he is not an old man, though a very accomplished musician; he is sometimes known as the High Priest of the orchestra. Mr. Kuntz has grown up in Boston orchestras and is always equal to the task assigned him. Mr. Kuntz and the spectacled young man at his left, Mr. Moldauer, are members of the Adamowski Quartet, Mr. Kuntz playing the "tenor." Mr. Mahn is related to Carl Zerahn; this is especially noticeable when he stands up.

The Akeroyds have done honorable service in Boston; the present second violin leader of the orchestra is a capital chef. Mr. Swornssbourne, apart from his duties in the orchestra, fills a position of sanitary importance in Boston; at one of the hotels he leads a small orchestra during the dinner hour. Mr. Kneisel is, of course, related to his brother. Mr. Eichler, Mr. J. E. Eichler, (both are J. E.,) is a survivor of the old days, and is in every way a relic to be proud of; in the Germania brass band he is, may be, was, a familiar figure; and probably he has played waltzes at the debut of more pretty maids than any other veteran fiddler of Boston. Mr. Fiumara is as rotund and jolly as is the likeness of him printed above; he is a man of gencological tastes.

Henry Heindl and his brother Alex are just as young as they used to be—years ago, when the smaller cities of the State had "Conventions," and Mrs. Houston-West, W. J. and J. F. Winch, used to go in their company for the delectation of the budding tenors and basses of Lowell and Lawrence. Mr. Zach is a versatile man, can orchestrate a polka, pen a lyric, or compel the attention of an audience by his pianoforte accompaniments. Mr. Rietzel is an "old timer;" when he plays the piccolo it is his merry eye and bobbing head which set the rhythm. Mr. Rietzel is a good conductor and composer of popular music for orchestra. Mr. Grünberg, we believe, was once a divinity student; to be a viola player is no trifling matter, though as a vocation, it is a little less than serious.

Mr. Hekking is the admirable 'cello player of the Kneisel Quartet, as well as first 'cello of the orchestra. His dark-haired desk-mate, Mr. Schultz, is perhaps the most energetic player in the band; a good general musician, too; Mr. Schultz came from Leipzig with Mr. Nikisch. Mr. J. Adamowski has been in the orchestra one year, and one year in the quartet which his brother leads; for both positions he is eminently qualified. Messrs. Mingels, Loeffler, and Campanari are efficient chamber players, while the last named sings in a baritone voice. The solemn Mr. Goldstein, whose position is so near the statue of Mr. Beethoven, is one of the two legitimate successors of Bottisini; the other is his blonde associate, Henry Green. Mr. Green is a utility man; he can play the tympani, and really earn the large salary Mr. Simpson, his successor in the orchestra, now draws (and earns); Mr. Green plays the small drum in a manner to empty all the schoolhouses on the route of every public procession to which he happens to be attached; Mr. Green and the quarter of twelve stroke on the bells of Boston (signal for one session of the schools) are synonymous terms. Mr. Jennewein is known as a wit, he says so little; but as a copyist he is a man of deeds.

Now we come to the wind; strange though it be, all are modest men Mr. Fox, whose ability to top a climax is second to none, is no new comer; we all know him and his worth, likewise Mr. Heindl, whose smooth tone is by no means forgotten in the shadow of the brilliant voice of his urbane companion, M. Molé, whose smile is as winsome as his phrasing is masterly. Mr. Sautet could not be spared to go back to Paris even if the great M. Carnot should offer to return to us in his stead. Messrs. Eames and Sanders II. These well-matched gentlemen—blonde and brunette—are the "humorists" of the orchestra; Messrs. Gunzel and Dietsch are at all times so sedate as to make the statement a paradoxical one. The four hornists form a noble group. Mr. Muller has a trumpet tone of sweetness and strength, which adjectives can be applied to express the disposition of his associate, whose trumpetry is the result of hard study. The trombones are each and all geniuses; under Mr. Gericke their scope was somewhat circumscribed, but this season there is no denying their vigorous and masterful performances; Mr. Stewart is to be the next city bandmaster—that is when this stupid city of ours adopts the proper course towards open-air concerts; until then Mr. Stewart is satisfied with his study of languages and the activity which a busy musician experiences. Mr. Golde plays one of the goldiest instruments of the brass family, from whose throat the theme of the Pilgrims in "Tannhäuser" or the "Walhael" motif of the "Nibelungen," come with equal beauty and richness. Mr. Simpson never had such a year as the one that is passed; the tympani player, always an autocrat, has been elevated by Mr. Nikisch, to the rank of soloist, and Mr. Simpson has appreciated the situation and not abused his instrument. If any of our readers think the tympani easy of performance, that it is only a simple thud, thud, tonic, dominant thud-d-d-d-d-d—etc., let them stand behind Mr. Simpson during a modern symphony and note all the intricacies of "tuning." The tympani player deserves to rank with the ice man and the plumber in the "blue book" of the unimpoverished men of toil. Mr. Schuecker is the youngest player in the orchestra, a mere youth in point of age; but no son of Miriam ere played as he.

Mr. Nichols deserves a paragraph all by himself. It is not in a spirit of irreverence that we call him "Nichols." Since he played in the old Germania Orchestra for the parties our mothers and our sisters gave, has not "Nichols" been a household word? Who so well as he at triangle or xylophone, or bass drum or cymbals startles the timid or defies the ff marks? Who but "Nichols" disappoints us all in not pitching the pianoforte off the platform, as he trundles it along, with giant strength, to a place in the centre of orchestra? None so brave, so knowing, so witty, as "Nichols." May the first sign of old age find him still in the shadow of Beethoven on symphony nights in Boston!

BOSTON HERALD.
TUESDAY, APRIL 29, 1890.

THE DE PACHMANN RECITALS.

It is seldom that the Boston musical public is so thoroughly stirred from its habitual tranquility as it has been by Vladimir de Pachmann, the Russian pianist, whose recent cyclus of Chopin recitals created so much comment in musical circles. He returned to this city yesterday, and gave one more audience to his admirers in Chickering Hall, playing a programme including many of the brilliant successes of his earlier appearances. He was greeted by an audience which filled all available seats, and he charmed all who heard him quite as successfully as in his former appearances. He is an artist whose personality enters into all that he does, and as this personality is admirably in keeping with the compositions he has played here, it is not surprising that he has won his Boston audiences, one and all, and gained here the same appreciation of his gifts that continental Europe has accorded him for many years. Mme. de Pachmann, also an eminent pianist, is to give a single recital in this city at the same hall tomorrow afternoon, appearing in a brilliantly varied programme of piano music.

Boston Daily Globe.
TUESDAY, APRIL 29.

CHOPIN SUPERBLY PLAYED.

Vladimir de Pachmann Gives His Final Recital in Chickering Hall.

Vladimir de Pachmann gave another of his delightful Chopin piano recitals in Chickering Hall yesterday afternoon. The audience, which crowded the hall to its capacity, was unrestrained in enthusiasm, and insisted upon more than one encore. The programme was made up of selections heard at Mr. Pachmann's previous recitals here, and included the fantaisie, op. 49; impromptu, op. 29; barcarole, op. 60; berceuse, op. 57; three etudes, 2, 3 and 6, op. 25; ballade, op. 23; waltz op. 42; mazourka, op. 41, and tarantelle, op. 43.

The announcement that this was his last Chopin recital was regretted by many. It is not improbable, however, that he will soon be heard in a miscellaneous programme.

Wednesday afternoon Mme. Marguerite de Pachmann, whose playing has been warmly commended in New York, will make her first appearance here. The programme announced consists of selections from Schubert, Mendelssohn, Rubinstein, Heuselt, Chopin, Marguerite de Pachmann, Liszt and Saint-Saens.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.
TUESDAY MORNING, APRIL 29, 1890.

THE DE PACHMANN RECITAL.

The announcement of another and final recital of Chopin's music by Vladimir de Pachmann was sufficient to tax the capacity of Chickering Hall yesterday afternoon with an audience whose quality and enthusiasm showed plainly the impression made by the distinguished pianist on his former appearances. The programme was made up mainly of selections from the former series of recitals, and therefore calls for no extended review. There was the same wonderful technique, the same indefinable fascination of touch, and the same almost impossible production of a "singing" pianissimo. The great etude, op. 25, was given with all the defiance of technical difficulties that characterized it before. The ballade in B flat was another exhibition of great power and dignity, while the daintier element of the recital was beautifully represented by the berceuse, op. 57.

Boston Journal.
MORNING EDITION.
TUESDAY MORNING, APRIL 29, 1890.

The De Pachmann Concerts.

The series of Chopin recitals recently given by Mr. Vladimir de Pachmann, created such enthusiasm among the critics and musicians of this city that arrangements were made to give an additional recital in Chickering Hall yesterday afternoon. The hall was filled to its utmost, and when the performer made his appearance he was given a most hearty welcome. His programme was a very attractive one, and he again delighted and amazed his audience by his marvelous performances. We have heard many fine pianists this winter, but Mr. de Pachmann's playing has an indescribable charm, which, added to his wonderfully clear and fluent technique, places him at the head in this style of music. The etude in thirds, op. 25, No. 6, was applauded to the echo, as at the former recitals, and he reposted it in his inimitable song, which will long be remembered by those who were fortunate enough to hear it. His playing has indeed been both a pleasure and an education to the music-loving public. Madame Marguerite de Pachmann, his wife, will give a miscellaneous recital in Chickering Hall on Wednesday next, which will be awaited with much interest.

Boston Post
TUESDAY MORNING, APRIL 29, 1890.

MR. VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN'S RECITAL.

The extraordinary success of the three recent Pachmann recitals caused a lively desire among our musical public to hear him again, and in response to this very marked wish he returned and gave still another Chopin recital yesterday afternoon. There was a very large audience; in fact, the hall was completely filled, and it was for a Boston audience unusually enthusiastic. His programme was a selection of those works which had proved most successful in his former recitals, and he repeated the remarkable performances of the G minor ballade, the very difficult study in thirds, and the barcarole—all of which he played, if possible, even more beautifully than before. As has been said before in these columns, technical difficulties do not exist for him, and his extraordinary ability for understanding all the moods and caprices of Chopin's imaginative and varied character is more clearly shown in each concert. In short, it suffices to say that M. de Pachmann is in every sense of the word a great pianist, and his warm, sympathetic and deeply artistic readings of the mysterious works of the great Polish master have been not only a great pleasure to the public at large, but a liberal education to our local musicians.

ARTHUR WELD.

Boston Evening Transcript.
TUESDAY, APRIL 29, 1890.

MR. DE PACHMANN'S RECITAL.

Mr. Vladimir de Pachmann gave his extra Chopin recital in Chickering Hall yesterday afternoon, before a very large audience. The programme was:

Fantasie in F minor, Op. 49.
Impromptu in A-flat, Op. 29.
Barcarolle in F-sharp, Op. 60.
Berceuse in D-flat, Op. 57,
Studies in F minor, F major, and G-sharp minor, Op. 25, Nos. 2, 3 and 6.
Ballade in G minor, Op, 23,
Waltz in A-flat, Op. 42.
Mazurka in C-sharp minor, Op. 41, No. 1.
Tarentelle in A-flat, Op. 43.

Mr. de Pachmann has played all these numbers here before, so his performance calls for no further comment. The recital was evidently much enjoyed, and the audience repeatedly gave vent to its enthusiasm.

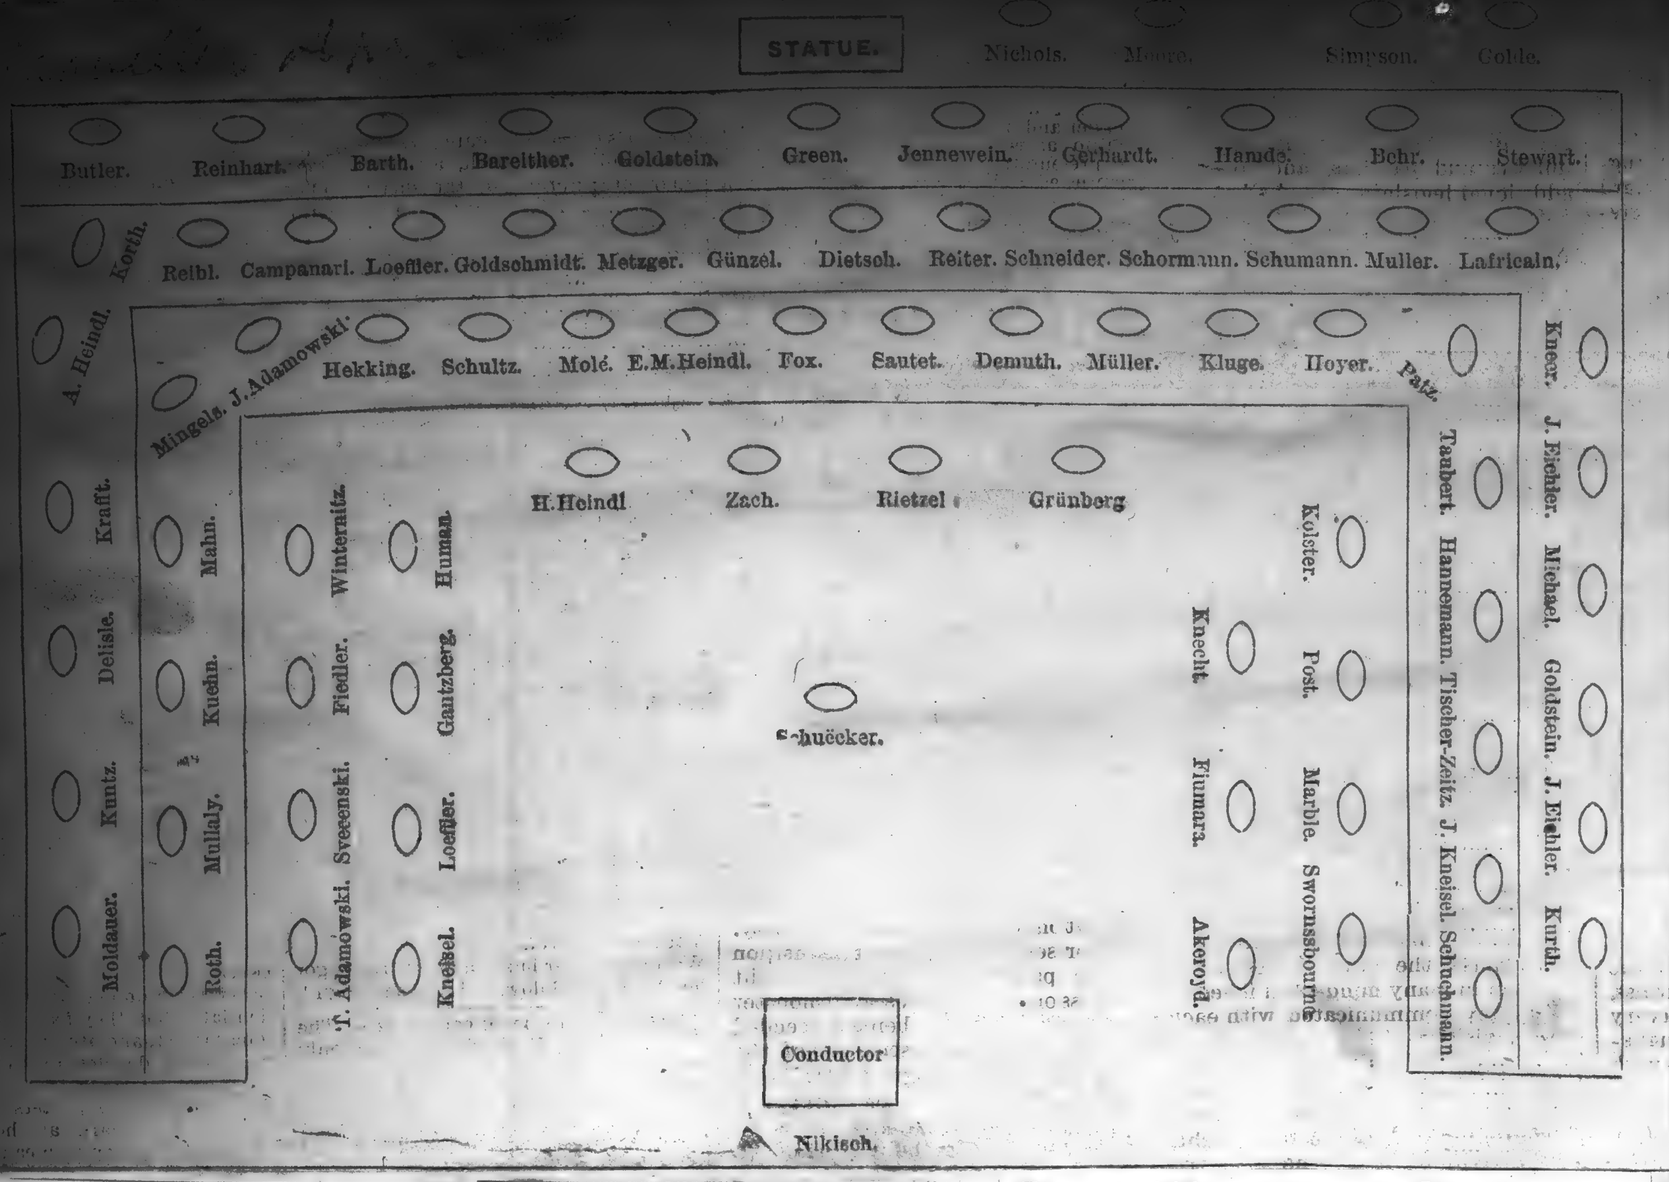
Clipping from Herald
Post
Date 28

tieth street.

The Boston Symphony Concert.

Two changes have been made in the original program of the Boston Symphony Concert at the Academy of Music to-night. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns will sing Weber's aria from "Der Freischutz," "Softly Sighs," instead of the scena from Mozart's "Seraglio," and the violins will play Paganini's famous "Moto Perpetuo," which was not at first announced.

[124]



The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 3, 1890.

THE PACHMANN RECITALS.

On Monday afternoon M. De Pachmann played to a very large audience at Chickering's, the programme being drawn exclusively from Chopin, and several of the morceaux in which his taste, talent and technique have been most gratifyingly obvious were repeated. The impression left served only to heighten the good opinion already established by his previous concerts, and he was received with great enthusiasm and dismissed with much regret. On Wednesday afternoon Mme. De Pachmann, of whose sympathetic and beautiful personality something was said here last week, made her début, and gave her hearers an afternoon of unalloyed delight. She far exceeded all expectation and was at once accepted as a pianist of rare merit in every sense of the word. Her technique is scarcely less marvellous in its fineness, its certainty and its full but suave strength than that of her husband; she gives her music with such freedom from the trammels alike of memory and of the key board, that she seems to be improvising, while a delicate feminine tact or intuition instructs her so to modify its use that each author in turn is read according to his true style. It cannot be claimed for her that she is profound or ardent in emotion; but where all is so exquisitely shaped, such clear intellectuality exists, such purity of meaning conveyed and such true feeling indicated, it would be unreasonable to ask for that greater passion which might overwhelm and blot out some other elements which could not so well be spared. The programme—barring the inherent dryness of Schubert's opus 78 sonata—all gave delicious pleasure to judgment and to sentiment, and the audience were almost unbounded in their expressions of gratification and surprise.

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, MAY 4, 1890.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA'S TOUR.

The first week of the fourth annual tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has ended, six concerts having been given in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and Richmond, Va., and all with remarkable success. Mr. Nikisch has repeated his triumphs in Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and in Richmond, the first appearance of the Boston orchestra in this section of the country, created the greatest enthusiasm on Friday and Saturday evenings. There is an interesting history to the concerts by this orchestra in Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington which is worth the telling, especially as it may induce public spirited citizens in other localities to bestir themselves to secure the results gained in these cities. It is due to Messrs. Burditt and North of Boston to say that their intelligent, persistent and public spirited work as managers has gained the Boston orchestra its present standing in these three cities. In each of these centres of population they found, when they assumed the responsibility of the Boston symphony concerts in the several cities named, a general apathy concerning orchestral music. They immediately began to awaken and concentrate the individual demand for a series of first-class orchestral concerts, and, during the season of the last week, their labors have been crowned by the fullest measure of success. The work of Messrs. Burditt and North has been the means of establishing the Boston Symphony concerts on a sure foundation in these cities named as they enjoy in Boston. Mr. Nikisch has given some very [illegible] during the week, and [illegible] the soprano soloist [illegible] general favor where-[illegible]

THE BOSTON TIMES

BOSTON, SUNDAY, MAY 4, 1890.

MR. AND MRS. DE PACHMANN'S RECITALS.

Two interesting pianoforte recitals have been given in Chickering hall this week, one by Mr. De Pachmann on Monday afternoon, and the other by Mrs. De Pachmann on Wednesday afternoon. At the first recital the programme was:

Fantaisie op. 49 }
Impromptu op. 29 }
Barcarole op. 60 }
Berceuse op. 57 }
Etudes op. 25 Nos. 2, 3, 6 } Chopin
Ballade op. 23 }
Valse op. 42 }
Mazourka op. 41 }
Tarantelle op. 43 }

Mrs. De Pachmann played on Wednesday as follows:

Fantaisie Sonate, Opus 78 ..... Schubert
Variations Serieuses ..... Mendelssohn
Barcarole No. 4 ..... Rubinstein
"St oiseau j'etais" ..... Henselt
a. Three Etudes, Opus 25, Nos. 6 and 8, Opus 10, No. 5 } Chopin
b. Andante spianato and grand polonaise ..... }
"Reverie du lac" ..... Marguerite de Pachmann
"Waldesrauchen" ..... Liszt
Etude "en forme de valse" ..... Saint Saens

The first programme was but an epitome of Mr. De Pachmann's initial set of recitials in this city and was played with much the same charm, piquancy and artistic finish. As a piano singer Mr. De Pachmann has probably not his equal. To him and to such as hear him perform, the piano is a singing instrument, and one forgets for the time being its somewhat unsavory reputation as an instrument of percussion. Mrs. De Pachmann has evidently been a very faithful pupil of her husband, for she plays in very much the same manner so far as quality of touch and technique are concerned. In other respects she is even broader, not so gifted perhaps, but more even and reliable. To say that she was fully equal to the exacting requirements of the Schubert sonata is perhaps the worthiest compliment that one can bestow. Both concerts were attended by very large audiences.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 10, 1890.

THE DE PACHMANN FAREWELL.

One last concert by Mr. and Mrs. De Pachmann is announced for Thursday afternoon next, the place being Chickering Hall, where their previous programmes have been played. The selections for this matinee are these: Mr. De Pachmann will play, for the first time in Boston, Chopin's "Nocturne," opus 37, No. 2; "Etudes," opus 10, No. 3, and opus 25, No. 1; "Mazurka," opus 59, No. 2; and "Valse Brillante," opus 34, No. 3; also Chopin's "Ballade," opus 38; "Fantaisie Impromptu," opus 66; "Scherzo," opus 31; "Nocturne," opus 55, No. 1; and "Polonaise," opus 50. Mme. De Pachmann's numbers are "Danklied nach Sturm," Henselt; "Si Oiseau J'etais," Liszt; "Impromptu," No. 4, Schubert; and "Rigaudon," Raff. But, indeed, this matters comparatively little, because, although in some selections the virtuosity or the idiosyncracies of the artists may be more quickly apparent than in others, they can take up nothing in which they will not give rare, fresh and peculiar pleasure. It has been a long time since any visiting pianists have used the instrument so genially and expressively and have so successfully concealed its usually obtrusive individuality under the music evoked from it, and now that they must return to Europe, their departure will leave many regrets.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 30, 1890.

——Last Sunday evening the Boston Symphony Orchestra, seventy performers, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, conductor, accompanied by Mrs. Steinbach-Jahns, dramatic soprano from the Leipsic Opera House, started via the Fall River line on their Western tournée. Monday evening the final concert in the series of five given at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, was the initial concert of the trip. Last night a similar series in Baltimore was to be closed. Then come two concerts in Washington—the first by the orchestra alone, closing a series of five, the second with the Washington Choral Society, when Dudley Buck's "Light of Asia" will be given. On Friday and Saturday, May 2 and 3, the orchestra will make its first appearance in Richmond, Va., under the auspices of the Mozart Association. Then comes a long jump to Columbus, Ohio, where the orchestra gives a single performance on Monday evening May 5, under the auspices of the Orpheus Club, the leading vocal organization of the city. From Columbus, the orchestra goes to Cincinnati, giving two concerts on Tuesday and Wednesday. A single concert in Louisville, Ky., on Thursday, May 8, under the management of Daniel Quilp, in his beautiful amphitheatre auditorium, will be one of the musical events of the season in a city always quick to recognize and appreciate standard organizations. Then follow two concerts in the Grand Music Hall, St. Louis, on Friday and Saturday, May 9 and 10. Directly after the concert on Saturday, a special train of three sleeping cars will convey the orchestra to Minneapolis for one concert, on Monday evening, May 12, in the University Coliseum, under the management of Mr. Louis Miller, to whom is due the credit of introducing this famous organization to Minneapolis. On Tuesday, May 13, the orchestra makes its début in St. Paul, under the direction of Mr. E. C. Murdock, manager of the Star Course and associated with nearly every first-class organization visiting St. Paul. A special train will take the orchestra from St. Paul to Chicago, where but a single concert will be given in Central Music Hall, on Wednesday evening, May 14. From Chicago the organization goes to Milwaukee for a concert under the auspices of the Arion Club, with which society the orchestra appeared last season. The next objective point is Ann Arbor, Mich., where the University Musical Society undertakes the concert on Friday, May 16, as a grand finale to a series of four entertainments under the personal direction of Prof. A. A. Stanley. On Saturday evening, May 17, a single concert will be given in Detroit; and directly after the concert the orchestra goes by steamer across Lake Erie to Cleveland, then on to Pittsburgh for two concerts in connection with the Mozart Club, Monday and Tuesday, May 19 and 20, presenting on the second night Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise." From Pittsburgh back to Cleveland for one concert on Wednesday evening, May 21, under the management of Mr. N. Coe Stewart, director of music in the public schools. Buffalo has a concert on Thursday the 22d, and Albany on Friday the 23d.

Boston Evening Transcript.

THURSDAY, MAY 1, 1890.

THEATRES AND CONCERTS.

[See Page Six.]

MADAME DE PACHMANN'S RECITAL.

Mme. Marguerite de Pachmann gave a pianoforte recital in Chickering Hall yesterday afternoon, the programme being as follows:

Fantasie-Sonata in G, Op. 78 ..... Schubert.
Variations Sérieuses in D minor, Op. 54 .. Mendelssohn
Barcarolle No. 4 ..... Rubinstein
Study: "Si oiseau j'étais ..... Rubinstein
Studies: Op. 25, Nos. 6 and 8; op. 10, No. 5 .... Chopin
Andante spianato and Polonaise in E-flat, Op. 22 ..... Chopin
Réverie du Lac ..... Chopin
Study: "Waldesrauschen" ..... Marguerite de Pachmann
Study in Waltz-form ..... Liszt
Mme. de Pachmann came, played and conquered. One needed to hear only the first few measures of the Schubert sonata to have one's attention caught by something exceedingly rare nowadays; by perfectly simple, straightforward, dignified playing, rhythmically clear and distinct, neither stiffened by coldness nor warped by artificial warmth. At first it seemed almost too good to be true, and one waited to find the spell broken by some fashionable extravagance, some shade of false feeling, some elegant niaiserie. But no, Mme. de Pachmann went on as she had begun, simply, purely and musically. Best of all, she showed soon enough that this refined and dignified simplicity of style was no mere chance fad of hers, no hard-and-fast method of performance to which she had committed herself, through thick and thin—say, for the purpose of accentuating a contrast between herself and other players. That it was entirely genuine, the result of both musical instinct and culture, and a fine sense of artistic fitness was shown by the perfectly natural, unforced way in which she would abandon it now and then, just at the points where the music needed a dash or added spice to bring out its true flavor, and save it from monotony. She showed that, where needful, she knew how to "make play" with the phrase, and animate the rhythm as well as any one. To take one instance from among several, one seldom hears the last movement in the Schubert sonata played as she played it, so as to hold the attention fast from beginning to end, with so much variety, and yet wholly without extravagance or anything that smacked of the musically unworthy.

As she worked her way farther and farther down the list, and the character of the music changed from classic purity of form and feeling to the most sophisticated extravagance of modern highly-spiced musical cookery—as in the Liszt "Waldesrauschen," and the Saint-Saëns Waltz-study—her style of playing kept pace with the music, humoring it to the top of its bent in all sorts of fantastic, brilliant and ear-catching effects, yet never losing a certain refinement and modesty that made it doubly charming.

Her technique, too, which even at the beginning of the programme could be recognized as highly finished and adequate, showed itself later on to be positively astounding. She plays the G-sharp minor study by Chopin even more rapidly than her husband, and, if not with quite the pungent chic that he does, with decidedly superior rhythmic clearness. What she did in the way of smoothly flowing scales with interchanging hands, rapid thirds and octaves in the Saint-Saëns piece well-nigh beggars description. Her use of the pedal, too, is masterly, and the tone she draws from the instrument invariably beautiful in all its gradations from pianissimo to fortissimo.

She has, it is true, one or two tricks, and also some limitations. On her perhaps a little excessive fondness for pianissimo playing we would not insist, for she overdoes it, upon the whole, less than most pianists today who can do that sort of thing. She has a way of repeating the "expressive note" in a phrase of cantilena, sometimes three or four times, instead of simply holding it, which is not in the best taste. We cannot say that we found in her any evidence of great depth of feeling or intensity of passion; she does not scale enormous heights nor sound great depths of emotion. But, as far as it goes, her feeling seems thoroughly genuine, as it is always essentially musical; and she has a firmness of artistic instinct which enables her to draw very sharp and just distinctions between sensibility, thoughtfulness and passion; between various qualities of emotion, and she almost invariably touches the right chord. Her innate refinement of perception, and, as a result thereof, her keen perception of and sympathy with refinement, are conspicuous. In a word, we have seldom heard a pianist whose playing we so thoroughly enjoyed.

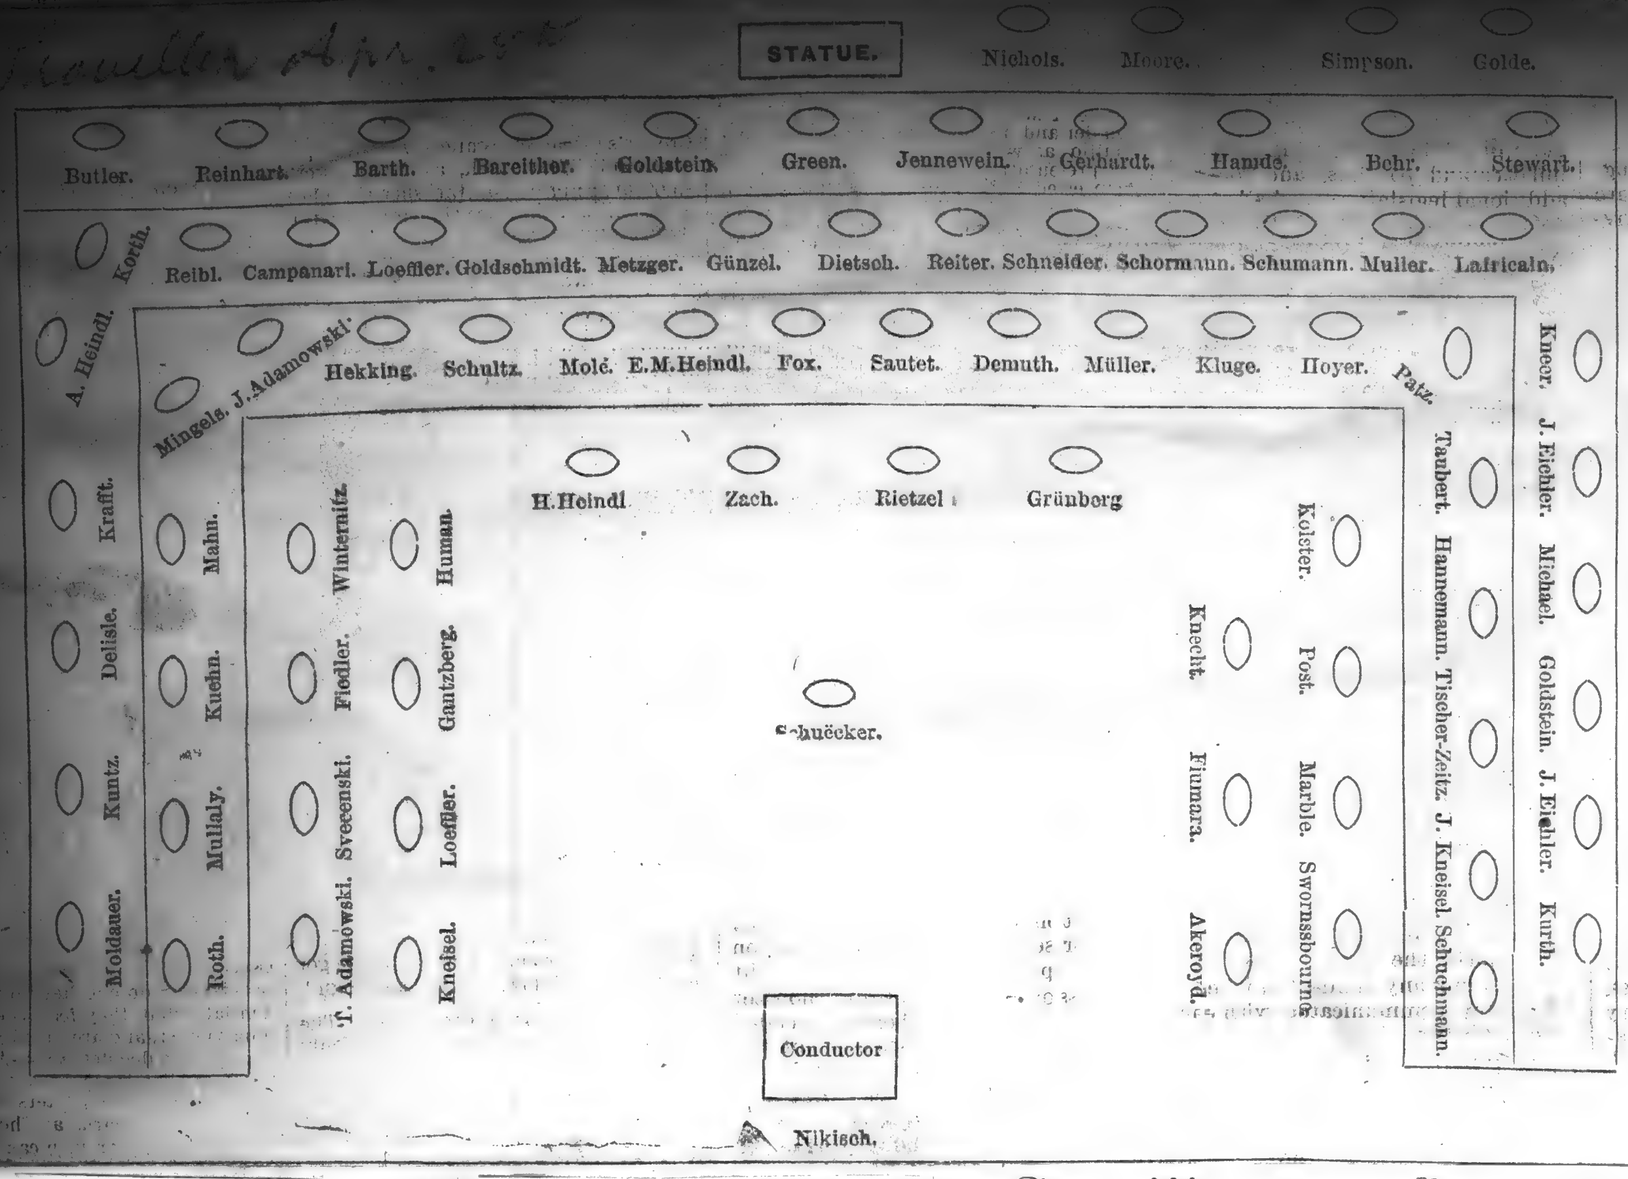
Boston Daily Traveller

THURSDAY, MAY 1, 1890.

Mme. de Pachmann.

Yesterday afternoon in Chickering Hall, Mme. de Pachmann played the following programme: Sonata, op. 78, Schubert; serious variations, op. 54, Mendelssohn; fourth barcarole, Rubinstein; "Were I a Bird," Henselt; Three studies, op. 25, Nos. 6 and 8, op. 10, No. 5, andante spianate and polonaise, Chopin; "Reverie du lac," original; "Waldesrauchen," Liszt; study in a form of a waltz, Saint-Saëns. As Miss Oakey, Mme. de Pachmann was much admired in London; now that she is the consort of one more famous (perhaps along limited lines) her light is certainly a brilliant one. Even as a Chopin player her work yesterday in point of poetic conception stands well alongside that of her husband. Yet we should say, after a single hearing, that her forte lay in pieces requiring a dextrous manipulation, like the Henselt and Liszt compositions represented above. In general, her playing is admirable in its moderation, unsensational and sincere; technically, her wrist and arm work are admirable. Mme. de Pachmann had a small audience, but a very enthusiastic one.

[125]



The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 3, 1890.

THE PACHMANN RECITALS.

On Monday afternoon M. De Pachmann played to a very large audience at Chickering's, the programme being drawn exclusively from Chopin, and several of the morceaux in which his taste, talent and technique have been most gratifyingly obvious were repeated. The impression left served only to heighten the good opinion already established by his previous concerts, and he was received with great enthusiasm and dismissed with much regret. On Wednesday afternoon Mme. De Pachmann, of whose sympathetic and beautiful personality something was said here last week, made her début, and gave her hearers an afternoon of unalloyed delight. She far exceeded all expectation and was at once accepted as a pianist of rare merit in every sense of the word. Her technique is scarcely less marvellous in its fineness, its certainty and its full but suave strength than that of her husband; she gives her music with such freedom from the trammels alike of memory and of the key board, that she seems to be improvising, while a delicate feminine tact or intuition instructs her so to modify its use that each author in turn is read according to his true style. It cannot be claimed for her that she is profound or ardent in emotion; but where all is so exquisitely shaped, such clear intellectuality exists, such purity of meaning conveyed and such true feeling indicated, it would be unreasonable to ask for that greater passion which might overwhelm and blot out some other elements which could not so well be spared. The programme—barring the inherent dryness of Schubert's opus 78 sonata—all gave delicious pleasure to judgment and to sentiment, and the audience were almost unbounded in their expressions of gratification and surprise.

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, MAY 4, 1890.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA'S TOUR.

The first week of the fourth annual tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has ended, six concerts having been given in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and Richmond, Va., and all with remarkable success. Mr. Nikisch has repeated his triumphs in Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and in Richmond, the first appearance of the Boston orchestra in this section of the country, created the greatest enthusiasm on Friday and Saturday evenings. There is an interesting history to the concerts by this orchestra in Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington which is worth the telling, especially as it may induce public spirited citizens in other localities to bestir themselves to secure the results gained in those cities. It is due to Messrs. Burditt and North of Boston to say that their intelligent, persistent and public spirited work as managers has gained the Boston orchestra its present standing in these three cities. In each of these centres of population they found, when they assumed the responsibility of the Boston symphony concerts in the several cities named, a general apathy concerning orchestral music. They immediately began to awaken and concentrate the individual demand for a series of first-class orchestral concerts, and, during the season ended the last week, their labors have been rewarded by the fullest measure of success. The work of Messrs. Burditt and North has been the result of establishing the Boston Symphony concerts on as sure a foundation in the three cities named as they enjoy in Boston. Mr. Nikisch has given some very brilliant programmes during the week, and Mme. Steinbach Jahns, the soprano soloist [illegible] has found general favor wherever [illegible]

THE BOSTON TIMES

BOSTON, SUNDAY, MAY 4, 1890.

MR. AND MRS. DE PACHMANN'S RECITALS.

Two interesting pianoforte recitals have been given in Chickering hall this week, one by Mr. De Pachmann on Monday afternoon, and the other by Mrs. De Pachmann on Wednesday afternoon. At the first recital the programme was:

Fantaisie op. 49	Chopin
Impromptu op. 29
Barcarole op. 60
Berceuse op. 57
Etudes op. 25 Nos. 2, 3, 6
Ballade op. 23
Valse op. 42
Mazourka op. 41
Tarantelle op. 43

Mrs. De Pachmann played on Wednesday as follows:

Fantaisie Sonate, Opus 78	Schubert
Variations Serieuses	Mendelssohn
Barcarole No. 4	Rubinstein
"St oiseau j'etais"	Henselt
a. Three Etudes, Opus 25, Nos. 6 and 8, Opus 10, No. 5	Chopin
b. Andante spianato and grand polonaise	Chopin
"Reverie du lac"	Marguerite de Pachmann
"Waldesrauchen"	Liszt
Etude "en forme de valse"	Saint Saens

The first programme was but an epitome of Mr. De Pachmann's initial set of recitials in this city and was played with much the same charm, piquancy and artistic finish. As a piano singer Mr. De Pachmann has probably not his equal. To him and to such as hear him perform, the piano is a singing instrument, and one forgets for the time being its somewhat unsavory reputation as an instrument of percussion. Mrs. De Pachmann has evidently been a very faithful pupil of her husband, for she plays in very much the same manner so far as quality of touch and technique are concerned. In other respects she is even broader, not so gifted perhaps, but more even and reliable. To say that she was fully equal to the exacting requirements of the Schubert sonata is perhaps the worthiest compliment that one can bestow. Both concerts were attended by very large audiences.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 10, 1890.

THE DE PACHMANN FAREWELL.

One last concert by Mr. and Mrs. De Pachmann is announced for Thursday afternoon next, the place being Chickering Hall, where their previous programmes have been played. The selections for this matinee are these: Mr. De Pachmann will play, for the first time in Boston, Chopin's "Nocturne," opus 37, No. 2; "Etudes," opus 10, No. 3, and opus 25, No. 1; "Mazurka," opus 59, No. 2; and "Valse Brillante," opus 34, No. 3; also Chopin's "Ballade," opus 38; "Fantaisie Impromptu," opus 66; "Scherzo," opus 31; "Nocturne," opus 55, No. 1; and "Polonaise," opus 50. Mme. De Pachmann's numbers are "Danklied nach Sturm," Henselt; "Si Oiseau J'etais," Liszt; "Impromptu," No. 4, Schubert; and "Rigaudon," Raff. But, indeed, this matters comparatively little, because, although in some selections the virtuosity or the idiosyncracies of the artists may be more quickly apparent than in others, they can take up nothing in which they will not give rare, fresh and peculiar pleasure. It has been a long time since any visiting pianists have used the instrument so genially and expressively and have so successfully concealed its usually obtrusive individuality under the music evoked from it, and now that they must return to Europe, their departure will leave many regrets.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 30, 1890.

——Last Sunday evening the Boston Symphony Orchestra, seventy performers, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, conductor, accompanied by Mrs. Steinbach-Jahns, dramatic soprano from the Leipsic Opera House, started via the Fall River line on their Western tournée. Monday evening the final concert in the series of five given at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, was the initial concert of the trip. Last night a similar series in Baltimore was to be closed. Then come two concerts in Washington—the first by the orchestra alone, closing a series of five, the second with the Washington Choral Society, when Dudley Buck's "Light of Asia" will be given. On Friday and Saturday, May 2 and 3, the orchestra will make its first appearance in Richmond, Va., under the auspices of the Mozart Association. Then comes a long jump to Columbus, Ohio, where the orchestra gives a single performance on Monday evening May 5, under the auspices of the Orpheus Club, the leading vocal organization of the city. From Columbus, the orchestra goes to Cincinnati, giving two concerts on Tuesday and Wednesday. A single concert in Louisville, Ky., on Thursday, May 8, under the management of Daniel Quilp, in his beautiful amphitheatre auditorium, will be one of the musical events of the season in a city always quick to recognize and appreciate standard organizations. Then follow two concerts in the Grand Music Hall, St. Louis, on Friday and Saturday, May 9 and 10. Directly after the concert on Saturday, a special train of three sleeping cars will convey the orchestra to Minneapolis for one concert, on Monday evening, May 12, in the University Coliseum, under the management of Mr. Louis Miller, to whom is due the credit of introducing this famous organization to Minneapolis. On Tuesday, May 13, the orchestra makes its début in St. Paul, under the direction of Mr. E. C. Murdock, manager of the Star Course and associated with nearly every first-class organization visiting St. Paul. A special train will take the orchestra from St. Paul to Chicago, where but a single concert will be given in Central Music Hall, on Wednesday evening, May 14. From Chicago the organization goes to Milwaukee for a concert under the auspices of the Arion Club, with which society the orchestra appeared last season. The next objective point is Ann Arbor, Mich., where the University Musical Society undertakes the concert on Friday, May 16, as a grand finale to a series of four entertainments under the personal direction of Prof. A. A. Stanley. On Saturday evening, May 17, a single concert will be given in Detroit; and directly after the concert the orchestra goes by steamer across Lake Erie to Cleveland, then on to Pittsburgh for two concerts in connection with the Mozart Club, Monday and Tuesday, May 19 and 20, presenting on the second night Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise." From Pittsburgh back to Cleveland for one concert on Wednesday evening, May 21, under the management of Mr. N. Coe Stewart, director of music in the public schools. Buffalo has a concert on Thursday the 22d, and Albany on Friday the 23d.

Boston Evening Transcript.

THURSDAY, MAY 1, 1890.

THEATRES AND CONCERTS.

[See Page Six.]

MADAME DE PACHMANN'S RECITAL.

Mme. Marguerite de Pachmann gave a pianoforte recital in Chickering Hall yesterday afternoon, the programme being as follows:

Fantasie-Sonata in G, Op. 78	Schubert.
Variations Sérieuses in D minor, Op. 54	Mendelssohn
Barcarolle No. 4	Rubinstein
Study: "Si oiseau j'étais"	Rubinstein
Studies: Op. 25, Nos. 6 and 8; op. 10, No. 5	Henselt
Andante spianato and Polonaise in E-flat, Op. 22	Chopin
Réverie du Lac	Chopin
Study: "Waldesrauschen"	Marguerite de Pachmann
Study in Waltz-form	Liszt
	Saint-Saëns.

Mme. de Pachmann came, played and conquered. One needed to hear only the first few measures of the Schubert sonata to have one's attention caught by something exceedingly rare nowadays; by perfectly simple, straightforward, dignified playing, rhythmically clear and distinct, neither stiffened by coldness nor warped by artificial warmth. At first it seemed almost too good to be true, and one waited to find the spell broken by some fashionable extravagance, some shade of false feeling, some elegant niaiserie. But no, Mme. de Pachmann went on as she had begun, simply, purely and musically. Best of all, she showed soon enough that this refined and dignified simplicity of style was no mere chance fad of hers, no hard-and-fast method of performance to which she had committed herself, through thick and thin—say, for the purpose of accentuating a contrast between herself and other players. That it was entirely genuine, the result of both musical instinct and culture, and a fine sense of artistic fitness was shown by the perfectly natural, unforced way in which she would abandon it now and then, just at the points where the music needed a dash or added spice to bring out its true flavor, and save it from monotony. She showed that, where needful, she knew how to "make play" with the phrase, and animate the rhythm as well as any one. To take one instance from among several, one seldom hears the last movement in the Schubert sonata played as she played it, so as to hold the attention fast from beginning to end, with so much variety, and yet wholly without extravagance or anything that smacked of the musically unworthy.

As she worked her way farther and farther down the list, and the character of the music changed from classic purity of form and feeling to the most sophisticated extravagance of modern highly-spiced musical cookery—as in the Liszt "Waldesrauschen," and the Saint-Saëns Waltz-study—her style of playing kept pace with the music, humoring it to the top of its bent in all sorts of fantastic, brilliant and ear-catching effects, yet never losing a certain refinement and modesty that made it doubly charming.

Her technique, too, which even at the beginning of the programme could be recognized as highly finished and adequate, showed itself later on to be positively astounding. She plays the G-sharp minor study by Chopin even more rapidly than her husband, and, if not with quite the pungent chic that he does, with decidedly superior rhythmic clearness. What she did in the way of smoothly flowing scales with interchanging hands, rapid thirds and octaves in the Saint-Saëns piece well-nigh beggars description. Her use of the pedal, too, is masterly, and the tone she draws from the instrument invariably beautiful in all its gradations from pianissimo to fortissimo.

She has, it is true, one or two tricks, and also some limitations. On her perhaps a little excessive fondness for pianissimo playing we would not insist, for she overdoes it, upon the whole, less than most pianists today who can do that sort of thing. She has a way of repeating the "expressive note" in a phrase of cantilena, sometimes three or four times, instead of simply holding it, which is not in the best taste. We cannot say that we found in her any evidence of great depth of feeling or intensity of passion; she does not scale enormous heights nor sound great depths of emotion. But, as far as it goes, her feeling seems thoroughly genuine, as it is always essentially musical; and she has a firmness of artistic instinct which enables her to draw very sharp and just distinctions between sensibility, thoughtfulness and passion; between various qualities of emotion, and she almost invariably touches the right chord. Her innate refinement of perception, and, as a result thereof, her keen perception of and sympathy with refinement, are conspicuous. In a word, we have seldom heard a pianist whose playing we so thoroughly enjoyed.

Boston Daily Traveller

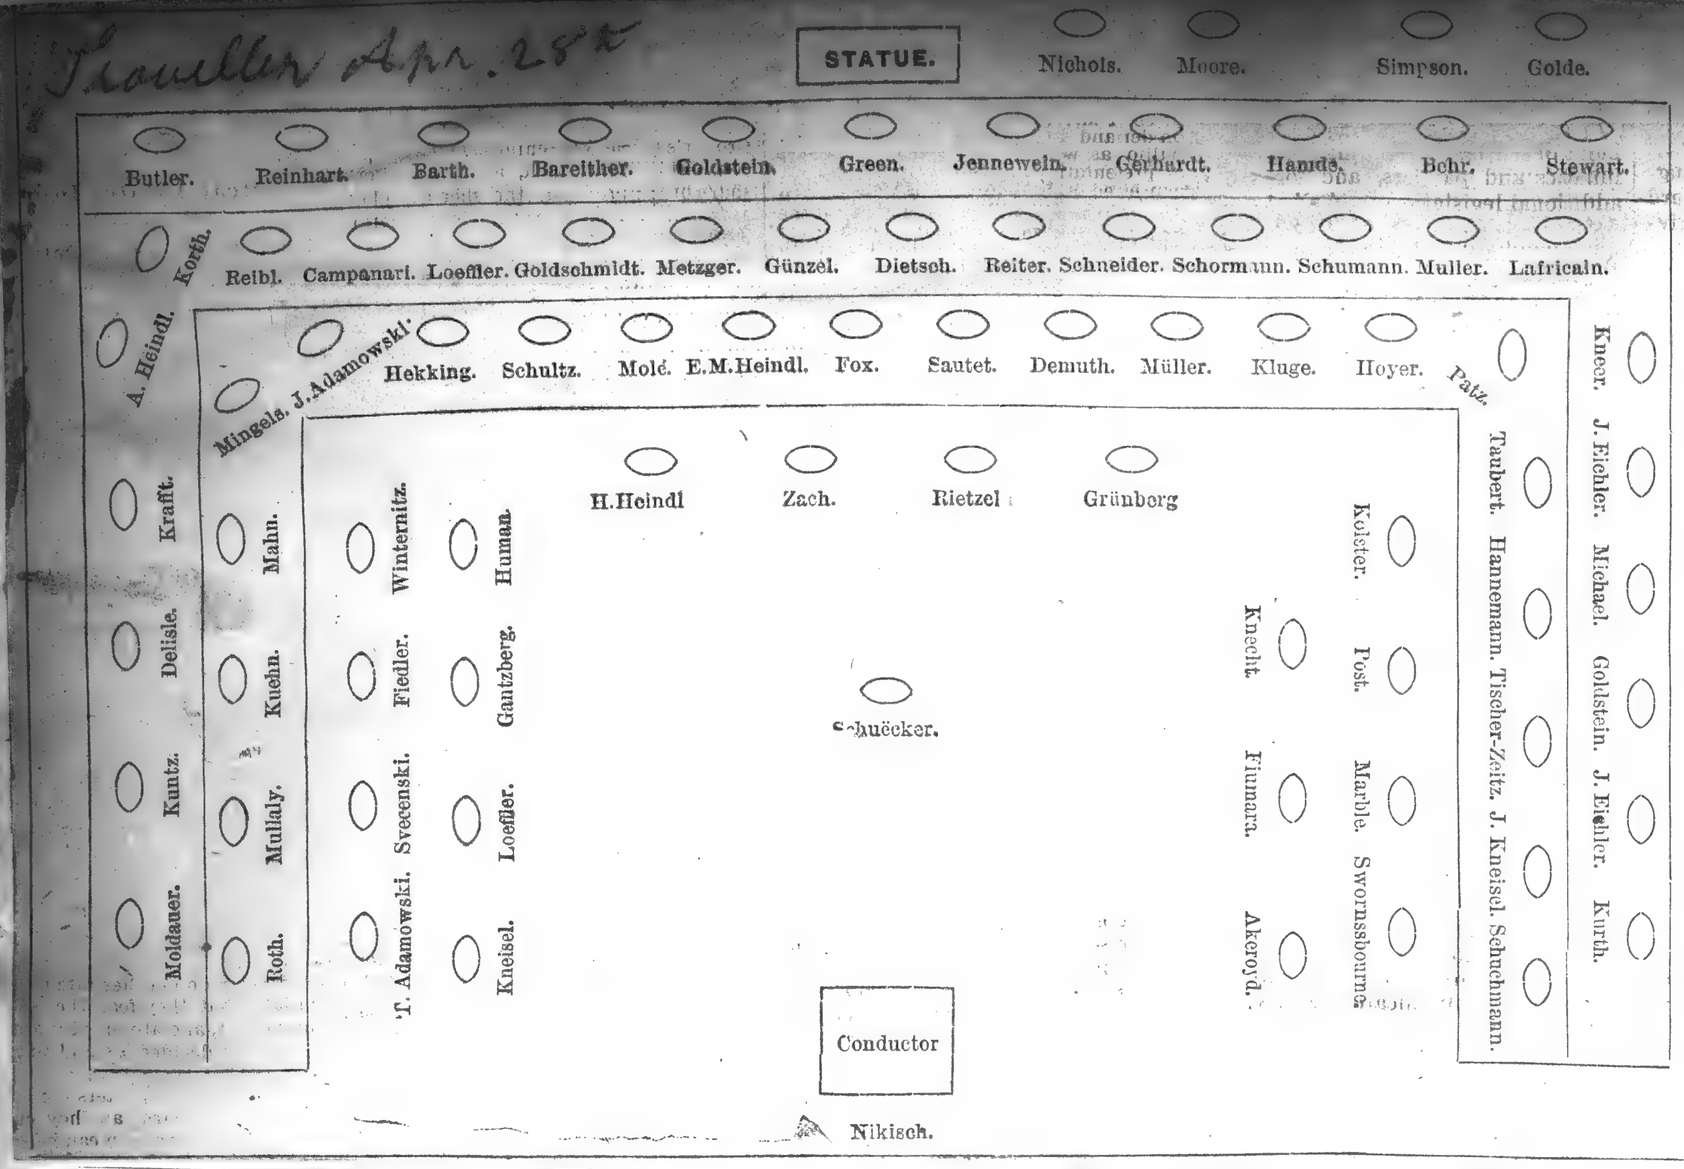
THURSDAY, MAY 1, 1890.

Mme. de Pachmann.

Yesterday afternoon in Chickering Hall, Mme. de Pachmann played the following programme: Sonata, op. 78, Schubert; serious variations, op. 54, Mendelssohn; fourth barcarole, Rubinstein; "Were I a Bird," Henselt; Three studies, op. 25, Nos. 6 and 8, op. 10, No. 5, andante spianate and polonaise, Chopin; "Reverie du lac," original; "Waldesrauchen," Liszt; study in a form of a waltz, Saint-Saëns. As Miss Oakey, Mme. de Pachmann was much admired in London; now that she is the consort of one more famous (perhaps along limited lines) her light is certainly a brilliant one. Even as a Chopin player her work yesterday in point of poetic conception stands well alongside that of her husband. Yet we should say, after a single hearing, that her forte lay in pieces requiring a dextrous manipulation, like the Henselt and Liszt compositions represented above. In general, her playing is admirable in its moderation, unsensational and sincere; technically, her wrist and arm work are admirable. Mme. de Pachmann had a small audience, but a very enthusiastic one.

[125]

Traveller Apr. 28th



The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 3, 1890.

THE PACHMANN RECITALS.

On Monday afternoon M. De Pachmann played to a very large audience at Chickering's, the programme being drawn exclusively from Chopin, and several of the morceaux in which his taste, talent and technique have been most gratifyingly obvious were repeated. The impression left served only to heighten the good opinion already established by his previous concerts, and he was received with great enthusiasm and dismissed with much regret. On Wednesday afternoon Mme. De Pachmann, of whose sympathetic and beautiful personality something was said here last week, made her début, and gave her hearers an afternoon of unalloyed delight. She far exceeded all expectation and was at once accepted as a pianist of rare merit in every sense of the word. Her technique is scarcely less marvellous in its fineness, its certainty and its full but suave strength than that of her husband; she gives her music with such freedom from the trammels alike of memory and of the key board, that she seems to be improvising, while a delicate feminine tact or intuition instructs her so to modify its use that each author in turn is read according to his true style. It cannot be claimed for her that she is profound or ardent in emotion; but where all is so exquisitely shaped, such clear intellectuality exists, such purity of meaning conveyed and such true feeling indicated, it would be unreasonable to ask for that greater passion which might overwhelm and blot out some other elements which could not so well be spared. The programme—barring the inherent dryness of Schubert's opus 78 sonata—all gave delicious pleasure to judgment and to sentiment, and the audience were almost unbounded in their expressions of gratification and surprise.

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, MAY 4, 1890.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA'S TOUR.

The first week of the fourth annual tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has ended, six concerts having been given in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and Richmond, Va., and all with remarkable success. Mr. Nikisch has repeated his triumphs in Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and in Richmond, the first appearance of the Boston orchestra in this section of the country, created the greatest enthusiasm on Friday and Saturday evenings. There is an interesting history to the concerts by this orchestra in Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington which is worth the telling, especially as it may induce public spirited citizens in other localities to bestir themselves to secure the results gained in those cities. It is due to Messrs. Burditt and North of Boston to say that their intelligent, persistent and public spirited work as managers has gained the Boston orchestra its present standing in these three cities. In each of these centres of population they found, when they assumed the responsibility of the Boston Symphony concerts in the several cities named, a general apathy concerning orchestral music. They immediately began to awaken and concentrate the individual demand for a series of first-class orchestral concerts, and, during the season ended the last week, their labors have been rewarded by the fullest measure of success. The work of Messrs. Burditt and North has been the result of establishing the Boston Symphony concerts on as sure a foundation in the three cities named as they enjoy in this city. Mr. Nikisch has given some very brilliant programmes during the week, and Mme. Steinbach Jahns, the soprano soloist of the tour, has found general favor wherever she has appeared.

THE BOSTON TIMES

BOSTON, SUNDAY, MAY 4, 1890.

MR. AND MRS. DE PACHMANN'S RECITALS.

Two interesting pianoforte recitals have been given in Chickering hall this week, one by Mr. De Pachmann on Monday afternoon, and the other by Mrs. De Pachmann on Wednesday afternoon. At the first recital the programme was:

Fantaisie op. 49	Chopin
Impromptu op. 29
Barcarole op. 60
Berceuse op. 57
Etudes op. 25 Nos. 2, 3, 6
Ballade op. 23
Valse op. 42
Mazourka op. 41
Tarantelle op. 43

Mrs. De Pachmann played on Wednesday as follows:

Fantaisie Sonate, Opus 78	Schubert
Variations Serieuses	Mendelssohn
Barcarole No. 4	Rubinstein
"St oiseau j'etais"	Henselt
a. Three Etudes, Opus 25, Nos. 6 and 8, Opus 10, No. 5	Chopin
b. Andante spianato and grand polonaise	Chopin
"Reverie du lac"	Marguerite de Pachmann
"Waldesrauchen"	Liszt
Etude "en forme de valse"	Saint Saens

The first programme was but an epitome of Mr. De Pachmann's initial set of recitials in this city and was played with much the same charm, piquancy and artistic finish. As a piano singer Mr. De Pachmann has probably not his equal. To him and to such as hear him perform, the piano is a singing instrument, and one forgets for the time being its somewhat unsavory reputation as an instrument of percussion. Mrs. De Pachmann has evidently been a very faithful pupil of her husband, for she plays in very much the same manner so far as quality of touch and technique are concerned. In other respects she is even broader, not so gifted perhaps, but more even and reliable. To say that she was fully equal to the exacting requirements of the Schubert sonata is perhaps the worthiest compliment that one can bestow. Both concerts were attended by very large audiences.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 10, 1890.

THE DE PACHMANN FAREWELL.

One last concert by Mr. and Mrs. De Pachmann is announced for Thursday afternoon next, the place being Chickering Hall, where their previous programmes have been played. The selections for this matinee are these: Mr. De Pachmann will play, for the first time in Boston, Chopin's "Nocturne," opus 37, No. 2; "Etudes," opus 10, No. 3, and opus 25, No. 1; "Mazurka," opus 59, No. 2; and "Valse Brillante," opus 34, No. 3; also Chopin's "Ballade," opus 38; "Fantaisie Impromptu," opus 66; "Scherzo," opus 31; "Nocturne," opus 55, No. 1; and "Polonaise," opus 50. Mme. De Pachmann's numbers are "Danklied nach Sturm," Henselt; "Si Oiseau J'etais," Liszt; "Impromptu," No. 4, Schubert; and "Rigaudon," Raff. But, indeed, this matters comparatively little, because, although in some selections the virtuosity or the idiosyncracies of the artists may be more quickly apparent than in others, they can take up nothing in which they will not give rare, fresh and peculiar pleasure. It has been a long time since any visiting pianists have used the instrument so genially and expressively and have so successfully concealed its usually obtrusive individuality under the music evoked from it, and now that they must return to Europe, their departure will leave many regrets.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 30, 1890.

——Last Sunday evening the Boston Symphony Orchestra, seventy performers, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, conductor, accompanied by Mrs. Steinbach-Jahns, dramatic soprano from the Leipsic Opera House, started via the Fall River line on their Western tournée. Monday evening the final concert in the series of five given at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, was the initial concert of the trip. Last night a similar series in Baltimore was to be closed. Then come two concerts in Washington—the first by the orchestra alone, closing a series of five, the second with the Washington Choral Society, when Dudley Buck's "Light of Asia" will be given. On Friday and Saturday, May 2 and 3, the orchestra will make its first appearance in Richmond, Va., under the auspices of the Mozart Association. Then comes a long jump to Columbus, Ohio, where the orchestra gives a single performance on Monday evening May 5, under the auspices of the Orpheus Club, the leading vocal organization of the city. From Columbus, the orchestra goes to Cincinnati, giving two concerts on Tuesday and Wednesday. A single concert in Louisville, Ky., on Thursday, May 8, under the management of Daniel Quilp, in his beautiful amphitheatre auditorium, will be one of the musical events of the season in a city always quick to recognize and appreciate standard organizations. Then follow two concerts in the Grand Music Hall, St. Louis, on Friday and Saturday, May 9 and 10. Directly after the concert on Saturday, a special train of three sleeping cars will convey the orchestra to Minneapolis for one concert, on Monday evening, May 12, in the University Coliseum, under the management of Mr. Louis Miller, to whom is due the credit of introducing this famous organization to Minneapolis. On Tuesday, May 13, the orchestra makes its début in St. Paul, under the direction of Mr. E. C. Murdock, manager of the Star Course and associated with nearly every first-class organization visiting St. Paul. A special train will take the orchestra from St. Paul to Chicago, where but a single concert will be given in Central Music Hall, on Wednesday evening, May 14. From Chicago the organization goes to Milwaukee for a concert under the auspices of the Arion Club, with which society the orchestra appeared last season. The next objective point is Ann Arbor, Mich., where the University Musical Society undertakes the concert on Friday, May 16, as a grand finale to a series of four entertainments under the personal direction of Prof. A. A. Stanley. On Saturday evening, May 17, a single concert will be given in Detroit; and directly after the concert the orchestra goes by steamer across Lake Erie to Cleveland, then on to Pittsburgh for two concerts in connection with the Mozart Club, Monday and Tuesday, May 19 and 20, presenting on the second night Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise." From Pittsburgh back to Cleveland for one concert on Wednesday evening, May 21, under the management of Mr. N. Coe Stewart, director of music in the public schools. Buffalo has a concert on Thursday the 22d, and Albany on Friday the 23d.

Boston Evening Transcript.

THURSDAY, MAY 1, 1890.

THEATRES AND CONCERTS.

[See Page Six.]

MADAME DE PACHMANN'S RECITAL.

Mme. Marguerite de Pachmann gave a pianoforte recital in Chickering Hall yesterday afternoon, the programme being as follows:

Fantasie-Sonata in G, Op. 78	Schubert.
Variations Sérieuses in D minor, Op. 54	Mendelssohn
Barcarolle No. 4	Rubinstein
Study: "Si oiseau j'étais"	Rubinstein
Studies: Op. 25, Nos. 6 and 8; op. 10, No. 5	Henselt
Andante spianato and Polonaise in E-flat, Op. 22	Chopin
Réverie du Lac	Chopin
Study: "Waldesrauschen"	Marguerite de Pachmann
Study in Waltz-form	Liszt
	Saint-Saëns.

Mme. de Pachmann came, played and conquered. One needed to hear only the first few measures of the Schubert sonata to have one's attention caught by something exceedingly rare nowadays; by perfectly simple, straightforward, dignified playing, rhythmically clear and distinct, neither stiffened by coldness nor warped by artificial warmth. At first it seemed almost too good to be true, and one waited to find the spell broken by some fashionable extravagance, some shade of false feeling, some elegant niaiserie. But no, Mme. de Pachmann went on as she had begun, simply, purely and musically. Best of all, she showed soon enough that this refined and dignified simplicity of style was no mere chance fad of hers, no hard-and-fast method of performance to which she had committed herself, through thick and thin—say, for the purpose of accentuating a contrast between herself and other players. That it was entirely genuine, the result of both musical instinct and culture, and a fine sense of artistic fitness was shown by the perfectly natural, unforced way in which she would abandon it now and then, just at the points where the music needed a dash or added spice to bring out its true flavor, and save it from monotony. She showed that, where needful, she knew how to "make play" with the phrase, and animate the rhythm as well as any one. To take one instance from among several, one seldom hears the last movement in the Schubert sonata played as she played it, so as to hold the attention fast from beginning to end, with so much variety, and yet wholly without extravagance or anything that smacked of the musically unworthy.

As she worked her way farther and farther down the list, and the character of the music changed from classic purity of form and feeling to the most sophisticated extravagance of modern highly-spiced musical cookery—as in the Liszt "Waldesrauschen," and the Saint-Saëns Waltz-study—her style of playing kept pace with the music, humoring it to the top of its bent in all sorts of fantastic, brilliant and ear-catching effects, yet never losing a certain refinement and modesty that made it doubly charming.

Her technique, too, which even at the beginning of the programme could be recognized as highly finished and adequate, showed itself later on to be positively astounding. She plays the G-sharp minor study by Chopin even more rapidly than her husband, and, if not with quite the pungent chic that he does, with decidedly superior rhythmic clearness. What she did in the way of smoothly flowing scales with interchanging hands, rapid thirds and octaves in the Saint-Saëns piece well-nigh beggars description. Her use of the pedal, too, is masterly, and the tone she draws from the instrument invariably beautiful in all its gradations from pianissimo to fortissimo.

She has, it is true, one or two tricks, and also some limitations. On her perhaps a little excessive fondness for pianissimo playing we would not insist, for she overdoes it, upon the whole, less than most pianists today who can do that sort of thing. She has a way of repeating the "expressive note" in a phrase of cantilena, sometimes three or four times, instead of simply holding it, which is not in the best taste. We cannot say that we found in her any evidence of great depth of feeling or intensity of passion; she does not scale enormous heights nor sound great depths of emotion. But, as far as it goes, her feeling seems thoroughly genuine, as it is always essentially musical; and she has a firmness of artistic instinct which enables her to draw very sharp and just distinctions between sensibility, thoughtfulness and passion; between various qualities of emotion, and she almost invariably touches the right chord. Her innate refinement of perception, and, as a result thereof, her keen perception of and sympathy with refinement, are conspicuous. In a word, we have seldom heard a pianist whose playing we so thoroughly enjoyed.

Boston Daily Traveller

THURSDAY, MAY 1, 1890.

Mme. de Pachmann.

Yesterday afternoon in Chickering Hall, Mme. de Pachmann played the following programme: Sonata, op. 78, Schubert; serious variations, op. 54, Mendelssohn; fourth barcarole, Rubinstein; "Were I a Bird," Henselt; Three studies, op. 25, Nos. 6 and 8, op. 10, No. 5, andante spianate and polonaise, Chopin; "Reverie du lac," original; "Waldesrauchen," Liszt; study in a form of a waltz, Saint-Saëns. As Miss Oakey, Mme. de Pachmann was much admired in London; now that she is the consort of one more famous (perhaps along limited lines) her light is certainly a brilliant one. Even as a Chopin player her work yesterday in point of poetic conception stands well alongside that of her husband. Yet we should say, after a single hearing, that her forte lay in pieces requiring a dextrous manipulation, like the Henselt and Liszt compositions represented above. In general, her playing is admirable in its moderation, unsensational and sincere; technically, her wrist and arm work are admirable. Mme. de Pachmann had a small audience, but a very enthusiastic one.

[125]

Music.

THE TWENTY-FOURTH SYMPHONY CONCERT.—

Beethoven .....Overture, "Lenore," No. 3
Beethoven.....Symphony No. 4, in B-flat
Paganini.....Moto perpetuo, Allegro de Concert (for 32 violins)
Wagner.....Vorspiel, "Die Meistersinger"

The great audience of Saturday evening at the beginning and end of the last concert of the season paid Mr. Nikisch a handsome tribute and showed good will and appreciation; and the compositions of Beethoven and Wagner's Vorspiel were most heartily applauded. This was eminently fit and proper; for however opinions may differ concerning the genius of Mr. Nikisch, the playing of the orchestra under his direction last Saturday evening, in spite of a few slips in the adagio of the Symphony, was most excellent. There was a marked and welcome attention paid to gradations of tone-force, and there was an accuracy in the detail, particularly in the "Lenore Overture" and the Wagner selection, which has not been observed in many concerts of the season. We are accustomed by this time to certain peculiarities or mannerisms of the conductor: his at times vague, uncertain beat under which a less experienced orchestra would surely come to grief; his curious exaggeration of the ritardando by which he often without warrant changes suddenly the tempo instead of employing legitimately and according to the composer's intention a ritardato. It is, then, unfortunate for the abiding reputation of Mr. Nikisch that at the very last concert of the season he should have deliberately sought an occasion to italicize the theatrical side of his nature; this he did by the introduction of the Paganini number.

For thirty-two men stood up and fiddled the "Moto perpetuo." Let it be said at the start that it was from a technical point of view an admirable performance. It showed the skill of the violinists of the orchestra. The performance was simply a tour de force better adapted for the closing exercises of a musical conservatory than for the last of a series of Symphony concerts. It may be said that such exhibitions are allowed in the great orchestral concerts in Germany and France. Or it may be said that the conductor, nettled perhaps by remarks made upon the occasional coarseness of the strings in certain concerts of the past season, wished to openly show that they had lost neither in quality nor in technique under his direction. Now no one has ever denied the brilliant work of the violins of the orchestra; admirable musicians, they acquired under Mr. Gericke a technique which can not easily be lost. The spectacle of men standing and solemnly fiddling to piano-forte accompaniment is no answer to the fact that during the winter, in response to the unreasonable demands of the conductor, these same men, no doubt against their own musical judgment, have been obliged to force tone until it became unpleasantly coarse. Mr. Nikisch thought that applause would follow. Nor was he deceived. "Tumult was at its height." The sight of thirty-odd men doing the work of one drove the audience to frenzy. And this was at a Symphony concert in Music Hall, and the audience, an audience which has listened for nine seasons to the masterpieces of the great composers. This claptrap performance worthy of the accompaniment of bengal-lights provoked the heartiest applause of the season of '89--90. "These be thy gods, O Israel."

Fortunately the sober sense of the more thoughtful revolted and signs of disapproval were openly shown.

THE DE PACHMANN RECITAL.—Mr. de Pachmann gave a piano forte recital at Chickering Hall Monday afternoon, at which he played the following program:

Fantaisie op. 49.....
Impromptu op. 29.....
Barcarole op. 60.....
Berceuse op. 57.....
Etudes op. 25 Nos. 2, 3, 6.....} Chopin
Ballade op. 23.....
Valse op. 42.....
Mazourka op. 41.....
Tarantelle op. 43.....

The so-called limitations of Mr. Pachman's musical nature make him a remarkable pianist. These limitations are sources of strength. Yet he has been at times severely criticized for these very limitations. He has been accused of effeminacy; his playing has been characterized as namby-pamby; he does not "unveil the real Chopin," whatever that beautiful phrase may mean; and, by the way, what or who was the "real Chopin"?

In a criticism of former recitals given by Mr. Pachmann I have spoken of his marvelous technique, his freedom from pounding, his exquisite touch, his singing of the melody. It is not necessary now to reiterate eulogistic sentences. It may not be out of place to speak of impressions which perhaps vague at first, by repeated hearings have become real and palpable.

When Mr. Pachmann plays, the hearer forgets that he is listening to a piano; he is only conscious of musical impressions, he cares not for the instrument conveying them. It is possible he would be incredulous, he might resent it, were it said to him, "You have been listening to a piano." For unless this combination of wires and "saucy jacks" be most delicately handled, it is merely an ingenious machine, artificially tuned, capable of emitting sound which is too often synonymous with noise. That Mr. Pachmann should so conceal the nature of his instrument is not the least of his triumphs.

The question of the duty which the performer, the interpreter (if you please) owes the composer has been for years fiercely discussed. Some even claim that the individuality of the soloist is more interesting than the thoughts of the man who wrote the music. There is connected with this a question too often lost sight of: What were the thoughts of the composer; how did he wish his music played? It is a curious fact that many composers are utterly unable to direct or play their compositions; and in a performance they often neglect, they often set at defiance their own expressed indications. The lover of Brahms would not be satisfied with the performance of a symphony by Brahms personally conducted. The admirer of the remarkable pieces for the organ by César Auguste Franck would not recognize these works were he to hear them played by Franck at the church of Sainte-Clotilde. "Mors et Vita" as directed by Gounod is a very different thing from the "Mors et Vita" of the printed score. These men are alive; how much more difficult it is to form any idea as to what the dead intended. Traditions necessarily rest upon human evidence; and human evidence is uncertain. It seems impossible for any sensitive musician to sing or play without allowing the element of self to enter.

But the quality of individuality may be aggressive or so subtle that it escapes attention. What Walt Whitman, in the preface to the first edition of "Leaves of Grass," said of the greatest poet, may be well applied to a great singer, violinist or pianist. "The greatest poet has less a marked style and is more the channel of thoughts and things without increase or diminution, and is the free channel of himself. He swears to his art, I will not be meddlesome, I will not have in my writing any elegance or effect or originality to hang in the way between me and the rest, like curtains. I will have nothing in the way, not the richest curtains. What I tell I tell for precisely what it is. Let who may exalt or startle or fascinate or soothe, I will have purposes as health or heat or snow has, and be as regardless of observation. What I experience or portray shall go from my composition without a shred of my composition. You shall stand by my side and look in the mirror with me."

Given a pianist playing to say twenty people a composition by Chopin, we find a curious phenomenon: There are suddenly twenty-two Chopins in the room,—the Chopin of the notes, the Chopin who plays, and twenty Chopin hearers who individually and confidently know how Chopin should be played. And yet the true Chopin may not be in the midst. One hearer having read the rhapsodical sketch by Liszt may dream of outraged Poland; another may see the vision of George Sand; another may regard Chopin as the incarnation of the age, skeptical, pettishly morbid, restless, choosing rather the air of the hot-house than the breath of nature, curious and defiant, the age of nerves and nervous diseases. Music such as that of Chopin escapes analysis. Nor because you are affected in a certain way should you assume that others must be similarly affected; nor if the performer refuses to agree with your own prepared and cut and dried emotions is he therefore a false interpreter of the composer.

In Pachmann's playing there are so many contradictions. When you hear him play the Barcarole you would swear he is wanting in rythmical sense, and then he confounds you with the swing of the Mazurkas and the rare perfection of his waltz-bass. His delicacy and sentiment tremble upon the verge of sentimentalism, and he will suddenly be grandly simple. He will play passages of extreme difficulty so quietly that they escape notice, and he will then give molehills the shape of mountains.

Does he leave only a superficial impression? When he plays does he only graze the hearer's skin? The faces of the women who listen are a denial. For cheeks do not glow, eyes do not grow tender, the blood does not run quicker, unless a potent charm is exercised. Nor do such perturbations of nature follow exhibitions of mere skill or endurance. When Pachmann plays he touches tenderly with his fingers the heart-strings of women. These women breathe, they sigh, they smile with him; for he whispers to them and reminds them of what they have perhaps secretly longed for or lost.

Because a pianist does not startle or stun; because he recognizes the limitations of his instrument and does not confound the piano with the orchestra, is he therefore to be slighted or passed by with flippant word? Music should appeal more to the senses than to the head. The music of Chopin is an attack upon the heart. The women who hear Pachmann acknowledge his facility of execution, but they do not stop to praise it; they are under his spell; as hundreds of years ago the maidens of Hamelin listened to the incantations of Hunold Singuf.

MRS. PACHMANN'S RECITAL.—Wednesday afternoon a pianoforte recital was given at Chickering Hall by Mrs. Marguerite de Pachmann. The program was as follows:—

1. Fantaisie Sonate, Opus 78.....Schubert
2. Variations Serieuses.....Mendelssohn
3. Barcarole No. 4.....Rubinstein
4. "St oiseau j'etais".....Henselt
5. a. Three Etudes, Opus 25, Nos. 6 and 8, Opus 10, No. 5 ..... b. Andante spianato and grand polonaise.....} Chopin
6. "Reverie du lac".....Marguerite de Pachmann
7. "Waldesrauschen".....Liszt
8. Etude "en forme de valse".....Saint-Saens

Mrs. Pachmann, a woman of rare personal charm, shows in her playing an excellent technique, an agreeable touch, a well-developed sense of rhythm, and musical instinct. These qualities were plainly seen in the selections from Chopin, the Saint Saens Etude, and the Rubinstein Barcarole. She was unfortunate in her selections from Schubert and Mendelssohn, for the Sonata, unless played by a giant, is a thankless task; and the age of variations is over, as the people of this day demand the unexpected, and the repetition of a theme, however ingeniously it may be distorted, frets and annoys modern ears. Her own "Reverie" is a trifle, unworthy of a place upon her programs.

Mrs. Pachmann as a pianist lacks that indefinable something which for want of a better name we call magnetism. Now magnetism (to use this term) is not the same as individuality. A man may have so marked, so aggressive an individuality in his playing or singing that he repels; although from the pedagogic standpoint he may be the superior of the man filled with magnetic fluid. Whether strong individuality is to be desired in a player is a query which, though alluded to in another column, does not here enter into the question. The elusive, impalpable quality of magnetism is indispensable; the truly great player can not do without it. For music is not like a syllogism, not like a quadratic equation. Its purpose is not to convince, not to instruct, but to move or soothe the passions. In considering the performance of a player, it is not enough to weigh the technique or to apply the measuring-rod of the teacher. The great question is whether by legitimate and artistic means the player affects or sways the hearer. As the feelings awakened in a hearer are purely subjective, as there is no such thing as "objective music," the whole problem is reduced to individual relations between player and hearer. If the hearer is able to sit quietly and coolly admire the perfection of the mechanism, the player has not fully answered the demands made upon him Once and once only was there a suspicion of this mysterious quality in Mrs. Pachmann's playing; and that was in the Rubinstein "Barcarole."

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, MAY 4, 1890.

DE PACHMANN CONCERT.

Monday afternoon found Chickering Hall crowded to its doors by an audience composed of some of the finest people of the city, on the occasion of a farewell Chopin recital by Vladimir de Pachmann. Either the celebrated pianist was unprepared to give performances of works by Chopin which were not included in the programmes of his previous recitals, or else he apparently thought it hardly worth while to do so; for this programme consisted of numbers which he had already given. On the whole, his playing throughout the concert was less spirited and captivating than usual. Both the fantasie and the G minor ballade were rendered in a rather mechanical and incoherent manner; the phrasing being spasmodic, and the grand climaxes approached through badly-managed crescendos. Evidently he hardly felt flattered by the tremendous applause that greeted his performance of the A-flat waltz, for his deprecatory shrugs indicated that he was not pleased at having got decidedly "out" at its close, something, by the way, that almost never happens to him. The impromptu in A-flat, and three studies, including that in double-thirds, were his best efforts, the last winning the encore which it deserved. This fourth hearing of Mr. de Pachmann inclines us to modify the opinion that we have recently expressed concerning him. We said that he was not a great, but a delightful interpreter of Chopin. It seems to us now that he does not interpret Chopin at all But this is not saying that he is not an extraordinary pianoforte player. In fact his many peculiar excellences in this respect rather grow upon one, as surely as his many weaknesses as an interpreter become apparent. For one thing it is a positive pleasure to hear a pianist produce such effects as he does, with absolutely no display of "method." If some instances of faulty and ineffective chord-playing are excepted, his technique is not only fine, but wonderfully so. It never shows itself unequal to anything it is called upon to do. Accidents sometimes happen, to be sure, but it is easy enough to see that they are due only to momentary fatigue, or sometimes to paying too exclusive attention to the fair faces in his audience. The beautiful singing tone he produces, for example, is obtained in the simplest manner. There is no undue movement of the finger, no elevating nor depressing the wrist. The finger is quietly pressed upon the key, and at once all the tone there is in the pianoforte comes forth with as much fullness and purity as is ever produced by the most fanatical devotee of "the only method," whichever that may be. In the same unaffected manner, runs, arpeggios, trills, doubles, thirds, repetition chords and octaves are played; so unobtrusively, indeed, that it is doubtful if some of his most exquisite effects would be noticed by many in his audiences, if it were not for the unique way he has of calling their attention to them. This habit of appealing to his hearers with smiles and frowns, and sundry eccentric gestures, is, by the way, apparently as strong an attraction as was the appearance of the name of dear old Warren on the play-bills at the Museum. And as the opening of the mouth of that great comedian, whether for the utterance of a sentence tender with pathos, or brimming with fun, was ever the signal for an outbreak of laughter on the part of many unthinking people, so are de Pachmann's facial expressions and motions, whether they appeal for sympathy in the midst of some plaintive or joyous passage, invariably the cause of such a universal "wreath of smiles," as to leave no room for doubt that they are regarded as one of the chief features of the entertainment. To us, Mr. de Pachmann is not an interpreter of Chopin, because he never renders any of the important works of that great composer in a manner that conveys a full idea of the breadth and real beauty of their meaning. With exquisite touch and sense of color, and with loving hands, albeit rather sentimentally, he shows us in tone kaleidoscopic views of passages, dainty, pathetic and fascinating in their import; but he seldom renders truly, or even effectively, the many passages which teem with passion or heroism, and he never unites these characteristics of Chopin's music with such broad and strong sweeps of the brush, so to speak, as to make us think afterward. "What a glorious work!" We recall with delight his playing, and the wonderfully vivid color he imparts to passage after passage; but listen as we will, we can discover nothing in his performances that gives assurance of his having any definite conception of such works as the fantasie, the G minor ballade, the barcarolle, and others of similar structure. With the waltzes, mazurkas and impromptus he is thoroughly successful, his rendition of them being as instructive as it is entertaining. He has also a remarkable faculty for listening to his own playing, a faculty which is cultivated far too rarely, nowadays. How many players or singers do we hear who to all appearances have any idea of what sort of effects they are producing, or who convey the impression that what they are doing is the outcome of their own knowledge? Very few, indeed. The work of the vast majority of performers testifies only too clearly that they are simply following the instructions of somebody else. This estimate of Mr. de Pachmann will doubtless seem hyper-critical, unless one important point is taken into consideration—the fact that Chopin is to be considered as well as Mr. de Pachmann. Mr. de Pachmann is a great interpreter of Chopin. then Chopin is not a great man. We are convinced that Mr. de Pachmann is an interpreter of Chopin only in so far as the music of that composer constitutes a medium for the kind of playing to which he is best adapted, and which he best enjoys; and that if there were in existence any music written by a man of the mental calibre of Henri Herz, for instance, which embraced at the same time all of Chopin's extraordinary fertility and beauty of technical invention, he would be a far more satisfactory interpreter of that music than he is of Chopin's.

MADAME DE PACHMANN'S CONCERT.

Although scarcely as much interest was displayed by the public to hear and see Mme. Marguerite de Pachmann, the wife of M. de Pachmann, as might have been expected, still an audience of fair size assembled in Chickering Hall, Wednesday afternoon, when she gave her first concert in Boston. The truth of the reports that had come to us, of her being an attractive woman in appearance, and a charming and cultivated pianist were all emphatically confirmed before she had finished her recital. No doubt her winning, graceful and unassuming manner would go far toward making her a favorite of the public even if she played only half as well as she does. But she is already an uncommonly good pianist; and with the strong musical instincts that she evidently possesses, there is apparently no reason why she should not be a really fine player at no distant day. Her technique bears the marks of the modern school of training, and, excepting the beautiful singing tone she produces, shows no traces of any instruction she may have received from her husband. It is quite possible, however, that her finished phrasing, especially the care with which themes in the middle voices and bass are played, and her unusual, for a woman, sense of rhythm, are directly owing to his influence. For some reason, probably from nervousness, she did not do herself justice in the first two numbers, the "fantasie sonata" of schubert, and Mendelssohn's "seventeen variations"; but with Rubinstein's barcarole in G major her strong points began to assert themselves. It is seldom that this difficult piece is played so well in concert. The double-thirds were exquisite in clearness and softness, and the melody was beautifully sung, with no undue use of the pedal. Henselt's "If I Were a Bird," also was remarkably well played. It was an interesting opportunity that was given to compare her playing in the study in double-thirds by Chopin with the phenomenal execution of M. de Pachmann. If her performance of it had come first, there is no doubt that it would have been considered very unusual. It was remarkable alike for its clearness, legato and rapid tempo. M. de Pachmann played it somewhat slower and with more staccato, which had the effect of making it so electrifying. Her play of the "Black key study," we preferred to that of her husband, it being more legato and less capricious. In the andante spianato and grand polonaise were displayed throughout much genuine feeling and power. The andante was beautifully sung, although the continuous flow of the accompaniment was not always sustained; and the polonaise was given with much brilliancy and elasticity. Liszt's "Waldesrauschen" study and Saint-Saens' waltz study were splendidly performed; with the fire, execution, and keen rhythmic sense that are to be found only in the work of a true artist. Her own composition, "Reverie du Lac," was a pleasing little thing as well as being artistically constructed, if not uncommonly original.

Gazette

SUNDAY MORNING EDITION

The Symphony Concerts.

The ninth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, just ended, has, we understand, been one of the most successful, financially, that the organization has experienced. Artistically, it has been abundant in interest and value. At the outset there was a general inclination to judge Mr. Nikisch by the standard established by Mr. Gericke during his five years of service as conductor of the orchestra. This sentiment, however, soon gave way to a wiser impulse to judge the newcomer by the standard he was seeking to establish for himself, and from the moment that this latter method began to prevail Mr. Nikisch grew steadily in general estimation. It is true that in the beginning he showed himself somewhat too enthusiastic a reformer in respect to the overturning of established ideas regarding the readings to be accorded to classical masterpieces; and there was on his part a reprehensible tendency to set too great a value on the new at the expense of the old; but as soon as he began to feel more at home with his orchestra and his public, he gave less and less cause for complaining on the part of those who objected to the interpretations of the old masters in a modern spirit of which they had no knowledge. In fact, Mr. Nikisch has shown himself to be keenly attentive and amenable to criticism written in the true interests of musical art.

The end of the season found the orchestra in fully as efficient a state as it was when he assumed direction of it. That the effect he produced with it differed from the effect produced by Mr. Gericke may be attributed to the widely contrasting temperaments of the two men. Mr. Gericke obtained a higher finish and a finer delicacy from the players, but this was at the cost of the complete merging of the individualities of the artists in the conductor, and resulted in a certain loss of flexibility and largeness in style. Mr. Nikisch, by releasing the players from this restraint and giving their respective individualities a wider scope, imparted to the orchestra greater fire, vigor and contrast in effects. At times this license ran a little wild, and caused the performances to merge on coarseness; but toward the last a more judicious balance was obtained without any loss in desirable effectiveness. The perfect conductor would be the man who combines the best qualities of both Mr. Gericke and Mr. Nikisch; but perfection exists not on this side of eternity. Mr. Nikisch has firmly established himself in the respect and favor of our musical public, and has made it clear to every unprejudiced mind that he is a conductor of rare ability, and fully worthy to hold the trust and confidence that have been placed in him.

His programmes have been quite as acceptable as have been those of his predecessors. They were not models of what such programmes should be, in the lack of the more eclectic spirit that might be brought to bear upon them. Forty eight composers were represented by one hundred and six works. Of these latter compositions new to Boston were: A symphony by Borodin; a concerto for violin by Brahms; "Kol Nidrei," for cello and orchestra, by Bruch; a concerto for cello by Eckert; "Spring," overture by Goldmark; Symphony No. 1, by Raff; concerto for violin, Saint-Saëns; Symphony (Irish) by Stanford; and overture, "Romeo and Juliet," by Tschaikowski. This is not a large showing of novelties, especially when we consider that of these nine works four are concertos introduced by soloists. Three symphonies, not one of which is of the first order, and two overtures, both admirable, are all that we had of new works from abroad. Of native composers four works were performed for the first time: two Episodes for orchestra, by Mr. Arthur Bird; a suite for string orchestra, by Mr. Arthur Foote; a symphonic poem, "Launcelot and Elaine," by Mr. E. A. MacDowell, and "Italia," a dramatic suite, by Mr. Arthur Weld. Now that Mr. Nikisch has become thoroughly familiar with what has been done by the orchestra in the past, and has sounded the expectations of the musical public regarding the programmes of these concerts, we may confidently expect a larger and a more cosmopolitan spirit in the formation of the programmes for next season. Mr. Nikisch has already made it quite certain that he will sustain to the full the enviable reputation that Boston has won in the possession of one of the finest orchestras in the world, and that it will suffer no loss in efficiency or in repute while it is under his control. This assured, we can afford to wait for the rest.

Musical Notes.

On Wednesday afternoon Mme. de Pachmann gave a piano recital in Chickering Hall. It was inevitable that comparisons should be drawn between her playing and that of her husband; but, all things considered, she stood the test remarkably well. Madame de Pachmann has a beautiful technique, fine artistic intelligence, and plays with much, if not all, of the warmth, expressiveness and certainty that mark the performances of her husband. It may be added that she is not a mere copy-to the service of influential constituents who can assist them to votes at home, rather than to the duties that are expected of them by their country. Of course, some bril-

[126]

[127]

BOSTON HERALD.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA.

The Boston Symphony orchestra has continued its western tour during the week just ended with constant success, the concerts given having attracted great audiences of enthusiastic music lovers. On Monday evening, in Columbus, O., the instrumental soloist was Mr. Loeffler, the violinest, who gave great satisfaction in Lala's "Symphonie Espagnole." The Tuesday and Wednesday evening concerts were at Cincinnati, with Mr. Kneisel, violin, and Hekking, 'cello, as soloists, the former playing the Bruch concerto, and the latter a Chopin nocturne and Popper's "Papillon," both having distinguished success. The Thursday evening concert was given at Louisville, Ky., when Mr. Hekking played the Saint-Saens concerto with great acceptance. The concerts of Friday and last evening were given at St. Louis, Mme. Bloomfield being the soloist in Litolff's pianoforte concerto in the first concert, and Mr. Schulz playing the Goltermann concerto for 'cello last evening. Mme. Steinbach Jahns has sung with the orchestra in each of the cities visited, and has been very handsomely complimented wherever she has been heard.

THE BOSTON TIMES

BOSTON, SUNDAY, MAY 11, 1890.

Herr Nikisch is spoken of in the warmest terms of appreciation in the Minneapolis Saturday Spectator, which, in connection with an announcement of the appearance of the Symphony orchestra there tomorrow evening, publishes a long account of the orchestra and its conductors, Herr Nikisch receiving special description.

Boston Post

FRIDAY MORNING, MAY 16, 1890.

THE FAREWELL PACHMANN RECITAL.

That is to say, farewell until next spring, and a large and enthusiastic body of music lovers gathered in Chickering Hall yesterday afternoon to say "good-by" to these two genial artists. The following programme was played:

(a) Ballade, op. 38. (b) Fantaisie Impromptu, op. 66. (c) Scherzo, op. 31 ..... Chopin

M. de Pachmann.

(a) "Danklied nach Sturm" ..... Henselt
(b) "Si oiseau j'etais" ..... Henselt
(c) Galop ("Le Bal") ..... Rubinstein

Mme. de Pachmann.

(a) Nocturne, op. 37, No. 2. (b) Etude, op. 10, No. 3. (c) Etude, op. 25, No. 1. (d) Mazourka, op. 56, No. 2. (e) Waltz, op. 34, No. 3 ..... Chopin

M. de Pachmann.

(a) "Au bord d'une sourd" ..... Liszt
(b) Impromptu, No. 4 ..... Schubert
(c) Rigaudon ..... Raff

Mme. de Pachmann.

(a) Nocturne, op. 55, No. 1. (b) Polonaise, op. 53 ..... Chopin

It goes without saying that this was a delightful concert. M. de Pachmann seemed nervous and indisposed at the beginning, but he soon regained his equanimity and played as beautifully as ever. He was especially effective in the Fantaisie Impromptu and the etude op. 10, No. 3. Mme. de Pachmann also played charmingly, and Henselt's lovely little trifle, 'Si oiseau j'etais," was particularly well rendered. The popularity which they have won in America is so great that they are certain of a hearty welcome and a great success when they return next year.

ARTHUR WELD.

Boston Journal.

MORNING EDITION.

FRIDAY MORNING, MAY 16, 1890.

The De Pachmann Concert.

The farewell concert of Mr. and Mrs. Vladimir De Pachmann was given yesterday afternoon in Chickering Hall. There was a large and enthusiastic audience present, and the concert on the whole was a most enjoyable one. Mr. De Pachmann was out of sorts at the opening of the programme, the management having given him a stool instead of a chair, and he left the stage in a fit of temper, which somewhat dampened the performance of the opening numbers. In the last part of the second number he began to get into the spirit, and in the Scherzo he "smiled and smirked" and was the De Pachmann of old, playing it finely. The rest of the programme went all right, and in response to applause after the last number, he played one of Rubinstein's Barcaroles with "all his old time skill," showing that daintiness of touch and exquisite execution which no one else can equal. Mrs. De Pachmann played finely and received full as much applause as he did. She appeared to best advantage in the second group, and her rendering of "Rigandon," by Raff, was wonderfully clean and brilliant, and her encore was equally

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, MAY 18, 1890.

THE LAST DE PACHMANN CONCERT.

On Thursday afternoon, in Chickering Hall, Mr. and Mrs. De Pachmann gave their farewell concert of the season. The numbers on the programme assigned to Mr. De Pachmann were, as usual, from Chopin, five of which he had not before given in Boston. Although he evidently was not in a happy mood at the outset, he soon entered into the spirit of his work, and in several numbers did some, even for him, unusually fine playing. The scherzo, opus 31, in B flat minor was delightfully rendered, the second theme in particular being sung with exquisite expressiveness, while its rolling arpeggio accompaniment was brought out with wonderful evenness and elasticity. Of the new numbers, the nocturne, opus 37, served to display his command over double notes, and the waltz in F, opus 34,—beautiful, and much neglected,—his limpid legato and rhythmic precision. We have never before heard the study in E, opus 10, played so effectively, the unusually brisk tempo, and the accelerando through the chromatic modulation being in marked contrast to the sentimentally slow time in which it is usually taken. In the polonaise, opus 53, Mr. de Pachmann showed for the first time, as it seemed to us, genuine power, and his performance of this work, in spite of some silly trifling, was not only better than his previous one, but was the best that he has given of any of the heroic works of Chopin. Mrs. de Pachmann found ample opportunity for displaying her beautiful touch, and flexible, brilliant technique, in six numbers by Henselt, Rubinstein, Liszt, Schubert, and Saint Saens. Her playing throughout was worthy of high praise, and she again easily proved herself to be one of the most finished lady pianists who have ever been heard in Boston.

T. P. CURRIER.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, MAY 21, 1890.

ARTHUR NIKISCH, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who sails for Europe on May 28 to bring his wife and children over in September, indicates with this step the possibility that he may add his name to the list of able musicians who have become citizens of this country or, at least, permanent residents. We would welcome Mr. Nikisch with open arms, not only figuratively speaking but literally; and not only would we do so, but we know of many ladies and gentlemen in Boston who would do the same thing—that is, before his departure to bring his family over.

——Twenty-one symphonies, twenty overtures and five concertos were performed by Mr. Nikisch during the recent season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Altogether 106 works were given, sixty-six by German and forty-four by non-German composers. Beethoven led with eleven compositions, followed by Brahms and Schumann, seven each; Wagner, Weber, Dvorák, five each, &c. The following soloists were heard: Miss Gertrude Edmands, Mr. Emil Fischer, Miss Gertrude Franklin, Mrs. Steinbach-Jahns, Mr. William J. Winch, and Mrs. Walter C. Wyman (singers); Miss Adèle aus der Ohe, Mr. Carl Baermann, Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, Mr. Carl Faelten, Mr. Raphael Joseffy, and Mrs. Anna Steiniger-Clark (pianists); Mr. Timothée Adamowski, Mr. Franz Kneisel, Mr. E. M. Loeffler, Mr. Otto Roth (violinists); Mr. Anton Hekking and Mr. Leo Schulz ('cellists).

——The Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared at Central Music Hall, Chicago, Ill., last Wednesday evening. This was the first time under the bâton of Mr. Nikisch. The selections were: Liszt's "Les Préludes," Grieg's suite "Peer Gynt" and Schumann's Symphony No. 4 in D minor. Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler played the Chopin F minor concerto superbly. Mrs. Steinbach-Johns was the vocal soloist.

BOSTON HERALD.

MONDAY, MAY 26, 1890.

THE COMING POPULAR CONCERTS.

Considerable surprise has been expressed at a statement made to the effect that the license commissioners have refused to grant a license to sell ale and beer at the popular concerts in Music Hall proposed to be given the coming summer. We have just had a reminder in our city of the popular character of music in this same connection abroad. The Strauss orchestra, which was heard in Music Hall a week ago, is the orchestra of what is known as a beer garden. There, for a very small sum, it has delighted thousands, and attained a proficiency in rendering music which has been the admiration of the many who have heard it with us. The beer gardens are not only an unalloyed pleasure abroad, but the man is yet to arise there who fails to regard them as a source of public advantage as well. Those entertainments that we have in Music Hall, and which it is now desired to continue, are an attempt to establish their counterpart among us. It is a great mistake to put them under a Puritan ban. There is no public call for it, except on the part of a few people, mostly made up of men and women who know little about them from observation, and fail to appreciate the unobjectionable character of the mildly stimulating beverage that is dispensed from their tables. The sale of ale and beer is an important part of these concerts. It may be said, indeed, to be essential to their continuance. It should not be forbidden.

HOME JOURNAL.

SATURDAY, MAY 24, 1890.

The symphony orchestra has departed on its travels, but a few stories remain behind, like the tail of a comet.

Here is one. The clarinetist, who has been in the orchestra since the day when the man who is considered the best in his line was projected into retirement by Gericke, was ill. It was necessary to fill his place. There was nothing to do but to send for the clarinetist who had in years gone by done such work—that is the projected man. He was asked to substitute, and though he was much like Lichtenberg, who has never returned to the fold from which he was ejected, and felt his importance, he accepted the call with becoming condescension. He appeared at the rehearsal. After it was over he approached the business manager and announced that he should not come back again. Consternation reigned. "Why not?" was put to him. "Because," was his reply, "I have not been introduced to Mr. Nikisch." The business manager signified his willingness to repair the oversight, but the little clarinetist was on his dignity, and would not be presented in any such way as that. He asserted that it was the concert meister's place to present him. The business manager was sure that would be all right, and approached Kneisel on the subject. The violinist at once turned to the fellow musician and assured him that he would not do it, and did not consider it his place. The clarinetist with some heat assured him that if he did not know the duties of his position he would teach him; that he did not choose to exist in the estimation of the leader as a number, but proposed to enjoy his own personality, and therefore demanded to be introduced in person to Mr. Nikisch and by Mr. Kneisel. He was necessary, so he carried his point.

He staid the week out, and at the end of it he received a check for $30 from the Higginson representative, which he at once returned to them, requesting them to await until he sent his bill. The bill followed at once for $75, and it was paid. That man, though German-born, does not mean to let any Americans get the best of him, and he still finds his German pig-headedness the best thing to carry him through.

Boston Daily Traveller

THURSDAY, MAY 29, 1890.

Promenade Concerts—Theodore Thomas' Wedding—Sembrich at Berlin.

Should we not have the promenades this summer, what woe there would be in Gotham! What disappointment it would be to hundreds of those who depend on them for their only musical recreation?

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 7, 1890.

A few years ago, when his own band was at the height of its popularity and profit, Mr. Theodore Thomas wrote that "Boston, in spite of many efforts, cannot support a large, well-balanced orchestra." Since that time he has seen his own forces scattered and has had to appeal for assistance to re-establish them, while Boston has built up one of the finest orchestras in the world.

[127]

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, MAY 11, 1890.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA.

The Boston Symphony orchestra has continued its western tour during the week just ended with constant success, the concerts given having attracted great audiences of enthusiastic music lovers. On Monday evening, in Columbus, O., the instrumental soloist was Mr. Loeffler, the violinest, who gave great satisfaction in Lala's "Symphonie Espagnole." The Tuesday and Wednesday evening concerts were at Cincinnati, with Messrs. Kneisel, violin, and Hekking, 'cello, as the soloists, the former playing the Brahms concerto, and the latter a Chopin nocturne and Popper's "Papillon," both having a distinguished success. The Thursday evening concert was given at Louisville, Ky., when Mr. Hakking played the Saint-Saens 'cella concerto with great acceptance. The concerts of Friday and last evening were given at St. Louis, Mme. Bloomfield being the soloist in Litolff's pianoforte concerto in the first concert, and Mr. Schulz playing the Eckert concerto for 'cello last evening. Mme. Steinbach Jahns has sung with the orchestra in each of the cities visited, and has been very handsomely complimented wherever she has been heard.

THE BOSTON TIMES

BOSTON, SUNDAY, MAY 11, 1890.

Herr Nikisch is spoken of in the warmest terms of appreciation in the Minneapolis Saturday Spectator, which, in connection with an announcement of the appearance of the Symphony orchestra there tomorrow evening, publishes a long account of the orchestra and its conductors, Herr Nikisch receiving special description.

Boston Post

FRIDAY MORNING, MAY 16, 1890.

THE FAREWELL PACHMANN RECITAL.

That is to say, farewell until next spring, and a large and enthusiastic body of music lovers gathered in Chickering Hall yesterday afternoon to say "good-by" to these two genial artists. The following programme was played:

(a) Ballade, op. 38. (b) Fantaisie Impromptu, op. 66. (c) Scherzo, op. 31 ..... Chopin
M. de Pachmann.
(a) "Dankled nach Sturm" ..... Henselt
(b) "Si oiseau j'etais" ..... Henselt
(c) Galop ("Le Bal") ..... Rubinstein
Mme. de Pachmann.
(a) Nocturne, op. 37, No. 2. (b) Etude, op. 10, No. 3. (c) Etude, op. 25, No. 1. (d) Mazourka, op. 56, No. 2. (e) Waltz, op. 34, No. 3 ..... Chopin
M. de Pachmann.
(a) "Au bord d'une sourd" ..... Liszt
(b) Impromptu, No. 4 ..... Schubert
(c) Rigaudon ..... Raff
Mme. de Pachmann.
(a) Nocturne, op. 55, No. 1. (b) Polonaise, op. 53 ..... Chopin

It goes without saying that this was a delightful concert. M. de Pachmann seemed nervous and indisposed at the beginning, but he soon regained his equanimity and played as beautifully as ever. He was especially effective in the Fantaisie Impromptu and the etude op. 10, No. 3. Mme. de Pachmann also played charmingly, and Henselt's lovely little trifle, "Si oiseau j'etais," was particularly well rendered. The popularity which they have won in America is so great that they are certain of a hearty welcome and a great success when they return next year.

ARTHUR WELD.

Boston Journal.

MORNING EDITION.

FRIDAY MORNING, MAY 16, 1890.

The De Pachmann Concert.

The farewell concert of Mr. and Mrs. Vladimir De Pachmann was given yesterday afternoon in Chickering Hall. There was a large and enthusiastic audience present, and the concert on the whole was a most enjoyable one. Mr. De Pachmann was out of sorts at the opening of the programme, the management having given him a stool instead of a chair, and he left the stage in a fit of temper, which somewhat dampened the performance of the opening numbers. In the last part of the second number he began to get into the spirit, and in the Scherzo he "smiled and smirked" and was the De Pachmann of old, playing it finely. The rest of the programme went all right, and in response to applause after the last number, he played one of Rubinstein's Barcaroles with "all his old time skill," showing that daintiness of touch and exquisite execution which no one else can equal. Mrs. De Pachmann played finely and received full as much applause as he did. She appeared to best advantage in the second group, and her rendering of "Rigandon," by Raff, was wonderfully clean and brilliant, and her encore was equally as effective.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, MAY 18, 1890.

THE LAST DE PACHMANN CONCERT.

On Thursday afternoon, in Chickering Hall, Mr. and Mrs. De Pachmann gave their farewell concert of the season. The numbers on the programme assigned to Mr. De Pachmann were, as usual, from Chopin, five of which he had not before given in Boston. Although he evidently was not in a happy mood at the outset, he soon entered into the spirit of his work, and in several numbers did some, even for him, unusually fine playing. The scherzo, opus 31, in B flat minor was delightfully rendered, the second theme in particular being sung with exquisite expressiveness, while its rolling arpeggio accompaniment was brought out with wonderful evenness and elasticity. Of the new numbers, the nocturne, opus 37, served to display his command over double notes, and the waltz in F, opus 34,—beautiful, and much neglected,—his limpid legato and rhythmic precision. We have never before heard the study in E, opus 10, played so effectively, the unusually brisk tempo, and the accelerando through the chromatic modulation being in marked contrast to the sentimentally slow time in which it is usually taken. In the polonaise, opus 53, Mr. de Pachmann showed for the first time, as it seemed to us, genuine power, and his performance of this work, in spite of some silly trifling, was not only better than his previous one, but was the best that he has given of any of the heroic works of Chopin. Mrs. de Pachmann found ample opportunity for displaying her beautiful touch, and flexible, brilliant technique, in six numbers by Henselt, Rubinstein, Liszt, Schubert, and Saint Saens. Her playing throughout was worthy of high praise, and she again easily proved herself to be one of the most finished lady pianists who have ever been heard in Boston.

T. P. CURRIER.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, MAY 21, 1890.

ARTHUR NIKISCH, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who sails for Europe on May 28 to bring his wife and children over in September, indicates with this step the possibility that he may add his name to the list of able musicians who have become citizens of this country or, at least, permanent residents. We would welcome Mr. Nikisch with open arms, not only figuratively speaking but literally; and not only would we do so, but we know of many ladies and gentlemen in Boston who would do the same thing—that is, before his departure to bring his family over.

——Twenty-one symphonies, twenty overtures and five concertos were performed by Mr. Nikisch during the recent season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Altogether 106 works were given, sixty-six by German and forty-four by non-German composers. Beethoven led with eleven compositions, followed by Brahms and Schumann, seven each; Wagner, Weber, Dvorák, five each, &c. The following soloists were heard: Miss Gertrude Edmands, Mr. Emil Fischer, Miss Gertrude Franklin, Mrs. Steinbach-Jahns, Mr. William J. Winch, and Mrs. Walter C. Wyman (singers); Miss Adèle aus der Ohe, Mr. Carl Baermann, Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, Mr. Carl Faelten, Mr. Raphael Joseffy, and Mrs. Anna Steiniger-Clark (pianists); Mr. Timothée Adamowski, Mr. Franz Kneisel, Mr. E. M. Loeffler, Mr. Otto Roth (violinists); Mr. Anton Hekking and Mr. Leo Schulz ('cellists).

——The Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared at Central Music Hall, Chicago, Ill., last Wednesday evening. This was the first time under the bâton of Mr. Nikisch. The selections were: Liszt's "Les Préludes," Grieg's suite "Peer Gynt" and Schumann's Symphony No. 4 in D minor. Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler played the Chopin F minor concerto superbly. Mrs. Steinbach-Johns was the vocal soloist.

BOSTON HERALD.

MONDAY, MAY 26, 1890.

THE COMING POPULAR CONCERTS.

Considerable surprise has been expressed at a statement made to the effect that the license commissioners have refused to grant a license to sell ale and beer at the popular concerts in Music Hall proposed to be given the coming summer. We have just had a reminder in our city of the popular character of music in this same connection abroad. The Strauss orchestra, which was heard in Music Hall a week ago, is the orchestra of what is known as a beer garden. There, for a very small sum, it has delighted thousands, and attained a proficiency in rendering music which has been the admiration of the many who have heard it with us. The beer gardens are not only an unalloyed pleasure abroad, but the man is yet to arise there who fails to regard them as a source of public advantage as well. Those entertainments that we have in Music Hall, and which it is now desired to continue, are an attempt to establish their counterpart among us. It is a great mistake to put them under a Puritan ban. There is no public call for it, except on the part of a few people, mostly made up of men and women who know little about them from observation, and fail to appreciate the unobjectionable character of the mildly stimulating beverage that is dispensed from their tables. The sale of ale and beer is an important part of these concerts. It may be said, indeed, to be essential to their continuance. It should not be forbidden.

HOME JOURNAL.

SATURDAY, MAY 24, 1890.

The symphony orchestra has departed on its travels, but a few stories remain behind, like the tail of a comet.

Here is one. The clarinetist, who has been in the orchestra since the day when the man who is considered the best in his line was projected into retirement by Gericke, was ill. It was necessary to fill his place. There was nothing to do but to send for the clarinetist who had in years gone by done such work—that is the projected man. He was asked to substitute, and though he was much like Lichtenberg, who has never returned to the fold from which he was ejected, and felt his importance, he accepted the call with becoming condescension. He appeared at the rehearsal. After it was over he approached the business manager and announced that he should not come back again. Consternation reigned. "Why not?" was put to him. "Because," was his reply, "I have not been introduced to Mr. Nikisch." The business manager signified his willingness to repair the oversight, but the little clarinetist was on his dignity, and would not be presented in any such way as that. He asserted that it was the concert meister's place to present him. The business manager was sure that would be all right, and approached Kneisel on the subject. The violinist at once turned to the fellow musician and assured him that he would not do it, and did not consider it his place. The clarinetist with some heat assured him that if he did not know the duties of his position he would teach him; that he did not choose to exist in the estimation of the leader as a number, but proposed to enjoy his own personality, and therefore demanded to be introduced in person to Mr. Nikisch and by Mr. Kneisel. He was necessary, so he carried his point.

He staid the week out, and at the end of it he received a check for $30 from the Higginson representative, which he at once returned to them, requesting them to await until he sent his bill. The bill followed at once for $75, and it was paid. That man, though German-born, does not mean to let any Americans get the best of him, and he still finds his German pig-headedness the best thing to carry him through.

Boston Daily Traveller

THURSDAY, MAY 29, 1890.

Promenade Concerts—Theodore Thomas' Wedding—Sembrich at Berlin.

Should we not have the promenades this summer, what woe there would be in Gotham! What disappointment it would be to hundreds of those who depend on them for their only musical recreation?

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 7, 1890.

A few years ago, when his own band was at the height of its popularity and profit, Mr. Theodore Thomas wrote that "Boston, in spite of many efforts, cannot support a large, well-balanced orchestra." Since that time he has seen his own forces scattered and has had to appeal for assistance to re-establish them, while Boston has built up one of the finest orchestras in the world.

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, MAY 11, 1890.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA.

The Boston Symphony orchestra has continued its western tour during the week just ended with constant success, the concerts given having attracted great audiences of enthusiastic music lovers. On Monday evening, in Columbus, O., the instrumental soloist was Mr. Loeffler, the violinest, who gave great satisfaction in Lala's "Symphonie Espagnole." The Tuesday and Wednesday evening concerts were at Cincinnati, with Messrs. Kneisel, violin, and Hekking, 'cello, as the soloists, the former playing the Brahms concerto, and the latter a Chopin nocturne and Popper's "Papillon," both having a distinguished success. The Thursday evening concert was given at Louisville, Ky., when Mr. Hakking played the Saint-Saens 'cella concerto with great acceptance. The concerts of Friday and last evening were given at St. Louis, Mme. Bloomfield being the soloist in Litolff's pianoforte concerto in the first concert, and Mr. Schulz playing the Eckert concerto for 'cello last evening. Mme. Steinbach Jahns has sung with the orchestra in each of the cities visited, and has been very handsomely complimented wherever she has been heard.

THE BOSTON TIMES

BOSTON, SUNDAY, MAY 11, 1890.

Herr Nikisch is spoken of in the warmest terms of appreciation in the Minneapolis Saturday Spectator, which, in connection with an announcement of the appearance of the Symphony orchestra there tomorrow evening, publishes a long account of the orchestra and its conductors, Herr Nikisch receiving special description.

Boston Post

FRIDAY MORNING, MAY 16, 1890.

THE FAREWELL PACHMANN RECITAL.

That is to say, farewell until next spring, and a large and enthusiastic body of music lovers gathered in Chickering Hall yesterday afternoon to say "good-by" to these two genial artists. The following programme was played:

(a) Ballade, op. 38. (b) Fantaisie Impromptu, op. 66. (c) Scherzo, op. 31.....Chopin
M. de Pachmann.

(a) "Danklied nach Sturm".....Henselt
(b) "Si oiseau j'etais".....Henselt
(c) Galop ("Le Bal").....Rubinstein
Mme. de Pachmann.

(a) Nocturne, op. 37, No. 2. (b) Etude, op. 10, No. 3. (c) Etude, op. 25, No. 1. (d) Mazourka, op. 56, No. 2. (e) Waltz, op. 34, No. 3.....Chopin
M. de Pachmann.

(a) "Au bord d'une sourd".....Liszt
(b) Impromptu, No. 4.....Schubert
(c) Rigaudon.....Raff
Mme. de Pachmann.

(a) Nocturne, op. 55, No. 1. (b) Polonaise, op. 53.....Chopin

It goes without saying that this was a delightful concert. M. de Pachmann seemed nervous and indisposed at the beginning, but he soon regained his equanimity and played as beautifully as ever. He was especially effective in the Fantaisie Impromptu and the etude op. 10, No. 3. Mme. de Pachmann also played charmingly, and Henselt's lovely little ballade, "Si oiseau j'etais," was particularly well rendered. The popularity which they have won in America is so great that they are certain of a hearty welcome and a great success when they return next year.

ARTHUR WELD.

Boston Journal.

MORNING EDITION.

FRIDAY MORNING, MAY 16, 1890.

The De Pachmann Concert.

The farewell concert of Mr. and Mrs. Vladimir De Pachmann was given yesterday afternoon in Chickering Hall. There was a large and enthusiastic audience present, and the concert on the whole was a most enjoyable one. Mr. De Pachmann was out of sorts at the opening of the programme, the management having given him a stool instead of a chair, and he left the stage in a fit of temper, which somewhat dampened the performance of the opening numbers. In the last part of the second number he began to get into the spirit, and in the Scherzo he "smiled and smirked" and was the De Pachmann of old, playing it finely. The rest of the programme went all right, and in response to applause after the last number, he played one of Rubinstein's Barcaroles with "all his old time skill," showing that daintiness of touch and exquisite execution which no one else can equal. Mrs. De Pachmann played finely and received full as much applause as he did. She appeared to best advantage in the second group, and her rendering of "Rigandon," by Raff, was wonderfully clean and brilliant, and her encore was equally as effective.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, MAY 18, 1890.

THE LAST DE PACHMANN CONCERT.

On Thursday afternoon, in Chickering Hall, Mr. and Mrs. De Pachmann gave their farewell concert of the season. The numbers on the programme assigned to Mr. De Pachmann were, as usual, from Chopin, five of which he had not before given in Boston. Although he evidently was not in a happy mood at the outset, he soon entered into the spirit of his work, and in several numbers did some, even for him, unusually fine playing. The scherzo, opus 31, in B flat minor was delightfully rendered, the second theme in particular being sung with exquisite expressiveness, while its rolling arpeggio accompaniment was brought out with wonderful evenness and elasticity. Of the new numbers, the nocturne, opus 37, served to display his command over double notes, and the waltz in F, opus 34,—beautiful, and much neglected,—his limpid legato and rhythmic precision. We have never before heard the study in E, opus 10, played so effectively, the unusually brisk tempo, and the accelerando through the chromatic modulation being in marked contrast to the sentimentally slow time in which it is usually taken. In the polonaise, opus 53, Mr. de Pachmann showed for the first time, as it seemed to us, genuine power, and his performance of this work, in spite of some silly trifling, was not only better than his previous one, but was the best that he has given of any of the heroic works of Chopin. Mrs. de Pachmann found ample opportunity for displaying her beautiful touch, and flexible, brilliant technique, in six numbers by Henselt, Rubinstein, Liszt, Schubert, and Saint Saens. Her playing throughout was worthy of high praise, and she again easily proved herself to be one of the most finished lady pianists who have ever been heard in Boston.

T. P. CURRIER.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, MAY 21, 1890.

ARTHUR NIKISCH, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who sails for Europe on May 28 to bring his wife and children over in September, indicates with this step the possibility that he may add his name to the list of able musicians who have become citizens of this country or, at least, permanent residents. We would welcome Mr. Nikisch with open arms, not only figuratively speaking but literally; and not only would we do so, but we know of many ladies and gentlemen in Boston who would do the same thing—that is, before his departure to bring his family over.

——Twenty-one symphonies, twenty overtures and five concertos were performed by Mr. Nikisch during the recent season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Altogether 106 works were given, sixty-six by German and forty-four by non-German composers. Beethoven led with eleven compositions, followed by Brahms and Schumann, seven each; Wagner, Weber, Dvorák, five each, &c. The following soloists were heard: Miss Gertrude Edmands, Mr. Emil Fischer, Miss Gertrude Franklin, Mrs. Steinbach-Jahns, Mr. William J. Winch, and Mrs. Walter C. Wyman (singers); Miss Adèle aus der Ohe, Mr. Carl Baermann, Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, Mr. Carl Faelten, Mr. Raphael Joseffy, and Mrs. Anna Steiniger-Clark (pianists); Mr. Timothée Adamowski, Mr. Franz Kneisel, Mr. E. M. Loeffler, Mr. Otto Roth (violinists); Mr. Anton Hekking and Mr. Leo Schulz ('cellists).

——The Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared at Central Music Hall, Chicago, Ill., last Wednesday evening. This was the first time under the bâton of Mr. Nikisch. The selections were: Liszt's "Les Préludes," Grieg's suite "Peer Gynt" and Schumann's Symphony No. 4 in D minor. Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler played the Chopin F minor concerto superbly. Mrs. Steinbach-Johns was the vocal soloist.

BOSTON HERALD.

MONDAY, MAY 26, 1890.

THE COMING POPULAR CONCERTS.

Considerable surprise has been expressed at a statement made to the effect that the license commissioners have refused to grant a license to sell ale and beer at the popular concerts in Music Hall proposed to be given the coming summer. We have just had a reminder in our city of the popular character of music in this same connection abroad. The Strauss orchestra, which was heard in Music Hall a week ago, is the orchestra of what is known as a beer garden. There, for a very small sum, it has delighted thousands, and attained a proficiency in rendering music which has been the admiration of the many who have heard it with us. The beer gardens are not only an unalloyed pleasure abroad, but the man is yet to arise there who fails to regard them as a source of public advantage as well. Those entertainments that we have in Music Hall, and which it is now desired to continue, are an attempt to establish their counterpart among us. It is a great mistake to put them under a Puritan ban. There is no public call for it, except on the part of a few people, mostly made up of men and women who know little about them from observation, and fail to appreciate the unobjectionable character of the mildly stimulating beverage that is dispensed from their tables. The sale of ale and beer is an important part of these concerts. It may be said, indeed, to be essential to their continuance. It should not be forbidden.

HOME JOURNAL.

SATURDAY, MAY 24, 1890

The symphony orchestra has departed on its travels, but a few stories remain behind, like the tail of a comet.

Here is one. The clarinetist, who has been in the orchestra since the day when the man who is considered the best in his line was projected into retirement by Gerricke, was ill. It was necessary to fill his place. There was nothing to do but to send for the clarinetist who had in years gone by done such work—that is the projected man. He was asked to substitute, and though he was much like Lichtenberg, who has never returned to the fold from which he was ejected, and felt his importance, he accepted the call with becoming condescension. He appeared at the rehearsal. After it was over he approached the business manager and announced that he should not come back again. Consternation reigned. "Why not?" was put to him. "Because," was his reply, "I have not been introduced to Mr. Nikisch." The business manager signified his willingness to repair the oversight, but the little clarinetist was on his dignity, and would not be presented in any such way as that. He asserted that it was the concert meister's place to present him. The business manager was sure that would be all right, and approached Kneisel on the subject. The violinist at once turned to the fellow musician and assured him that he would not do it, and did not consider it his place. The clarinetist with some heat assured him that if he did not know the duties of his position he would teach him; that he did not choose to exist in the estimation of the leader as a number, but proposed to enjoy his own personality, and therefore demanded to be introduced in person to Mr. Nikisch and by Mr. Kneisel. He was necessary, so he carried his point.

He staid the week out, and at the end of it he received a check for $30 from the Higginson representative, which he at once returned to them, requesting them to await until he sent his bill. The bill followed at once for $75, and it was paid. That man, though German-born, does not mean to let any Americans get the best of him, and he still finds his German pig-headedness the best thing to carry him through.

Boston Daily Traveller

THURSDAY, MAY 29, 1890.

Promenade Concerts—Theodore Thomas' Wedding—Sembrich at Berlin.

Should we not have the promenades this summer, what woe there would be in Gotham! What disappointment it would be to hundreds of those who depend on them for their only musical recreation?

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 7, 1890.

A few years ago, when his own band was at the height of its popularity and profit, Mr. Theodore Thomas wrote that "Boston, in spite of many efforts, cannot support a large, well-balanced orchestra." Since that time he has seen his own forces scattered and has had to appeal for assistance to re-establish them, while Boston has built up one of the finest orchestras in the world.

[127]

[128]

PHILADELPHIA PRESS.

APRIL 29, 1890.

Last Concert of the Season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The fifth and last concert of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given last night at the Academy of Music. The audience was probably the largest which has assisted at any concert this season. Every seat was filled, the steps at the side were utilized and standing room was at a premium, even the top gallery was well occupied. Such a scene as the Academy presented last night was a pleasant change from the appearance of the the house when the Boston Orchestra first visited this city and began to popularize orchestral music, a task at which Theodore Thomas had gallantly toiled for years before and with scant success. The city owes the Boston Orchestra a debt of gratitude and this season, at least, it has very well repaid the debt by testing the capacity of the Academy at each concert but one. It is to be hoped that next season the management will be able to arrange to increase the number of concerts to be given here.

Mr. Nikisch, the talented conductor, has not always been particularly happy in his programmes, but with last night's selections no fault cound be found. It began with Beethoven's fourth symphony, in B flat which has been so seldom played here recently that it was practically a novelty. It seems strange that this lovely work should be so seldom played. In New York, for instance, a city which rejoices in three or four orchestras of the first-class, it has only been performed twice in three years. Although written in the stormy period which followed the production of "Fidelio" it is, for Bethoven, an exceedingly bright and joyous composition. The dreamy adassio is somewhat melancholy, perhaps, but it is with the sadness of the lover who has quarreled with his mistress, not that of one who is at war with fate. The symphony has been called by one eminent critic a love poem, and the slow movement certainly authorizes the suggestion. It was beautifully played. The minuet was given with delicious crispness and the finale with superb power.

It was rather a risky thing to place a second symphony on the programme, more especially when the first was by the great master. Yet the two movements (adagio and scherzo) from Frederick Hymen Cowen's "Scandanavian" symphony proved to be very pleasant compositions. The tone was somewhat thin after the Beethoven work but the schergo, especially, was a dainty and very taking movement. It is curious that Cowen should seek inspiration in the wild Norwegian fjords rather than in the semi tropical West Indies where he was born.

The next number on the programme made the hit of the evening. Paganini's well known "moto perpetuo," arranged by David, by thirty-two violins in unison, gave Mr. Nikisch an opportunity of displaying the perfection of this portion of his string band. The composition is exceedingly difficult, as the bow never leaves the strings for a second from beginning to end. The tempo is marked by a piano accompaniment (played by Mr. Nikisch), and the tone rises and falls from softest pianissimo to a loud crescendo in a wave of melody. The performance was simply delightful, and the applause at its close was fairly tumultuous. The violinists bowed their thanks in platoons, but the audience was on its mettle and insisted upon a repetition of the number and got it. The always popular overture to the "Flying Dutchman" brought a very unusually delightful concert to a close.

The soloist of the evening was Madame Steinbach-Jahns, a soprano. In Wagner's declamatory music she would probably do well, and it may have been in that class of music she acquired the reputation she is said to have in Germany, but last night her voice was hardly under control at times, her intonation uncertain and her higher register especially, was unpleasant. She is evidently well trained, for her phrasing is good and she sings with dramatic power. Her first number was "Agnes'" scena in the first act of "Der Freischutz," and she afterward sang three songs, with piano, "O Lieb," by Liszt, "Hoffnung," by Grieg, and a very effective ballad by Nikisch (who played the accompaniments), which he has named "Sehnsucht." Madame Steinbach-Jahns is a tall, handsome woman of about 28. She was recalled several times after each appearance.

LEDGER AND TRANSCRIPT

Philadelphia, Tuesday, April 29, 1890.

Academy of Music—Boston Symphony Orchestra.

There was a large standing contingent of the audience that crowded the Academy of Music last night, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra made its closing concert of the season one fully worthy so fine an attendance, The original programme had contained but three distinctly orchestral compositions, the fourth (B flat) symphony of Beethoven, a couple of excerpts from Cowen's third symphony, and Wagner's "Flying Dutchman" overture at the close. To these were added Paganini's "Perpetual Motion" piece, performed by the combined violins of the orchestra, and it proved the most popular feature of the concert. The violinists, grouped at the front of the stage, played without direction (other than very unobtrusive simple chords that their conductor, Mr. Nikisch, gave from a piano), but anything finer in the way of perfect drill than they exhibited would be difficult even to imagine. It was a show piece in the best sense. It may be said in brief, as to all the playing of the orchestra, that it has done nothing better than it did last night, particularly in the Beethoven symphony, in which vigor, precision, delicacy and polish were brilliantly combined. The introductory adagio was given with fine breadth; the adagio proper (second movement) was one of the loveliest performances ever heard here, and in the livelier portions of the symphony, as well as later in the evening, the band played with unwonted fire and spirit. As before, Mr. Nikisch, whose readings are immensely effective, barring a tendency to drag slow movements to the verge of sluggishness, conducted without notes, and evidenced so intimate a knowledge of the several compositions that he seemed to know the individual part of every instrument—a fact that has a great deal to do with the superb impressiveness produced. The unfamiliar number was that which presented two movements from Cowen's Third Symphony, No. 8, in C minor, "The Scandinavian," as he calls it, and whose subject the explanatory programme set forth with a comprehensiveness that made the pictures that he attempts in it the more satisfactory, if not greatly clearer to the general listener. In this work the classical and romantic style is blended quite ingeniously with the realistic and characteristic. The adagio is made up of music that would suggest to many some such scenes as it has for its themes, without the aid of the story. The author is less felicitous in handling the other movement given (the Scherzo), but it, too, made a favorable impression, and would doubtless improve on acquaintance.

Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, the soloist, almost completely justified the praise that preceded her. She has a fine soprano voice, fresh, sympathetic, and agreeable in quality, and of uncommon beauty of tone in the middle division. It is flexible and well cultivated, too, but whether she is unable to appreciate tones keenly or has some vocal defect of an unusual nature, she habitually failed to fill out certain notes whenever she sang mezza voce, which, of course, gave portions of her work the same effect as if she had sung these tones flat. In this way the beauty of the loveliest part of her aria from Weber's "Freischutz"—the Prayer—(which was substituted for the Mozart "Seraglio" aria first assigned her) was greatly marred. She was more successful in the portions that required chiefly skillful and spirited vocalization, and afterward in songs with piano accompaniment, especially one of Grieg's "Hoffnung," which she sang with admirable effect. Her reception was in the nature of an ovation, and Mme. Steinbach-Jahns may feel well assured, from the impression she made last night, that she can count upon a cordial welcome if she should desire a reappearance here.

The Times

PHILADELPHIA, APRIL 29, 1890.

LAST SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The Close of the Boston Orchestra's Season at the Academy.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the fifth and last concert of the present season at the Academy of Music last evening. The programme was very bright and attractive and beautifully displayed the fine tone and delicate execution of this admirable organization. Mr. Nikisch's treatment of the fourth symphony proved as daintily poetical as was to have been expected. In some of the Beethoven symphonies his style has seemed small and trivial, but it was much more satisfactory in this joyous work, and nearly all of the movements were entirely enjoyable.

In point of execution there could be nothing more desired in the adagio and scherzo of Cowen's Scandinavian symphony, a very poetical and beautiful work, with a great deal of ingenious instrumentation that occasionally somewhat obscures the thought. The performance of Paganini's "Moto perpetua" upon the whole body of violins was a tour de force most creditable to the discipline of the band, and though it had little artistic value it elicited rapturous applause.

The remaining number of the programme was the familiar "Flying Dutchman" overture. The soloist was Madame Steinbach-Jahns, a German soprano of evident experience, who sang the "Freischutz" aria and a group of modern songs. One of these, "Longing," was by Mr. Nikisch, who played the piano accompaniments with charming delicacy and sentiment.

THE RECORD.

Philadelphia, April 29, 1890.

Last evening the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the concluding concert of its series in this city, at the Academy of Music. An instrumental novelty was a portion of Cowen's Scandinavian Symphony, an adagio and a scherzo, both written with admirable skill, and full of pleasing suggestiveness. Beethoven's Fourth Symphony and the "Flying Dutchman" overture, with songs by Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, a German soprano of some reputation but no great degree of vocal excellence, made up the rest of the programme.

NORTH AMERICAN PHILADELPHIA, TUESDAY, APRIL 29.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT.

There was another great crowd at the Academy of Music last evening, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Nikisch, gave its closing concert here for the present season. The symphony, which came first, was Beethoven's in B flat, No. 4, and was played with splendid fire and finely appreciative feeling, under Mr. Nikisch's magnetic and inspiring leadership. A perfect clearness of insight as to the composer's intention and a ready responsiveness to his moods, together with a masterly understanding of the best means to give the music all its proper effectiveness, were the distinctive features of Mr. Nikisch's interpretation of this great work. Perhaps the most striking of the four movements was the minuet, but all were brilliantly performed and deservedly applauded. The other orchestral numbers were the overture to "The Flying Dutchman," which went superbly, and two movements of Cowen's Scandinavian Symphony, an uncommonly good piece of programme music, which received a most poetic and animated rendering and seemed to please the audience mightily. In order to display the virtuosity of his violins, Mr. Nikisch had them play in unison Paganini's well-known "Moto Perpetuo." This formed a severe test of their ability to keep together, but they endured the ordeal with entire success. The thirty-two violins sounded like one instrument, and the music was played without any abatement of solo rapidity, that is to say, prestissimo. It was rapturously encored, and had to be repeated. The soloist of the occasion was Mme. Steinbach-Jahn, a German prima donna of prepossessing appearance, who sang the great soprano air from "Der Freischutz" and some songs with the piano by Liszt, Nikisch and Grieg in a manner that elicited loud applause. She has a strong soprano voice, but last evening, for some reason or other, it seemed to be imperfectly under control, and the result was some measure of disappointment. It will be a pleasure to hear Mme. Steinbach-Jahn again when she is less nervous, or has a clearer idea of the acoustics of the building. As it was, her singing, especially in the adagio of the "prayer" scene, was disappointing. Mr. Nikisch proved himself an ideal accompanist.

Philadelphia Inquirer.

TUESDAY, APRIL 29, 1890.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA.

The Closing Concert of Its Fifth Season Fills the Academy of Music.

It is scarcely probable that the majority of the great audience which attended the concert of the Boston Orchestra last evening at the Academy of Music was prepared for the excellence of the entertainment. Audiences here have liberally attended the concerts of the Boston Orchestra from its first season. But it has been necessary to praise its work during several seasons, chiefly for the extraordinary power and purity of the string tones. Since Mr. Nikisch replaced the former leader a change, a constantly increasing change, has been manifest at every concert. The orchestra has become better balanced. The tones of wood, wind and brass have been improved. Even the strings, more particularly the violoncellos and violas, have received a softening of tone and a delicacy of treatment which they never had before. The bassoons, oboes, flutes, horns were last night, one and all, simply delightful. The opening number of the concert, Beethoven's B flat symphony, No. 4, very thoroughly illustrated these improvements. The symphonies of Beethoven can never be heard frequently enough, and for some unknown cause the fourth is even less familiar than some of the others. It is certain that the symphony was never so well played before in this city. Mr. Nikisch led it, as is his custom, without any score before him, but his methods of interpretation are so distinct that they convey all the meanings quite as well to the audience as to the orchestra. It is impossible in this space to describe or explain the readings by Mr. Nikisch, of this symphony, in all of its four noble and precious movements, which seemed particularly worthy of commendation. It was a great conception and fastened the beauties of the symphony forever upon the mind. Nothing was made more apparent than the astonishing fertility of invention in producing new effects by the use of different solo instruments which was Beethoven's wonderful feature in all of his symphonies, and in none more than in the Fourth.

The second most important number of the orchestra was a performance of two movements from the Scandinavian Symphony, by that very excellent and interesting English composer, Mr. Cowen. The first movement, "A Summer Evening on the Fjord," was very beautiful throughout. The scherzo which followed was evidently prepared to illustrate the virtuosity of the solo instruments all through the orchestra.

The vocalist of this symphony concert was Madame Steinbach-Jahns, a distinguished prima donna, from Germany, who, it is understood, has visited this country by the personal invitation of Mr. Nikisch. She sang with the orchestra the celebrated Weber scene and aria from the second act of Der Freischutz. Her voice is very pure and powerful and her method essentially dramatic. Later in the evening three songs were given by her, accompanied by Mr. Nikisch on the piano. All of these developed particularly the dramatic qualities of the singer, and she would, if she cared to do so, make a great impression in German Opera.

It is a matter of regret to music lovers that this season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has ended, but its great success renders succeeding ones tolerably certain.

THE SUN.

BALTIMORE, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 30, 1890.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Lyceum Theatre.

The closing concert of the series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given last night at the Lyceum Theatre, and attracted one of the largest audiences that have attended these grand performances this season. Mr. Arthur Nikisch, the leader, has won his way steadily into the favor of the music lovers here, and has established his popularity beyond doubt. He is unquestionably a great leader, different in his style from the majority of conductors who have been seen here, but showing an energy and concentration in his work that have been productive of the happiest results. The orchestra under his leadership has certainly not lost in breadth and fullness of tone, and has gained in spirit and warmth. The strings are in superb form, and in their great, full chord and so clear and true, and their graceful, vigorous execution breathe the very spirit of music. The wind is also complete in every respect, and the whole orchestra well balanced and under good control. The performance of the Schumann symphony in B flat was a rare treat. Schumann has called it the "spring" symphony, and justly so, for it is full of the beauty of nature and of bright, happy melody. The Tschaikowsky number, an overture fantasie—"Romeo and Juliet"—was thoroughly interesting, and the closing orchestral selection, Rubinstein's sprightly "Bal Costume," although of a lighter and more popular order than the other numbers and those usually performed by this orchestra, was exceedingly graceful and showy, and was received with vigorous applause. Madame Steinbach-Johns, soprano, made her first appearance in the city and created a very favorable impression. She was associated with Mr. Nikisch in his musical work at Leipzig, and has just begun a tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Her principal number, the aria from Weber's "De Freischutz," was given a most musical rendition and immediately established the soprano as a singer of no ordinary ability. In the beautiful prayer her voice, so tender, womanly and expressive, was heard to wonderful advantage, and in the contrasting brilliant passages following it she showed dramatic force and fine breadth and strength, without the shouting that so many dramatic singers indulge in and seem to think necessary to produce a stirring effect. The selection was sung rather slowly, and dragged perceptably at times, but with this exception it was sung with excellent expression, style and pure intonation. Mr. Timothee Adamowski was the violin soloist, and performed two movements from a concerto by Saint-Saens. He has won many audiences in Baltimore since his appearance during the season with the Adamowski quartette, and received a warm greeting. His performance was enjoyable, but he was not at his best, and seemed somewhat nervous and uncertain. This was apparent at times in his intonation and execution of rapid passages, but he is an excellent performer and plays with musical feeling and good conception. The soloists were both recalled, and the conductor bowed his acknowledgments repeatedly to the audience. The season has been a successful one in every way, and the concerts have been among the most enjoyable events in Baltimore.

Chronicle AND COMMERCIAL ADVERTISER

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 30, 1890.

MUSIC AT THE LYCEUM.

Last of the Concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For its fifth and last concert of the series the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave an exceedingly varied program, divided among the works of seven composers, and presenting the Russian, German and French modern schools of music. It began with the Russian Tschaikowski, and ended with the Russian Rubinstein. The French were represented by two movements of the Saint Saens violin concerto, superbly rendered by Mr. Timothee Adamowski. The selections were the aria from "Der Freischuetz," sung by Madame Steinbach-Johns, soprano; the Schumann Symphony No. 1, in B flat, and songs with piano by Schumann, Liszt and Goldmark.

The Schumann Symphony was the principle work of the evening. Although it was Schumann's first complete orchestral work, it is undoubtedly his best. It is in the symphonic form, but full of the picturesque, contrasting dialoging, daintly syncopating and other peculiarly Schumann effects. It was composed soon after he had won the lady he had struggled for so long. He was in his happiest time of life, and the work fairly bubbles over with gladness. He called it his "Spring Symphony," and it is well named. The orchestra rendered it superbly, giving altogether the best performance of their excellent season.

In fact, the program was the best the orchestra has given this year—all the work being for full modern orchestra. The entire concert was heartily enjoyed.

THE MORNING HERALD

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 30, 1890.

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The Last This Season and a Very Enjoyable One It Was.

The final concert of the season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given at the Lyceum Theatre last night. Mr. Arthur Nikisch was conductor. The audience was larger than at any previous performance. There were two soloists, Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, of Leipsic, soprano, and Mr. Timothee Adamowski, violin. This was the first appearance of this distinguished soprano in Baltimore, and she was most warmly received and encored. Tschaikowsky's overture-fantasie "Romeo and Juliet" was the first number of the programme. This is the first time any of this celebrated composer's works have been on the programmes of this orchestra, and it was excellently rendered. An aria from Weber's "Der Freischutz" was the next, followed by Saint-Saens' two movements from concerto for violin and Schumann's "Spring" symphony, which emanated from his pen during the happiest period of his life, and which witnesses, it is conceded, his forward stride in the technique of composition. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns then sung "Widmung," "Der Fischer Knabe" and "Die Quelle." Rubinstein's "Bal Costume" was the last number, which was delightfully rendered.

The orchestra leaves here to-night for Washington, whence it goes to Richmond. A four weeks' trip West as far as St. Paul and Minneapolis will then be undertaken. Louisville, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit, Pittsburg, Cleveland and Buffalo are on the list.

Mr. Nikisch, the conductor, says they have a very bright outlook ahead for their trip, as in all but two cities houses are guaranteed to them.

New-York Daily Tribune

FOUNDED BY HORACE GREELEY

THURSDAY, MAY 1, 1890.

A SYMPHONY CONCERT IN WASHINGTON.

Washington, April 30.—The closing concert in the series of four by the Boston Symphony orchestra, at Lincoln Hall to-night, was a fitting close of the musical season. As at the proceeding concerts, the house was packed with a cultivated and enthusiastic audience. The soloist, Madame Steinbach-Jahns, scored a signal success; and the features of the orchestra work were the Schumann symphony, which was finely played, and the Bal Costume of Rubinstein, the swing and dash of the latter composition exciting the applause of the audience.

[128]

E PHILADELPHIA PRESS.
Y, APRIL 29, 1890.

Last Concert of the Season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The fifth and last concert of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given last night at the Academy of Music. The audience was probably the largest which has assisted at any concert this season. Every seat was filled, the steps at the side were utilized, and standing room was at a premium, even the top gallery was well occupied. Such a scene as the Academy presented last night was a pleasant change from the appearance of the the house when the Boston Orchestra first visited this city and began to popularize orchestral music, a task at which Theodore Thomas had gallantly toiled for years before and with scant success. The city owes the Boston Orchestra a debt of gratitude and this season, at least, it has very well repaid the debt by testing the capacity of the Academy at each concert but one. It is to be hoped that next season the management will be able to arrange to increase the number of concerts to be given here.

Mr. Nikisch, the talented conductor, has not always been particularly happy in his programmes, but with last night's selections no fault cound be found. It began with Beethoven's fourth symphony, in B flat which has been so seldom played here recently that it was practically a novelty. It seems strange that this lovely work should be so seldom played. In New York, for instance, a city which rejoices in three or four orchestras of the first-class, it has only been performed twice in three years. Although written in the stormy period which followed the production of "Fidelio" it is, for Bethoven, an exceedingly bright and joyous composition. The dreamy adassio is somewhat melancholy, perhaps, but it is with the sadness of the lover who has quarreled with his mistress, not that of one who is at war with fate. The symphony has been called by one eminent critic a love poem, and the slow movement certainly authorizes the suggestion. It was beautifully played. The minuet was given with delicious crispness and the finale with superb power.

It was rather a risky thing to place a second symphony on the programme, more especially when the first was by the great master. Yet the two movements (adagio and scherzo) from Frederick Hymen Cowen's "Scandanavian" symphony proved to be very pleasant compositions. The tone was somewhat thin after the Beethoven work but the schergo, especially, was a dainty and very taking movement. It is curious that Cowen should seek inspiration in the wild Norwegian fjords rather than in the semi tropical West Indies where he was born.

The next number on the programme made the hit of the evening. Paganini's well known "moto perpetuo," arranged by David, by thirty-two violins in unison, gave Mr. Nikisch an opportunity of displaying the perfection of this portion of his string band. The composition is exceedingly difficult, as the bow never leaves the strings for a second from beginning to end. The tempo is marked by a piano accompaniment (played by Mr. Nikisch), and the tone rises and falls from softest pianissimo to a loud crescendo in a wave of melody. The performance was simply delightful, and the applause at its close was fairly tumultuous. The violinists bowed their thanks in platoons, but the audience was on its mettle and insisted upon a repetition of the number and got it. The always popular overture to the "Flying Dutchman" brought a very unusually delightful concert to a close.

The soloist of the evening was Madame Steinbach-Jahns, a soprano. In Wagner's declamatory music she would probably do well, and it may have been in that class of music she acquired the reputation she is said to have in Germany, but last night her voice was hardly under control at times, her intonation uncertain and her higher register especially, was unpleasant. She is evidently well trained, for her phrasing is good and she sings with dramatic power. Her first number was "Agnes'" scena in the first act of "Der Freischutz," and she afterward sang three songs, with piano, "O Lieb," by Liszt, "Hoffnung," by Grieg, and a very effective ballad by Nikisch (who played the accompaniments), which he has named "Sehnsucht." Madame Steinbach-Jahns is a tall, handsome woman of about 28. She was recalled several times after each appearance.

NORTH AMERICAN PHILADELPHIA,
TUESDAY, APRIL 29,

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT.

There was another great crowd at the Academy of Music last evening, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Nikisch, gave its closing concert here for the present season. The symphony, which came first, was Beethoven's in B flat, No. 4, and was played with splendid fire and finely appreciative feeling, under Mr. Nikisch's magnetic and inspiring leadership. A perfect clearness of insight as to the composer's intention and a ready responsiveness to his moods, together with a masterly understanding of the best means to give the music all its proper effectiveness, were the distinctive features of Mr. Nikisch's interpretation of this great work. Perhaps the most striking of the four movements was the minuet, but all were brilliantly performed and deservedly applauded. The other orchestral numbers were the overture to "The Flying Dutchman," which went superbly, and two movements of Cowen's Scandinavian Symphony, an uncommonly good piece of programme music, which received a most poetic and animated rendering and seemed to please the audience mightily. In order to display the virtuosity of his violins, Mr. Nikisch had them play in unison Paganini's well-known "Moto Perpetuo." This formed a severe test of their ability to keep together, but they endured the ordeal with entire success. The thirty-two violins sounded like one instrument, and the music was played without any abatement of solo rapidity, that is to say, prestissimo. It was rapturously encored, and had to be repeated. The soloist of the occasion was Mme. Steinbach-Jahn, a German prima donna of prepossessing appearance, who sang the great soprano air from "Der Freischutz" and some songs with the piano by Liszt, Nikisch and Grieg in a manner that elicited loud applause. She has a strong soprano voice, but last evening, for some reason or other, it seemed to be imperfectly under control, and the result was some measure of disappointment. It will be a pleasure to hear Mme. Steinbach-Jahn again when she is less nervous, or has a clearer idea of the acoustics of the building. As it was, her singing, especially in the adagio of the "prayer" scene, was disappointing. Mr. Nikisch proved himself an ideal accompanist.

LEDGER AND TRANSCRIPT
Philadelphia, Tuesday, April 29, 1890.

Academy of Music—Boston Symphony Orchestra.

There was a large standing contingent of the audience that crowded the Academy of Music last night, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra made its closing concert of the season one fully worthy so fine an attendance. The original programme had contained but three distinctly orchestral compositions, the fourth (B flat) symphony of Beethoven, a couple of excerpts from Cowen's third symphony, and Wagner's "Flying Dutchman" overture at the close. To these were added Paganini's "Perpetual Motion" piece, performed by the combined violins of the orchestra, and it proved the most popular feature of the concert. The violinists, grouped at the front of the stage, played without direction (other than very unobtrusive simple chords that their conductor, Mr. Nikisch, gave from a piano), but anything finer in the way of perfect drill than they exhibited would be difficult even to imagine. It was a show piece in the best sense. It may be said in brief, as to all the playing of the orchestra, that it has done nothing better than it did last night, particularly in the Beethoven symphony, in which vigor, precision, delicacy and polish were brilliantly combined. The introductory adagio was given with fine breadth; the adagio proper (second movement) was one of the loveliest performances ever heard here, and in the livelier portions of the symphony, as well as later in the evening, the band played with unwonted fire and spirit. As before, Mr. Nikisch, whose readings are immensely effective, barring a tendency to drag slow movements to the verge of sluggishness, conducted without notes, and evidenced so intimate a knowledge of the several compositions that he seemed to know the individual part of every instrument—a fact that has a great deal to do with the superb impressiveness produced. The unfamiliar number was that which presented two movements from Cowen's Third Symphony, No. 3, in C minor, "The Scandinavian," as he calls it, and whose subject the explanatory programme set forth with a comprehensiveness that made the pictures that he attempts in it the more satisfactory, if not greatly clearer to the general listener. In this work the classical and romantic style is blended quite ingeniously with the realistic and characteristic. The adagio is made up of music that would suggest to many some such scenes as it has for its themes, without the aid of the story. The author is less felicitous in handling the other movement given (the Scherzo), but it, too, made a favorable impression, and would doubtless improve on acquaintance.

Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, the soloist, almost completely justified the praise that preceded her. She has a fine soprano voice, fresh, sympathetic, and agreeable in quality, and of uncommon beauty of tone in the middle division. It is flexible and well cultivated, too, but whether she is unable to appreciate tones keenly or has some vocal defect of an unusual nature, she habitually failed to fill out certain notes whenever she sang mezza voce, which, of course, gave portions of her work the same effect as if she had sung these tones flat. In this way the beauty of the loveliest part of her aria from Weber's "Freischutz"—the Prayer—(which was substituted for the Mozart "Seraglio" aria first assigned her) was greatly marred. She was more successful in the portions that required chiefly skillful and spirited vocalization, and afterward in songs with piano accompaniment, especially one of Grieg's "Hoffnung," which she sang with admirable effect. Her reception was in the nature of an ovation, and Mme. Steinbach-Jahns may feel well assured, from the impression she made last night, that she can count upon a cordial welcome if she should desire a reappearance here.

The Times

PHILADELPHIA, APRIL 29, 1890.
LAST SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The Close of the Boston Orchestra's Season at the Academy.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the fifth and last concert of the present season at the Academy of Music last evening. The programme was very bright and attractive and beautifully displayed the fine tone and delicate execution of this admirable organization. Mr. Nikisch's treatment of the fourth symphony proved as daintily poetical as was to have been expected. In some of the Beethoven symphonies his style has seemed small and trivial, but it was much more satisfactory in this joyous work, and nearly all of the movements were entirely enjoyable.

In point of execution there could be nothing more desired in the adagio and scherzo of Cowen's Scandinavian symphony, a very poetical and beautiful work, with a great deal of ingenious instrumentation that occasionally somewhat obscures the thought. The performance of Paganini's "Moto perpetua" upon the whole body of violins was a tour de force most creditable to the discipline of the band, and though it had little artistic value it elicited rapturous applause.

The remaining number of the programme was the familiar "Flying Dutchman" overture. The soloist was Madame Steinbach-Jahns, a German soprano of evident experience, who sang the "Freischutz" aria and a group of modern songs. One of these, "Longing," was by Mr. Nikisch, who played the piano accompaniments with charming delicacy and sentiment.

THE RECORD.

Philadelphia, April 29, 1890.

Last evening the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the concluding concert of its series in this city, at the Academy of Music. An instrumental novelty was a portion of Cowen's Scandinavian Symphony, an adagio and a scherzo, both written with admirable skill, and full of pleasing suggestiveness. Beethoven's Fourth Symphony and the "Flying Dutchman" overture, with songs by Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, a German soprano of some reputation but no great degree of vocal excellence, made up the rest of the programme.

Philadelphia Inquirer.
TUESDAY, APRIL 29, 1890.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA.

The Closing Concert of Its Fifth Season Fills the Academy of Music.

It is scarcely probable that the majority of the great audience which attended the concert of the Boston Orchestra last evening at the Academy of Music was prepared for the excellence of the entertainment. Audiences here have liberally attended the concerts of the Boston Orchestra from its first season. But it has been necessary to praise its work during several seasons, chiefly for the extraordinary power and purity of the string tones. Since Mr. Nikisch replaced the former leader a change, a constantly increasing change, has been manifest at every concert. The orchestra has become better balanced. The tones of wood, wind and brass have been improved. Even the strings, more particularly the violoncellos and violas, have received a softening of tone and a delicacy of treatment which they never had before. The bassoons, oboes, flutes, horns were last night, one and all, simply delightful. The opening number of the concert, Beethoven's B flat symphony, No. 4, very thoroughly illustrated these improvements. The symphonies of Beethoven can never be heard frequently enough, and for some unknown cause the fourth is even less familiar than some of the others. It is certain that the symphony was never so well played before in this city. Mr. Nikisch led it, as is his custom, without any score before him, but his methods of interpretation are so distinct that they convey all the meanings quite as well to the audience as to the orchestra. It is impossible in this space to describe or explain the readings by Mr. Nikisch, of this symphony, in all of its four noble and precious movements, which seemed particularly worthy of commendation. It was a great conception and fastened the beauties of the symphony forever upon the mind. Nothing was made more apparent than the astonishing fertility of invention in producing new effects by the use of different solo instruments which was Beethoven's wonderful feature in all of his symphonies, and in none more than in the Fourth.

The second most important number of the orchestra was a performance of two movements from the Scandinavian Symphony, by that very excellent and interesting English composer, Mr. Cowen. The first movement, "A Summer Evening on the Fjord," was very beautiful throughout. The scherzo which followed was evidently prepared to illustrate the virtuosity of the solo instruments all through the orchestra.

The vocalist of this symphony concert was Madame Steinbach-Jahns, a distinguished prima donna, from Germany, who, it is understood, has visited this country by the personal invitation of Mr. Nikisch. She sang with the orchestra the celebrated Weber scene and aria from the second act of Der Freischutz. Her voice is very pure and powerful and her method essentially dramatic. Later in the evening three songs were given by her, accompanied by Mr. Nikisch on the piano. All of these developed particularly the dramatic qualities of the singer, and she would, if she cared to do so, make a great impression in German Opera.

It is a matter of regret to music lovers that this season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has ended, but its great success renders succeeding ones tolerably certain.

THE SUN.

BALTIMORE, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 30, 1890.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Lyceum Theatre.

The closing concert of the series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given last night at the Lyceum Theatre, and attracted one of the largest audiences that have attended these grand performances this season. Mr. Arthur Nikisch, the leader, has won his way steadily into the favor of the music lovers here, and has established his popularity beyond doubt. He is unquestionably a great leader, different in his style from the majority of conductors who have been seen here, but showing an energy and concentration in his work that have been productive of the happiest results. The orchestra under his leadership has certainly not lost in breadth and fullness of tone, and has gained in spirit and warmth. The strings are in superb form, and in their great, full chord and so clear and true, and their graceful, vigorous execution breathe the very spirit of music. The wind is also complete in every respect, and the whole orchestra well balanced and under good control. The performance of the Schumann symphony in B flat was a rare treat. Schumann has called it the "spring" symphony, and justly so, for it is full of the beauty of nature and of bright, happy melody. The Tschaikowsky number, an overture fantasie—"Romeo and Juliet"—was thoroughly interesting, and the closing orchestral selection, Rubinstein's sprightly "Bal Costume," although of a lighter and more popular order than the other numbers and those usually performed by this orchestra, was exceedingly graceful and showy, and was received with vigorous applause. Madame Steinbach-Johns, soprano, made her first appearance in the city and created a very favorable impression. She was associated with Mr. Nikisch in his musical work at Leipzig, and has just begun a tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Her principal number, the aria from Weber's "De Freischutz," was given a most musical rendition and immediately established the soprano as a singer of no ordinary ability. In the beautiful prayer her voice, so tender, womanly and expressive, was heard to wonderful advantage, and in the contrasting brilliant passages following it she showed dramatic force and fine breadth and strength, without the shouting that so many dramatic singers indulge in and seem to think necessary to produce a stirring effect. The selection was sung rather slowly, and dragged perceptably at times, but with this exception it was sung with excellent expression, style and pure intonation. Mr. Timothee Adamowski was the violin soloist, and performed two movements from a concerto by Saint-Saens. He has won many audiences in Baltimore since his appearance during the season with the Adamowski quartette, and received a warm greeting. His performance was enjoyable, but he was not at his best, and seemed somewhat nervous and uncertain. This was apparent at times in his intonation and execution of rapid passages, but he is an excellent performer and plays with musical feeling and good conception. The soloists were both recalled, and the conductor bowed his acknowledgments repeatedly to the audience. The season has been a successful one in every way, and the concerts have been among the most enjoyable events in Baltimore.

Baltimore American and Commercial Advertiser
WEDNESDAY, APRIL 30, 1890.

MUSIC AT THE LYCEUM.

Last of the Concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For its fifth and last concert of the series the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave an exceedingly varied program, divided among the works of seven composers, and presenting the Russian, German and French modern schools of music. It began with the Russian Tschaikowski, and ended with the Russian Rubinstein. The French were represented by two movements of the Saint Saens violin concerto, superbly rendered by Mr. Timothee Adamowski. The selections were the aria from "Der Freischuetz," sung by Madame Steinbach-Johns, soprano; the Schumann Symphony No. 1, in B flat, and songs with piano by Schumann, Liszt and Goldmark.

The Schumann Symphony was the principle work of the evening. Although it was Schumann's first complete orchestral work, it is undoubtedly his best. It is in the symphonic form, but full of the picturesque, contrasting dialoging, daintly syncopating and other peculiarly Schumann effects. It was composed soon after he had won the lady he had struggled for so long. He was in his happiest time of life, and the work fairly bubbles over with gladness. He called it his "Spring Symphony," and it is well named. The orchestra rendered it superbly, giving altogether the best performance of their excellent season.

In fact, the program was the best the orchestra has given this year—all the work being for full modern orchestra. The entire concert was heartily enjoyed.

THE MORNING HERALD

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 30, 1890.

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The Last This Season and a Very Enjoyable One It Was.

The final concert of the season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given at the Lyceum Theatre last night. Mr. Arthur Nikisch was conductor. The audience was larger than at any previous performance. There were two soloists, Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, of Leipsic, soprano, and Mr. Timothee Adamowski, violin. This was the first appearance of this distinguished soprano in Baltimore, and she was most warmly received and encored. Tschaikowsky's overture-fantasie "Romeo and Juliet" was the first number of the programme. This is the first time any of this celebrated composer's works have been on the programmes of this orchestra, and it was excellently rendered. An aria from Weber's "Der Freischutz" was the next, followed by Saint-Saens' two movements from concerto for violin and Schumann's "Spring" symphony, which emanated from his pen during the happiest period of his life, and which witnesses, it is conceded, his forward stride in the technique of composition. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns then sung "Widmung," "Der Fischer Knabe" and "Die Quelle." Rubinstein's "Bal Costume" was the last number, which was delightfully rendered.

The orchestra leaves here to-night for Washington, whence it goes to Richmond. A four weeks' trip West as far as St. Paul and Minneapolis will then be undertaken. Louisville, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit, Pittsburg, Cleveland and Buffalo are on the list.

Mr. Nikisch, the conductor, says they have a very bright outlook ahead for their trip, as in all but two cities houses are guaranteed to them.

New-York Daily Tribune.
FOUNDED BY HORACE GREELEY
THURSDAY, MAY 1, 1890.

A SYMPHONY CONCERT IN WASHINGTON.

Washington, April 30.—The closing concert in the series of four by the Boston Symphony orchestra, at Lincoln Hall to-night, was a fitting close of the musical season. As at the proceeding concerts, the house was packed with a cultivated and enthusiastic audience. The soloist, Madame Steinbach-Jahns, scored a signal success; and the features of the orchestra work were the Schumann symphony, which was finely played, and the Bal Costume of Rubinstein, the swing and dash of the latter composition exciting the applause of the audience.

[129]

Washington Post.

WASHINGTON, MAY 1, 1890.

The Final Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for This Season.

The closing concert of the season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city was given last night at Lincoln Hall. The audience which assembled was in every way representative of the Capital, not only in the mere fact that every seat and all available standing room was occupied, but in the distinguished character of its personnel. The programme opened with Schumann's b-flat symphony, a creature of joyous inspiration and Apollo-like in its graceful strength. It was interpreted in the same sweet temper in which it was conceived, and proved more strongly than ever the virtuosity of conductorship which each succeeding concert has shown Mr. Nikisch to possess. The rich tonal beauty of the symphony, its glowing warmth, its delicate fancy and delightful spirit, its buoyancy and poetic expression and its firm and pleasing instrumentation were superlatively emphasized by a matchless orchestra. All the finer nuances which impart to this work an essence of etheriality were charmingly contrasted with the stronger passages, which so nearly approach Beethoven in the solidity of their harmony and the bright originality of their ideas. To add that the rendition was technically perfect would be superfluous, and yet it would be unjust to Mr. Nikisch if we failed to bear tribute to the absolutely flawless finish which the band has attained under his direction. To a wonderful precision of execution and a superb body and balance of tone there has been added this season a vigorous spirit hitherto unpossessed and a peculiar sensitiveness that is always present and always responsive to the conductor's feeling.

The other orchestral numbers were of small musical value when compared to the symphony. Saint-Saens' picturesque "Dance of Death" was vividly played, and the rhythmic music of Rubinstein's "Bal Costume" received its full meed of vivacity and tone color. The instrumental soloist of the evening was Mr. Leo Schulz, who played a concerto by Eckert for the 'cello with rare smoothness, fullness, and purity of tone and artistic feeling, the latter being especially noticeable in the andante. The work is somewhat cheapened by the Cossack air which formed the last movement. After Mr. Schulz had responded to the three recalls with which the audience had rewarded his endeavors, he resumed his place among the players, an act that in itself spoke volumes for the high character of the orchestra. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, the soprano soloist, sang an aria from "Tannhauser" with an intelligent conception and considerable dramatic force, and also sang with nicety of phrasing and expression a group of songs, one of them written by Mr. Nikisch, who also accompanied her on the piano. Her voice is a pure, resonant soprano, and she made a most favorable impression.

State Journal

TUESDAY, OHIO May 6, 1890.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE METROPOLITAN.

The Boston symphony orchestra and Mme. Steinbach-Jahns presented the full program of the third and last (for this season) concert of the Orpheus club at the Metropolitan opera-house last evening. Every seat was occupied and it was a very distinguished audience, including all the lovers of the highest class of music. The orchestra is certainly superior in many respects to any now before the American public. It is composed of only artists of a high class, and is managed with the sole view of producing programs of the best music, the question of financial policy never entering into the calculations. The members are trained to a degree of proficiency in ensemble playing rarely equaled and never surpassed. The new director, Mr. Arthur Nickisch, has every qualification for greatness, and the effects he produces are superb. If any criticism could be offered it would be that he does not consider that the capacity of his audiences to enjoy severe numbers is not equal to his own. The program last night was a constant exercise, not of the senses, but of the intellect. It was almost unvaried from that characteristic which requires study rather than gives pleasure. Nevertheless, the rare perfection of the performance aroused the greatest admiration, and bursts of enthusiastic approval were very frequent. Almost every number on the program was a novelty in Columbus, the Grieg Suite "Peer Gynt" being entirely different in character from anything ever heard here before, so far as the writer can remember. This and the Schumann symphony No. 4 were preeminently the most thoroughly enjoyable features of the evening. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns is doubtless a great success in a dramatic role of a grand opera, and it is in such work that she must have won her high European reputation, but she has not much to commend her as a concert singer. The songs with piano accompaniment (played by Mr. Nikisch) were ineffective, and the splendid Mozart aria was electrifying principally because of the superb orchestral accompaniment, although the audience, perhaps, scarcely realized the fact. Mr. C. M. Soefler, who modestly stepped forward from among the first violins and played the principal part in the Spanish symphony by Salo, proved a most able and conscientious artist. The part was at times very brilliant and required large technical skill, but it was not by reason of his fine playing of these passages so much as by his noble conception of the sentiment of the composition as a whole that he produced an impression which is lasting. The best thanks of the public is again due the Orpheus club for providing so high and rare a musical treat [illegible] columbus.

THE RICHMOND DISPATCH.

SATURDAY.....MAY 3, 1890.

A GREAT ORCHESTRA.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY UNDER NIKISCH AT THE ACADEMY.

First Night of the May Festival—A Brilliant Audience and a Fine Performance.

By long odds the finest entertainment ever given under the auspices of the Mozart Association was the concert rendered at the Academy last evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under their able director, Mr. Arthur Nikisch. Indeed to our mind Richmond has never before heard such perfection in orchestral playing.

About ten minutes after the hour announced (8:30) for the concert to begin Mr. Nikisch walked upon the stage, and having acknowledged the applause which greeted him and given an "attention" rap with his tiny baton, stepped upon his stand and faced his orchestra of seventy-odd musicians. There was a brilliant audience present and when the first strains of Weber's beautiful overture were sounded many of the vast assemblage which subsequently filled the house were still coming in.

THE CONDUCTOR.

The great leader is thoroughly quiet in his movements and mild-mannered, yet from the moment he takes his position as conductor he looks the master spirit. He directs in a way thoroughly original. The baton in his hands is not wielded as if a threatening cudgel with which to frighten the timid and bring the refractory into subjection; it is as if a very unimportant little reed gracefully waved for the gratification of the conductor, in keeping time to the music, as one pats his foot to inspiring strains. Yet the work of that unostentatious baton is simply immense. It seems electrified with the genius of its holder and transmits his spirit to each individual performer. Nikisch uses his left hand in a way that seems to speak to the performers. He is rather the opposite of his worthy predecessor Gericke, who appeared rather more as a commander; yet the former has conquered in his way and has made the Boston Symphony as near perfection as we poor mortals in earthly matters can expect to attain.

A GREAT PERFORMANCE.

But for the work of last evening. Never before have we heard anything to approach the finished rendering given the Weber Overture. The shading was something delicious, if we might so express it. The last movement (waltz time) of Rubinstein's "Bal Costume" seemed to be the most taking feature of the evening, though as a whole it was beautifully rendered.

Mrs. Steinbach-Jahns, the vocalist of the occasion, received quite an ovation and a triple recall, although no encores were responded to. She has a voice of power and excellent quality, and was heard at her best in the song, "Die Quelle," by Goldmark. We thought her rendering of the grand aria from Freyscheutz rather lacking in animation. Yet this may be accounted for from the fact that she was suffering from a very sore throat, and at one time in the afternoon it was feared she would not be able to sing.

A CHARMING ADDITION.

The management very generously made a charming addition to the programme, which was announced from the stage. It was the "Perpetuo Moto" of Paganini played by all the violins (twenty-six) in unison and accompanied by Mr. Nikisch on the piano. This was simply a remarkable performance. It is difficult to realize how so many violins could play as one man, very rapid and difficult execution kept up throughout, just as the name of the composition has it—in perpetual motion.

When the Mendelssohn symphony in A (Italian) was reached the orchestra got down to its fine work, though it must be admitted, and is still more wonderful to relate, some of the audience seemed to grow wearied as the simply exquisite rendering of this fine composition progressed. It was a fitting conclusion to a fine programme beautifully rendered.

THE ORCHESTRA.

The orchestra is almost faultless in its composition. Yet from the marvellous perfection of the strings and the prominence given them we should say they are Mr. Nikisch's pets. Their prominent position last night, from the extension of the stage away out from the proscenium, must have done their conductor's heart good. Yet it was a matter of regret to us that the wind instruments should have been, as it were, so thrown into the shade. Upon these latter instruments there are in this orchestra some of the finest performers in the world. Heindel, who played with the old "Boston Quintette Club," and whom we used to think the finest of all flute-players, is here as second flute. Only think of it!

PRETTY STAGE SCENE.

The stage setting was very pretty and effective, with a conservatory scene for the background. Only about one half of the stage proper was occupied, but with the staging over of the footlights and entire orchestra the perspective was decidedly effective. Back of the rear scene as arranged last night raised tiers of seats have been erected for the festival chorus tonight. They will seat 285 singers, but were hidden to view last evening.

To-night will close the "festival," and a fine programme will be rendered by the orchestra, the Festival chorus, and Madame Steinbach-Jahns. Grieg's "Peer Gynt" will prove an enjoyable feature.

Nikisch is pronounced with accent on the first syllable.

THE TIMES-STAR.

VOL. 53. NO. 109.

CINCINNATI, MAY 7, 1890.

A GRAND CONCERT.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA AGAIN AT THE ODEON.

Fine Programme for This Evening—Sale of Single Seats for the Festival—Von Bulow Abused—Musical Notes.

It was a thoroughly delighted audience that left the Odeon last night at the conclusion of the first Boston Symphony Orchestra concert. Seldom this winter has there been any musical event that has so admirably filled the high hopes formed of it. As a leader Mr. Nikisch showed his marvelous control and his power of seeing and producing large effects. He must have a memory that is remarkable, for he conducted without a score. The only disappointment of the evening, if it was a disappointment, was in the singing of Madame Steinbach-Jahns, who is an exponent of the latest German school of dramatic song. There seemed to be an irresponsive quality in her voice. At all events the audience while appreciating her art seemed rather to regard it as a mere bit of cold effort rather than something of human warmth in which they shared. But the triumph of the 'cellist, Mr. Anton Hekking, was instantaneous. He was applauded to the echo, and the audience would not be quiet until he reappeared with an encore. His playing is so full of sympathy and feeling that the hearer almost holds his breath between the notes.

Of course the orchestral work was magnificent. If there is a finer orchestra in America to-day, the writer does not know where to find it. The last selection, the Tannhauser Overture, was rendered with remarkable grace and skill.

To-night the second and last concert will take place. The programme is better than that of last night. It is as follows:

Overture—Euryanthe.....Weber
Allegro non troppo, from Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, in D, Op. 77...Brahms
Aria from Der Freischuetz.....Weber
Suite—Peer Gynt, Op. 46.....Grieg
Daybreak.
The death of Aase.
Anitra's dance.
In the halls of the King of Dovre mountains.
(The imps are chasing Peer Gynt.)
Songs with Piano:
(a) O Liebe.....Liszt
(b) Auftraege.....Schumann
Symphony No. 5, in C minor.....Beethoven
Allegro con brio.
Andante con moto.
Allegro (scherzo).
Allegro (finale).
Soloists—Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, soprano; Mr. Franz Kneisel, violinist.

CINCINNATI, THE COMMERCIAL GAZETTE.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 7, 1890.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The Concert at the Odeon Received with Deserved Tribute by a Deeply Interested Audience.

Last evening the Odeon was resonant with applause, a deserved tribute on the part of a deeply interested audience to the excellence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which, under the leadership of Mr. Nikisch, made its first appearance before a Cincinnati gathering. So much has been said about methods in connection with the newly chosen leader of the Eastern aggregation, that but little would seem necessary in explanation; but he is not so far from all chance of comparison with his predecessor as at the first blush he might appear. The former was a stickler for minor points of execution and detail, while the present leader keeps his eye upon the larger purpose involved, the bringing out of effects in their relation to the broader side of the general musical scheme of any composition he may have in hand, and it must be confessed that the result is much more satisfying. He conducts without a score, a somewhat unusual thing to witness.

The programme for last evening opened with the overture "Sakuntuala," by Goldmark. In addition (for the orchestra) was the Fourth Symphony, in D minor, of Schumann, and the overture to "Tannhäuser." Throughout, the most masterly control of all the elements that go to make up a perfect presentation was apparent, and the auditors were so delighted that a repetition of the closing movement of the symphony was almost demanded. The soloists were Madame Steinbach-Jahns and Mr. Anton Hekking. The former is a soprano of the later-day German so-called dramatic school, who has been a favorite with the Leipsic public for a long period. Her method is not gracious, and she was only partially successful with the cultured assembly to whom she appealed. Mr. Hekking is a 'cellist of commanding ability, and he won the only spontaneous recall of the evening in the two numbers that fell to his share. The first was a Chopin nocturne with harp accompaniment, and the second the familiar "Papillon" of Popper, with orchestral support. The last was repeated under compulsion. The band will be heard again this evening in a programme of more even texture. Among other things will be heard the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven, which is always welcome.

Boston Daily Globe.

MONDAY, MAY 12.

BOSTON MELODY ALL RIGHT.

Train Bearing Symphony Orchestra Derailed—Two Section Hands Killed—Musicians Escaped Injury.

ST. PAUL, Minn., May 11.—The Burlington train, bearing the Boston Symphony company, was derailed near Prescott, Wis., this afternoon, by running into a hand car containing section men. None of the company were injured, but two of the section men were killed.

The concert company arrived here two hours later somewhat shaken up and excited, but all well.

THE ENQUIRER. CINCINNATI, JOHN A. McLEAN.

WEDNESDAY.....MAY 7, 1890.

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The Boston Orchestra Greeted By a Large Audience.

At the Odeon last night was given the first concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The audience was large, and a representative and appreciative one.

A musical treat was expected, and the audience was not disappointed. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns was the soprano soloist, and Mr. Anton Hekking was the violoncellist soloist. The following is the programme:

Goldmark.....Overture, Sakuntala
Mozart.....Aria, Thou May'st Learn to Hate Me, from Die Entfuehrung.
Schumann.....Symphony No. 4, in D minor, op. 120
Introduction (Adagio non troppo).
Allegro.
Romance (Adagio non troppo).
Scherzo.
Finale (Allegro).
Soli for Violoncello.
a, Chopin.....Nocturne, with harp accompaniment
b, Popper.....Papillon
Songs with Piano.
a, Greig.....Hoffnung
b, Weber.....Unbefangenheit
c, Liszt.....Liebeslust
Wagner.....Overture, Tannhauser

THE RICHMOND DISPATCH--SUNDAY, MAY 4.

THE MAY FESTIVAL.

The Last Night's Entertainment an Excellent One.

The programme yesterday evening for the May festival was of an entirely different character from that of Friday night.

The chorus assembled behind a curtain, which was raised just before the commencement of the overture, revealing to the audience tier on tier of ladies and gentlemen, nearly three hundred in number.

THE OVERTURE.

The opening overture, the familiar "Tannhauser," received a new significance under the magic baton of Mr. Nikisch. A few in the audience had heard the orchestra under Gericke and Henschel and were prepared to appreciate the differences in the work of the band under the magic baton of its new director. Never has the familiar overture received a more beautiful interpretation, or one more poetic, though at the same time brilliant and dramatic. The quiet but firm beat of the conductor seems to draw from each man the best work of which he is capable with a grand result, which places the performers of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on par with any in the world.

THEY WERE ENCORED.

The "Peer-Gynt" suite with its sad, heart-rending funeral march, the quaint phrases of the dance, the wonderful strains of the "Daybreak" movement, and the weird portrayal of the chase of the imps showed the superb capabilities of the orchestra, charming and fascinating all who listened. The last movement was enthusiastically encored, and Mr. Nikisch gracefully yielded to the wishes of the public.

THE CHORUS.

The Festival chorus was the feature of the evening, and its work was excellent, considering the short time of preparation and the hasty manner of its organization. Placed far in the rear, behind the large orchestra, the full effect was lost in a great measure, but the superb mass of tone was fully appreciated in those moments when it could be heard. The sopranos especially were admirable in quality of tone and attack, and the two choral numbers from the "Redemption" and "Tannhauser" were grandly sung.

The orchestra has made its reputation in Richmond, and all music-lovers in the city hope for an early opportunity of hearing it again next season. The Mozart Association are to be congratulated on bringing this organization to the city.

OTHER FEATURES.

The aria of Madame Steinbach-Jahns was sung with splendid effect and was well received.

The Gesang-Verein Virginia, under their enthusiastic director, Charles L. Siegel, Esq., rendered Abt's "Victory Song" very creditably and effectively. It is a beautiful compostion.

Mr. Marshall, the conductor, seems to have won the hearts of his singers, as a magnificent floral lyre was handed him after the first chorus.

MR. NIKISCH SURPRISED.

Mr. Nikisch complimenting the work of the singers, was greatly surprised on being informed by Mr. Marshall that it was not a permanent organization, and congratulated their director on the excellent work accomplished in so short a time.

NOTES ABOUT THE FESTIVAL.

Altogether the May Festival was a grand success, with excellent houses of the best music people in the city, and the Mozart Association deserve the thanks of the community for organizing such a grand scheme and carrying it out in every detail to such a successful conclusion.

The great orchestra and the rows of singers behind it reminded one of the grand oratorio performances of the large northern cities.

At the close of the performance the orchestra were entertained at Sänger Hall by the Gesang-Verein Virginia.

[129]

The Washington Post.

WASHINGTON, MAY 1, 1890.

The Final Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for This Season.

The closing concert of the season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city was given last night at Lincoln Hall. The audience which assembled was in every way representative of the Capital, not only in the mere fact that every seat and all available standing room was occupied, but in the distinguished character of its personnel. The programme opened with Schumann's b-flat symphony, a creature of joyous inspiration and Apollo-like in its graceful strength. It was interpreted in the same sweet temper in which it was conceived, and proved more strongly than ever the virtuosity of conductorship which each succeeding concert has shown Mr. Nikisch to possess. The rich tonal beauty of the symphony, its glowing warmth, its delicate fancy and delightful spirit, its buoyancy and poetic expression and its firm and pleasing instrumentation were superlatively emphasized by a matchless orchestra. All the finer nuances which impart to this work an essence of etheriality were charmingly contrasted with the stronger passages, which so nearly approach Beethoven in the solidity of their harmony and the bright originality of their ideas. To add that the rendition was technically perfect would be superfluous, and yet it would be unjust to Mr. Nikisch if we failed to bear tribute to the absolutely flawless finish which the band has attained under his direction. To a wonderful precision of execution and a superb body and balance of tone there has been added this season a vigorous spirit hitherto unpossessed and a peculiar sensitiveness that is always present and always responsive to the conductor's feeling.

The other orchestral numbers were of small musical value when compared to the symphony. Saint-Saens' picturesque "Dance of Death" was vividly played, and the rhythmic music of Rubinstein's "Bal Costume" received its full meed of vivacity and tone color. The instrumental soloist of the evening was Mr. Leo Schulz, who played a concerto by Eckert for the 'cello with rare smoothness, fullness, and purity of tone and artistic feeling, the latter being especially noticeable in the andante. The work is somewhat cheapened by the Cossack air which formed the last movement. After Mr. Schulz had responded to the three recalls with which the audience had rewarded his endeavors, he resumed his place among the players, an act that in itself spoke volumes for the high character of the orchestra. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, the soprano soloist, sang an aria from "Tannhauser" with an intelligent conception and considerable dramatic force, and also sang with nicety of phrasing and expression a group of songs, one of them written by Mr. Nikisch, who also accompanied her on the piano. Her voice is a pure, resonant soprano, and she made a most favorable impression.

State Journal

TUESDAY, OHIO - May 6, 1890.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE METROPOLITAN.

The Boston symphony orchestra and Mme. Steinbach-Jahns presented the full program of the third and last (for this season) concert of the Orpheus club at the Metropolitan opera-house last evening. Every seat was occupied and it was a very distinguished audience, including all the lovers of the highest class of music. The orchestra is certainly superior in many respects to any now before the American public. It is composed of only artists of a high class, and is managed with the sole view of producing programs of the best music, the question of financial policy never entering into the calculations. The members are trained to a degree of proficiency in ensemble playing rarely equaled and never surpassed. The new director, Mr. Arthur Nickisch, has every qualification for greatness, and the effects he produces are superb. If any criticism could be offered it would be that he does not consider that the capacity of his audiences to enjoy severe numbers is not equal to his own. The program last night was a constant exercise, not of the senses, but of the intellect. It was almost unvaried from that characteristic which requires study rather than gives pleasure. Nevertheless, the rare perfection of the performance aroused the greatest admiration, and bursts of enthusiastic approval were very frequent. Almost every number on the program was a novelty in Columbus, the Grieg Suite "Peer Gynt" being entirely different in character from anything ever heard here before, so far as the writer can remember. This and the Schumann symphony No. 4 were preeminently the most thoroughly enjoyable features of the evening. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns is doubtless a great success in a dramatic role of a grand opera, and it is in such work that she must have won her high European reputation, but she has not much to commend her as a concert singer. The songs with piano accompaniment (played by Mr. Nikisch) were ineffective, and the splendid Mozart aria was electrifying principally because of the superb orchestral accompaniment, although the audience, perhaps, scarcely realized the fact. Mr. C. M. Soefler, who modestly stepped forward from among the first violins and played the principal part in the Spanish symphony by Salo, proved a most able and conscientious artist. The part was at times very brilliant and required large technical skill, but it was not by reason of his fine playing of these passages so much as by his noble conception of the sentiment of the composition as a whole that he produced an impression which is lasting. The best thanks of the public is again due the Orpheus club for providing so high and rare a musical treat for Columbus.

THE RICHMOND DISPATCH.

SATURDAY.....MAY 3, 1890.

A GREAT ORCHESTRA.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY UNDER NIKISCH AT THE ACADEMY.

First Night of the May Festival—A Brilliant Audience and a Fine Performance.

By long odds the finest entertainment ever given under the auspices of the Mozart Association was the concert rendered at the Academy last evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under their able director, Mr. Arthur Nikisch. Indeed to our mind Richmond has never before heard such perfection in orchestral playing.

About ten minutes after the hour announced (8:30) for the concert to begin Mr. Nikisch walked upon the stage, and having acknowledged the applause which greeted him and given an "attention" rap with his tiny baton, stepped upon his stand and faced his orchestra of seventy-odd musicians. There was a brilliant audience present and when the first strains of Weber's beautiful overture were sounded many of the vast assemblage which subsequently filled the house were still coming in.

THE CONDUCTOR.

The great leader is thoroughly quiet in his movements and mild-mannered, yet from the moment he takes his position as conductor he looks the master spirit. He directs in a way thoroughly original. The baton in his hands is not wielded as if a threatening cudgel with which to frighten the timid and bring the refractory into subjection; it is as if a very unimportant little reed gracefully waved for the gratification of the conductor, in keeping time to the music, as one pats his foot to inspiring strains. Yet the work of that unostentatious baton is simply immense. It seems electrified with the genius of its holder and transmits his spirit to each individual performer. Nikisch uses his left hand in a way that seems to speak to the performers. He is rather the opposite of his worthy predecessor Gericke, who appeared rather more as a commander; yet the former has conquered in his way and has made the Boston Symphony as near perfection as we poor mortals in earthly matters can expect to attain.

A GREAT PERFORMANCE.

But for the work of last evening. Never before have we heard anything to approach the finished rendering given the Weber Overture. The shading was something delicious, if we might so express it. The last movement (waltz time) of Rubinstein's "Bal Costume" seemed to be the most taking feature of the evening, though as a whole it was beautifully rendered.

Mrs. Steinbach-Jahns, the vocalist of the occasion, received quite an ovation and a triple recall, although no encores were responded to. She has a voice of power and excellent quality, and was heard at her best in the song, "Die Quelle," by Goldmark. We thought her rendering of the grand aria from Freyscheutz rather lacking in animation. Yet this may be accounted for from the fact that she was suffering from a very sore throat, and at one time in the afternoon it was feared she would not be able to sing.

A CHARMING ADDITION.

The management very generously made a charming addition to the programme, which was announced from the stage. It was the "Perpetuo Moto" of Paganini played by all the violins (twenty-six) in unison and accompanied by Mr. Nikisch on the piano. This was simply a remarkable performance. It is difficult to realize how so many violins could play as one man, very rapid and difficult execution kept up throughout, just as the name of the composition has it—in perpetual motion.

When the Mendelssohn symphony in A (Italian) was reached the orchestra got down to its fine work, though it must be admitted, and is still more wonderful to relate, some of the audience seemed to grow wearied as the simply exquisite rendering of this fine composition progressed. It was a fitting conclusion to a fine programme beautifully rendered.

THE ORCHESTRA.

The orchestra is almost faultless in its composition. Yet from the marvellous perfection of the strings and the prominence given them we should say they are Mr. Nikisch's pets. Their prominent position last night, from the extension of the stage away out from the proscenium, must have done their conductor's heart good. Yet it was a matter of regret to us that the wind instruments should have been, as it were, so thrown into the shade. Upon these latter instruments there are in this orchestra some of the finest performers in the world. Heindel, who played with the old "Boston Quintette Club," and whom we used to think the finest of all flute-players, is here as second flute. Only think of it!

PRETTY STAGE SCENE.

The stage setting was very pretty and effective, with a conservatory scene for the background. Only about one half of the stage proper was occupied, but with the staging over of the footlights and entire orchestra the perspective was decidedly effective. Back of the rear scene as arranged last night raised tiers of seats have been erected for the festival chorus tonight. They will seat 285 singers, but were hidden to view last evening.

To-night will close the "festival," and a fine programme will be rendered by the orchestra, the Festival chorus, and Madame Steinbach-Jahns. Grieg's "Peer Gynt" will prove an enjoyable feature.

Nikisch is pronounced with accent on the first syllable.

THE TIMES-STAR.

VOL. 53. NO. 109.

CINCINNATI, MAY 7, 1890.

A GRAND CONCERT.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA AGAIN AT THE ODEON.

Fine Programme for This Evening—Sale of Single Seats for the Festival—Von Bulow Abused—Musical Notes.

It was a thoroughly delighted audience that left the Odeon last night at the conclusion of the first Boston Symphony Orchestra concert. Seldom this winter has there been any musical event that has so admirably filled the high hopes formed of it. As a leader Mr. Nikisch showed his marvelous control and his power of seeing and producing large effects. He must have a memory that is remarkable, for he conducted without a score. The only disappointment of the evening, if it was a disappointment, was in the singing of Madame Steinbach-Jahns, who is an exponent of the latest German school of dramatic song. There seemed to be an irresponsive quality in her voice. At all events the audience while appreciating her art seemed rather to regard it as a mere bit of cold effort rather than something of human warmth in which they shared. But the triumph of the 'cellist, Mr. Anton Hekking, was instantaneous. He was applauded to the echo, and the audience would not be quiet until he reappeared with an encore. His playing is so full of sympathy and feeling that the hearer almost holds his breath between the notes.

Of course the orchestral work was magnificent. If there is a finer orchestra in America to-day, the writer does not know where to find it. The last selection, the Tannhauser Overture, was rendered with remarkable grace and skill.

To-night the second and last concert will take place. The programme is better than that of last night. It is as follows:

Overture—Euryanthe.....Weber
Allegro non troppo, from Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, in D, Op. 77...Brahms
Aria from Der Freischuetz.....Weber
Suite—Peer Gynt, Op. 46 .....Grieg
Daybreak.
The death of Aase.
Anitra's dance.
In the halls of the King of Dovre mountains. (The imps are chasing Peer Gynt.)
Songs with Piano:
(a) O Liebe .....Liszt
(b) Auftraege.....Schumann
Symphony No. 5, in C minor.....Beethoven
Allegro con brio.
Andante con moto.
Allegro (scherzo).
Allegro (finale).
Soloists—Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, soprano; Mr. Franz Kneisel, violinist.

CINCINNATI, THE COMMERCIAL GAZETTE.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 7, 1890.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The Concert at the Odeon Received with Deserved Tribute by a Deeply Interested Audience.

Last evening the Odeon was resonant with applause, a deserved tribute on the part of a deeply interested audience to the excellence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which, under the leadership of Mr. Nikisch, made its first appearance before a Cincinnati gathering. So much has been said about methods in connection with the newly chosen leader of the Eastern aggregation, that but little would seem necessary in explanation; but he is not so far from all chance of comparison with his predecessor as at the first blush he might appear. The former was a stickler for minor points of execution and detail, while the present leader keeps his eye upon the larger purpose involved, the bringing out of effects in their relation to the broader side of the general musical scheme of any composition he may have in hand, and it must be confessed that the result is much more satisfying. He conducts without a score, a somewhat unusual thing to witness.

The programme for last evening opened with the overture "Sakuntuala," by Goldmark. In addition (for the orchestra) was the Fourth Symphony, in D minor, of Schumann, and the overture to "Tannhäuser." Throughout, the most masterly control of all the elements that go to make up a perfect presentation was apparent, and the auditors were so delighted that a repetition of the closing movement of the symphony was almost demanded. The soloists were Madame Steinbach-Jahns and Mr. Anton Hekking. The former is a soprano of the later-day German so-called dramatic school, who has been a favorite with the Leipsic public for a long period. Her method is not gracious, and she was only partially successful with the cultured assembly to whom she appealed. Mr. Hekking is a 'cellist of commanding ability, and he won the only spontaneous recall of the evening in the two numbers that fell to his share The first was a Chopin nocturne with harp accompaniment, and the second the familiar "Papillon" of Popper, with orchestral support. The last was repeated under compulsion. The band will be heard again this evening in a programme of more even texture. Among other things will be heard the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven, which is always welcome.

Boston Daily Globe.

MONDAY, MAY 12.

BOSTON MELODY ALL RIGHT.

Train Bearing Symphony Orchestra Derailed—Two Section Hands Killed—Musicians Escaped Injury.

ST. PAUL, Minn., May 11.—The Burlington train, bearing the Boston Symphony company, was derailed near Prescott, Wis., this afternoon, by running into a hand car containing section men. None of the company were injured, but two of the section men were killed.

The concert company arrived here two hours later somewhat shaken up and excited, but all well.

THE ENQUIRER. CINCINNATI, JOHN R. MCLEAN.

WEDNESDAY.....MAY 7, 1890.

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The Boston Orchestra Greeted By a Large Audience.

At the Odeon last night was given the first concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The audience was large, and a representative and appreciative one.

A musical treat was expected, and the audience was not disappointed. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns was the soprano soloist, and Mr. Anton Hekking was the violoncellist soloist. The following is the programme:

Goldmark.....Overture, Sakuntala
Mozart.....Aria, Thou May'st Learn to Hate Me, from Die Entfuehrung.
Schumann.....Symphony No. 4, in D minor, op. 120
Introduction (Adagio non troppo).
Allegro.
Romance (Adagio non troppo).
Scherzo.
Finale (Allegro).
Soli for Violoncello.
a, Chopin.....Nocturne, with harp accompaniment
b, Popper.....Papillon
Songs with Piano.
a, Greig .....Hoffnung
b, Weber.....Unbefangenheit
c, Liszt.....Liebeslust
Wagner.....Overture, Tannhauser

THE RICHMOND DISPATCH—in SUNDAY, MAY 4.

THE MAY FESTIVAL.

The Last Night's Entertainment an Excellent One.

The programme yesterday evening for the May festival was of an entirely different character from that of Friday night.

The chorus assembled behind a curtain, which was raised just before the commencement of the overture, revealing to the audience tier on tier of ladies and gentlemen, nearly three hundred in number.

THE OVERTURE.

The opening overture, the familiar "Tannhauser," received a new significance under the magic baton of Mr. Nikisch. A few in the audience had heard the orchestra under Gericke and Henschel and were prepared to appreciate the differences in the work of the band under the magic baton of its new director. Never has the familiar overture received a more beautiful interpretation, or one more poetic, though at the same time brilliant and dramatic. The quiet but firm beat of the conductor seems to draw from each man the best work of which he is capable with a grand result, which places the performers of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on par with any in the world.

THEY WERE ENCORED.

The "Peer-Gynt" suite with its sad, heart-rending funeral march, the quaint phrases of the dance, the wonderful strains of the "Daybreak" movement, and the weird portrayal of the chase of the imps showed the superb capabilities of the orchestra, charming and fascinating all who listened. The last movement was enthusiastically encored, and Mr. Nikisch gracefully yielded to the wishes of the public.

THE CHORUS.

The Festival chorus was the feature of the evening, and its work was excellent, considering the short time of preparation and the hasty manner of its organization. Placed far in the rear, behind the large orchestra, the full effect was lost in a great measure, but the superb mass of tone was fully appreciated in those moments when it could be heard. The sopranos especially were admirable in quality of tone and attack, and the two choral numbers from the "Redemption" and "Tannhauser" were grandly sung.

The orchestra has made its reputation in Richmond, and all music-lovers in the city hope for an early opportunity of hearing it again next season. The Mozart Association are to be congratulated on bringing this organization to the city.

OTHER FEATURES.

The aria of Madame Steinbach-Jahns was sung with splendid effect and was well received.

The Gesang-Verein Virginia, under their enthusiastic director, Charles L. Siegel, Esq., rendered Abt's "Victory Song" very creditably and effectively. It is a beautiful compostion.

Mr. Marshall, the conductor, seems to have won the hearts of his singers, as a magnificent floral lyre was handed him after the first chorus.

MR. NIKISCH SURPRISED.

Mr. Nikisch complimenting the work of the singers, was greatly surprised on being informed by Mr. Marshall that it was not a permanent organization, and congratulated their director on the excellent work accomplished in so short a time.

NOTES ABOUT THE FESTIVAL.

Altogether the May Festival was a grand success, with excellent houses of the best music people in the city, and the Mozart Association deserve the thanks of the community for organizing such a grand scheme and carrying it out in every detail to such a successful conclusion.

The great orchestra and the rows of singers behind it reminded one of the grand oratorio performances of the large northern cities.

At the close of the performance the orchestra were entertained at Sänger Hall by the Gesang-Verein Virginia.

[130]

THE ENQUIRER.

CINCINNATI.

THURSDAY.....MAY 8, 1890.

A MUSICAL FEAST.

Such Was the Second Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert at the Odeon Last Night.

There was a large audience at the Odeon last night to listen to the second concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The director of this famous musical organization, Arthur Nikisch, is a wonderful interpreter of Weber's and Beethoven's music. As a conductor his every movement is graceful and refined. There is no affectation about him.

The overture "Euryanthe," from Weber, is a splendid opera full of beautiful and characteristic melody. The movements of the "concerto" were captivating. The piece opens with a lengthy passage for the orchestra, and in its conclusion the whole orchestra breaks forth, the effect being more easily felt than described. The dramatic poem, "Peer Syrut," in four movements, illustrates a pretty Norwegian folk-legend. The suite as played is a reduction of the voluminous music Greig composed for the production of the drama on the stage. The last movement is a somewhat grotesque march, scored for a full modern orchestra, and pictures the imps tormenting Peer Syrut. The production drew forth repeated applause. Mr. Frank Kneisel, the solo violinist, is a master of his art, and his renditions last night were repeatedly encored. Much to the regret of the audience, Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, the soprano soloist, was taken suddenly ill during the evening and could not sing. Her singing shows wonderful power, and her non-appearance was universally regretted. The closing piece was Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, in C minor, consisting of four movements. This most famous of that wonderful musician's nine symphonies was superbly rendered. It is full of somber, mysterious music, and the play of the instruments has something sinister about it, seeming to spring from the state of mind which conceived the scene on the Blocksberg in "Faust." The finale is probably the greatest effort of which music is capable, and it would seem impossible to surpass it.

THE COMMERCIAL GAZETTE, CINCINNATI.

THURSDAY, MAY 8, 18

The Boston Orchestra.

The second concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the Odeon last night, was given before another delighted audience, and the general impression prevailed that the performance of this splendid organization even excelled that of the previous evening. The applause was frequent, hearty and spontaneous. The programme was given as follows:

Overture—Euryanthe.....Weber
Allegro non troppo, from Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, in D, Op. 77.....Brahms
Suite—Peer Gynt, Op. 46.....Grieg
Daybreak.
The death of Asse.
Anitra's dance.
In the halls of the King of Dovre Mountains.
(The imps are chasing Peer Gynt.)
Symphony No. 5, in C minor.....Beethoven
Allegro con brio. Andante con moto.
Allegro (scherzo). Allegro (finale).

Owing to indisposition, Mme. Steinbach-Jahns did not appear, and in consequence a substitution for the vocal numbers announced was made of the "Perpetual Mobile," of Paganini, in which a peculiar and pleasing musical effect was produced by all the violins playing in unison.

BOSTON EVENING RECORD.

Entered at MAY 12. mail matter.

WITHIN AN INCH!

Boston Musicians Just Escape Death

By Accident to a Train at Prescott, Wis.

ST. PAUL, MINN., May 12.—The special train on the Burlington & Northern R.R., bearing the Boston symphony orchestra, was wrecked at Prescott, Wis., yesterday afternoon, and a terrible accident narrowly averted. A mile above Hastings, the train ran into a handcar loaded with section hands, which was thrown 30 feet to one side, and three men, names unknown, instantly killed, and two others severely wounded. The special was derailed and the engine badly crippled. The passengers were roughly knocked about and more or less bruised, but none seriously injured.

Boston Journal.

TUESDAY MORNING, MAY 13, 1890.

Narrow Escape of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

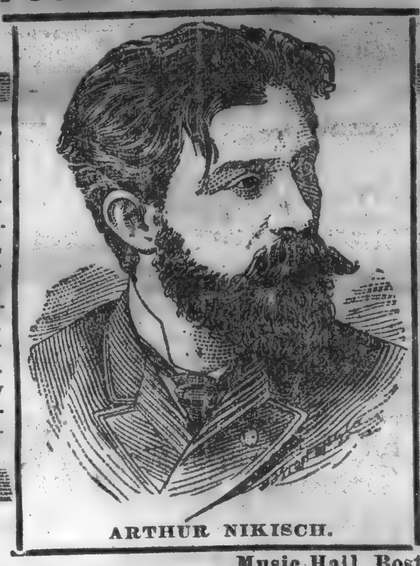
ST. PAUL, Minn., May 12. The special train on the Burlington and Northern Railroad, bearing the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was wrecked at Prescott, Wis., yesterday afternoon, and a terrible accident narrowly averted. A mile above Hastings the train ran into a hand car loaded with section hands, both going at top speed. The hand car was thrown 30 feet to one side, and three men, names unknown, instantly killed, and two others severely wounded. The special was derailed and the engine badly crippled. The passengers were roughly knocked about and more or less bruised, but none seriously injured. A delay of four hours occurred, and an engine sent from here brought in the train. The killed and wounded were cared for at Prescott.

A dispatch to Mr. Higginson says that the Boston Symphony Orchestra train was not wrecked, but made exceptionally good time on the Chicago, Burlington and Northern Road to Minneapolis.

Decker Bros.' Matchless Pianos

ALWAYS IN THE LEAD.

The selection of a Grand Piano of DECKER BROS. make, to be used by Boston Symphony Orchestra (MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Director), unsolicited by either the factory or their representatives, testifies most strongly as to the unpurchased and justly merited prominence of this famous make.



ARTHUR NIKISCH.

Exact copy of letter from F. R. Comee, of "Boston Symphony Orchestra," filling an engagement at Auditorium Thursday Night, May 8th:

Music Hall, Boston, April 22, 1890.

DANIEL QUILP, Manager Amphitheater Auditorium, Louisville, Ky.

Dear Sir:—Kindly have a DECKER BROS. GRAND PIANO tuned to French pitch, to be used at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Thursday, May 8th, at the Amphitheater Auditorium. Yours truly,

F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager Boston Symphony Orchestra.

☞Subject to TYPOGRAPHICAL CORRECTION.☜

Boston Post

TUESDAY MORNING, MAY 13, 1890.

ALL SAFE, AT ANY RATE.

Curiously Contradictory Reports About the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Considerable anxiety was felt in this city yesterday by the appearance in the afternoon papers of a despatch which said that a train upon which the Boston Symphony Orchestra were travelling in the West had been wrecked, but this was followed by other statements, each contradictory, but leaving it certain that no injury has occurred to any of these people. Following is the first despatch:

ST. PAUL, Minn., May 12.—The special train on the Burlington & Northern railroad, bearing the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was wrecked at Prescott, Wis., yesterday afternoon, and a terrible accident narrowly averted A mile above Hastings, the train ran into a handcar loaded with section hands, both going at top speed. The handcar was thrown thirty feet to one side, and three men, names unknown, were instantly killed, and two others severely wounded. The special was derailed and the engine badly crippled. The passengers were roughly knocked about, and more or less bruised, but none seriously injured. A delay of four hours occurred, and an engine sent from here brought in the train. The killed and wounded were cared for at Prescott.

Then the Transcript had this, which was assuring:

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., May 12.—Our Boston Symphony Orchestra special train from St. Louis yesterday struck a hand car and killed two trackmen. No damage was done to the train, and our party are all safe.

FRED R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Next this was given out from the railroad office here:

A despatch from P. S. Eustis, general passenger agent of the C., B. & Q. railroad, Chicago, to H. D. Badgeley, New England agent, Boston, says: "United and Associated Press reports to the effect that the Boston Symphony Orchestra company's train was wrecked en route to Minneapolis are false. The train made an exceptionally good run from St. Louis to Minneapolis."

Finally Mr. Fletcher, Boston agent of the Associated Press, thus explains matters so far as he is able:

Mr. H. L. Higginson is in receipt of a private despatch, containing a denial, from General Superintendent John R. Hastings of the C., B. & N. road that the train bearing the Boston Symphony Orchestra was wrecked on that road Sunday. The despatch says the train made an exceptionally good run and arrived in Minneapolis in good season. It does not, however, deny explicitly that the train ran into a hand-car and was derailed, and that is what our despatch states. Our original despatch came from the United Press and was subsequently confirmed by the Associated Press of New York. The latter has refused Hastings's denial, apparently being satisfied of the truth of the first item.

H. H. FLETCHER.

Mr. Charles A. Ellis of the Music Hall went ahead of the orchestra and was in Chicago yesterday. Mr. Comee, his assistant, is with the orchestra as manager of the concerts. Mrs. Steinbach Jahns is included in the concert party. The full orchestra is not taken on the tour.

ST. LOUIS REPUBLIC.

FORMERLY

THE REPUBLICAN.

SATURDAY, MAY 10, 1890.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The audience which assembled last night in the Exposition Hall to hear the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was by no means as large as the very great merit of the performance deserved. But still any ordinary hall would have been well-filled with the enthusastic audience which thoroughly enjoyed the perfect performance. St. Louis has already had two visits of this organization, under the direction of Mr. Gericke, whose five years' work brought the orchestra to a pitch of perfection in delicacy of treatment not before achieved in this country. But one fault might be found. The work was too fine, too delicate. It lacked strength. Arthur Nikisch has added in his magnificent conducting and training, this one thing, and the orchestral work last night left nothing to be desired. Mr. Nikisch leads his orchestra in the true Hungarian fashion—that is, without notes. In every piece except the accompaniments the score did not appear on the conductor's desk—he had it in his head. By this means he gets closer to his orchestra, is enabled to watch every point, bring out each perfect effect, and keep the whole performance together in a way that would be impossible, if he had to watch the score in addition. In the Wagner "Vorspiel" to "Die Meistersinger" the difference between his conducting and that of Geriche, who gave the same piece last year, was most apparent. While there was all the delicacy imaginable in the tender parts, yet one did not miss that full, broad effect which typifies the life of the mediæval German burghers. The playing of the brasses was unexceptionable, they were full, round and true. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns has a lovely, fresh voice, rich and sympathetic, one might say a thoroughly "healthy" tone. She made a fine impression, especially in the songs with piano, which were exquisitely accompanied by Mr. Nikisch, who plays the piano as well as he conducts. These were regular German "Lieder" sung and played in true German fashion.

Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield - Zeisler, the pianiste, is what may be called an emotional player—her success must depend upon her mood. The first movement of the concerto was rather disappointing, but the pianiste warmed up to her work in the second movement and gave it and the rest of the piece in a dashing style. It is a pity she did not have a better instrument, for the "Steinway" was old and worn rather thin and wiry. The piece she played also was somewhat commonplace, the last movement being a mixture of Dutch hymn and tipsy tarantelle. The pianista would have made a much better effect in a work by a better composer than Litolff. Instead of the Mendelssohn symphony as announced, the symphony No. 4 in D minor of Schumann was played, the change having been made at the request of a prominent musical lady of the city. The Schumann symphony is a much greater composition than that of Mendelssohn, and Mr. Nikisch and his band of true artists showed that they had individually and collectively a true conception of what is probably the finest piece of romantic music ever written. All the exquisite nuances of the treatment where the brass, wood and strings are played off against each other or blended in weirdest harmonies, were worked out to the highest degree of perfection. It is a great treat to hear the brass instruments so well played that one feels their full power without being overpowered by noise. After the thrilling close of this masterpiece the audience gave the conductor a triple recall. The concluding piece, "Les Preludes," by Liszt, has been often played here, and well played, too; but the performance last night was in all respects fully equal, and perhaps in the moving quality of the strings, superior than others. There will be one more concert tonight, at which Beethoven's immortal Fifth Symphony will be played, and all music lovers should attend.

Clipping from Times Buffalo, N. Y.
Date 5/21

...Record. The arrangements are of the best and the ... conducted quietly and orderly.

The Symphony Concert on Thursday

An occasion which no music lover should miss is the concert to be given at Music hall next Thursday evening by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Mr. Arthur Nikisch. The orchestra is composed of 70 trained musicians and is the largest organization of its kind that has ever appeared in this city. The soloists announced are Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, leading dramatic soprano from the Leipzic Stadt theatre, who came to America under special engagement to accompany the orchestra on its tour, and Mr. Anton Hekking, a cellist of high repute. A brilliant and varied programme will be performed, and an evening of rare musical enjoyment may be expected. Tickets are on sale and are being rapidly taken at Denton & Cottier's.

St. Louis Daily Globe-Democrat, Saturday

Morning, May 10.

GRAND MUSIC HALL.

One of the finest entertainments ever given at the Grand Music Hall was the concert last evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Arthur Nikisch. There was a large audience present, and one, too, that was appreciative. Mr. Nikisch is a mild-mannered gentleman, who is rather quiet in his movements, and shows the spirit of a master in the position of conductor. He dosen't swing the baton as if he was a madman wildly fighting an imaginary foe, but every movement is as graceful as the waving bough in a summer breeze. Mrs. Steinbach-Jahns, the dramatic soprano, was given what might be called an ovation. Her voice is one of excellent quality and power, and her rendition of the aria, "O, Lovely Bells," was heartily applauded. She probably appeared to the greatest advantage in "Die Quelle," from Goldmark. Miss Fannie Bloomfield also proved to be a valuable acquisition to the concert. The orchestra displayed its wonderful training and gave an exhibition of its best work, perhaps, in the Mendelssohn Symphony in A (Italian). The concert was one which can be keenly enjoyed by the critic and the ordinary lover of music alike.

The last concert is to-night.

NOTES.

Clipping from Albany N.Y.
Date 5/22

...Bell.

Amusements.

The individual excellence of the players composing the Boston Symphony orchestra is indicated by the fact that in its ranks are found the members of the two leading string quartettes of the country, the Kneisel quartette and the Adamowski quartette. With a membership of seventy such artists as these, it is not to be wondered at that the performances of the Boston orchestra surpass anything of the kind ever known in America. The Boston orchestra, under its celebrated conductor, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, will be heard here for the first time at Harmanus Bleecker hall, to-morrow evening, in a brilliant programme, well calculated to display the great superiority of this splendid organization. One of Leipzic's great operatic sopranos, Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, will appear as soloist, as will also Mr. Timothee Adamowski, the well known violinist. Mr. Nikisch has shown excellent judgment in arranging a programme which is not too severe, but will appeal to all classes of music lovers. The Liszt symphonic poem, "Les Preludes," and Grieg's suite, "Peer Gynt," are representative examples of the most brilliant of modern orchestral compositions, while the performance of that magnificent creation, Beethoven's fifth symphony, by the full orchestra of seventy, will be something never to be forgotten. The exceedingly low scale of prices for such a performance brings it within the reach of all, and a very large attendance may be expected.

Clipping from Express Albany, N.Y.
Date 5/21

...company.

The next great event in the local amusement world, will be to-morrow night, the concert by the famous Boston Symphony orchestra of 70 performers, under the baton of Arthur Nikisch, and Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, dramatic soprano, and Tommaso Adamowski, the eminent violinist. The programme will include Liszt's symphonic poem, "Les Preludes;" Greigh's brilliant suite, "Peer Gynt," and Beethoven's immortal Fifth Symphony. Popular prices will prevail, ranging from 50 cents to $1. The sale is now open at the music stores.

The Symphony Concert.

The four weeks tour of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, conductor, which will close with the concert at Harmanus Bleecker hall to-morrow evening, has been a succession of triumphs for the great organization and its gifted conductor. The Chicago concerts were packed to the doors, and the critics of that city vied with each other in their expressions of delight at the perfect performances of the orchestra. For the Cleveland concert on Wednesday evening every seat in the immense Music hall had been sold a fortnight in advance, and in Milwaukee, Detroit and Buffalo, the desire to hear the Boston organization was hardly less. A splendid program is announced for Friday, and no lover of music can afford to miss the only opportunity to hear this superb orchestra in this city. With a room available and so well adapted for orchestral concerts as Harmanus Bleecker hall, it is to be hoped that the attendance will be such as to induce the management to arrange several visits of the Boston orchestra for next

[130]

THE ENQUIRER.

CINCINNATI.

THURSDAY.....MAY 8, 1890.

A MUSICAL FEAST.

Such Was the Second Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert at the Odeon Last Night.

There was a large audience at the Odeon last night to listen to the second concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The director of this famous musical organization, Arthur Nikisch, is a wonderful interpreter of Weber's and Beethoven's music. As a conductor his every movement is graceful and refined. There is no affectation about him.

The overture "Euryanthe," from Weber, is a splendid opera full of beautiful and characteristic melody. The movements of the "concerto" were captivating. The piece opens with a lengthy passage for the orchestra, and in its conclusion the whole orchestra breaks forth, the effect being more easily felt than described. The dramatic poem, "Peer Syrut," in four movements, illustrates a pretty Norwegian folk-legend. The suite as played is a reduction of the voluminous music Greig composed for the production of the drama on the stage. The last movement is a somewhat grotesque march, scored for a full modern orchestra, and pictures the imps tormenting Peer Syrut. The production drew forth repeated applause. Mr. Frank Kneisel, the solo violinist, is a master of his art, and his renditions last night were repeatedly encored. Much to the regret of the audience, Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, the soprano soloist, was taken suddenly ill during the evening and could not sing. Her singing shows wonderful power, and her non-appearance was universally regretted. The closing piece was Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, in C minor, consisting of four movements. This most famous of that wonderful musician's nine symphonies was superbly rendered. It is full of somber, mysterious music, and the play of the instruments has something sinister about it, seeming to spring from the state of mind which conceived the scene on the Blocksberg in "Faust." The finale is probably the greatest effort of which music is capable, and it would seem impossible to surpass it.

THE COMMERCIAL GAZETTE, CINCINNATI, THURSDAY, MAY 8, 189

The Boston Orchestra.

The second concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the Odeon last night, was given before another delighted audience, and the general impression prevailed that the performance of this splendid organization even excelled that of the previous evening. The applause was frequent, hearty and spontaneous. The programme was given as follows:

Overture—Euryanthe.....Weber
Allegro non troppo, from Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, in D, Op. 77.....Brahms
Suite—Peer Gynt, Op. 46.....Grieg
Daybreak.
The death of Asse.
Anitra's dance.
In the halls of the King of Dovre Mountains.
(The imps are chasing Peer Gynt.)
Symphony No. 5, in C minor.....Beethoven
Allegro con brio. Andante con moto.
Allegro (scherzo). Allegro (finale).

Owing to indisposition, Mme. Steinbach-Jahns did not appear, and in consequence a substitution for the vocal numbers announced, was made of the "Perpetual Mobile," of Paganini, in which a peculiar and pleasing musical effect was produced by all the violins playing in unison.

BOSTON EVENING RECORD.

Entered at [illegible] mail matter.]

MAY 12.

WITHIN AN INCH!

Boston Musicians Just Escape Death

By Accident to a Train at Prescott, Wis.

ST. PAUL, MINN., May 12.—The special train on the Burlington & Northern R.R., bearing the Boston symphony orchestra, was wrecked at Prescott, Wis., yesterday afternoon, and a terrible accident narrowly averted. A mile above Hastings, the train ran into a handcar loaded with section hands, which was thrown 30 feet to one side, and three men, names unknown, instantly killed, and two others severely wounded. The special was derailed and the engine badly crippled. The passengers were roughly knocked about and more or less bruised, but none seriously injured.

Boston Journal.

TUESDAY MORNING, MAY 13, 1890.

Narrow Escape of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

ST. PAUL, Minn., May 12. The special train on the Burlington and Northern Railroad, bearing the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was wrecked at Prescott, Wis., yesterday afternoon, and a terrible accident narrowly averted. A mile above Hastings the train ran into a hand car loaded with section hands, both going at top speed. The hand car was thrown 30 feet to one side, and three men, names unknown, instantly killed, and two others severely wounded. The special was derailed and the engine badly crippled. The passengers were roughly knocked about and more or less bruised, but none seriously injured. A delay of four hours occurred, and an engine sent from here brought in the train. The killed and wounded were cared for at Prescott.

A dispatch to Mr. Higginson says that the Boston Symphony Orchestra train was not wrecked, but made exceptionally good time on the Chicago, Burlington and Northern Road to Minneapolis.

Courier-Journal.

LOUISVILLE

THURSDAY.....MAY 8, 1890

Decker Bros.' Matchless Pianos

ALWAYS IN THE LEAD.

The selection of a Grand Piano of DECKER BROS. make, to be used by Boston Symphony Orchestra (MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Director), unsolicited by either the factory or their representatives, testifies most strongly as to the unpurchased and justly merited prominence of this famous make.

ARTHUR NIKISCH.

Exact copy of letter from F. R. Comee, of "Boston Symphony Orchestra," filling an engagement at Auditorium Thursday Night, May 8th:

Music Hall, Boston, April 22, 1890.

DANIEL QUILP, Manager Amphitheater Auditorium, Louisville, Ky.

Dear Sir:—Kindly have a DECKER BROS. GRAND PIANO tuned to French pitch, to be used at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Thursday, May 8th, at the Amphitheater Auditorium. Yours truly,

F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager Boston Symphony Orchestra.

☞Subject to TYPOGRAPHICAL CORRECTION.☜

Boston Post

TUESDAY MORNING, MAY 13, 1890.

ALL SAFE, AT ANY RATE.

Curiously Contradictory Reports About the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Considerable anxiety was felt in this city yesterday by the appearance in the afternoon papers of a despatch which said that a train upon which the Boston Symphony Orchestra were travelling in the West had been wrecked, but this was followed by other statements, each contradictory, but leaving it certain that no injury has occurred to any of these people. Following is the first despatch:

ST. PAUL, Minn., May 12.—The special train on the Burlington & Northern railroad, bearing the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was wrecked at Prescott, Wis., yesterday afternoon, and a terrible accident narrowly averted A mile above Hastings, the train ran into a handcar loaded with section hands, both going at top speed. The handcar was thrown thirty feet to one side, and three men, names unknown, were instantly killed, and two others severely wounded. The special was derailed and the engine badly crippled. The passengers were roughly knocked about, and more or less bruised, but none seriously injured. A delay of four hours occurred, and an engine sent from here brought in the train. The killed and wounded were cared for at Prescott.

Then the Transcript had this, which was assuring:

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., May 12.—Our Boston Symphony Orchestra special train from St. Louis yesterday struck a hand car and killed two trackmen. No damage was done to the train, and our party are all safe.

FRED R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Next this was given out from the railroad office here:

A despatch from P. S. Eustis, general passenger agent of the C., B. & Q. railroad, Chicago, to H. D. Badgeley, New England agent, Boston, says: "United and Associated Press reports to the effect that the Boston Symphony Orchestra company's train was wrecked en route to Minneapolis are false. The train made an exceptionally good run from St. Louis to Minneapolis."

Finally Mr. Fletcher, Boston agent of the Associated Press, thus explains matters so far as he is able:

Mr. H. L. Higginson is in receipt of a private despatch, containing a denial, from General Superintendent John R. Hastings of the C., B. & N. road that the train bearing the Boston Symphony Orchestra was wrecked on that road Sunday. The despatch says the train made an exceptionally good run and arrived in Minneapolis in good season. It does not, however, deny explicitly that the train ran into a hand-car and was derailed, and that is what our despatch states. Our original despatch came from the United Press and was subsequently confirmed by the Associated Press of New York. The latter has refused Hastings's denial, apparently being satisfied of the truth of the first item.

H. H. FLETCHER.

Mr. Charles A. Ellis of the Music Hall went ahead of the orchestra and was in Chicago yesterday. Mr. Comee, his assistant, is with the orchestra as manager of the concerts. Mrs. Steinbach Jahns is included in the concert party. The full orchestra is not taken on the tour.

pping from.....
Times Brooklyn, N. Y.
te.....
5/21.

[illegible] record. The arrangements are of the [illegible] and the [illegible] will be conducted quietly and orderly.

he Symphony Concert on Thursday

An occasion which no music lover should iss is the concert to be given at Music hall ext Thursday evening by the Boston Symhony orchestra under the direction of Mr. rthur Nikisch. The orchestra is composed f 70 trained musicians and is the largest rganization of its kind that has ever apeared in this city. The soloists announced re Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, leading dramatic oprano from the Leipzic Stadt theatre, who ame to America under special engagement accompany the orchestra on its tour, and Ir. Anton Hekking, a cellist of high repute. brilliant and varied programme will be erformed, and an evening of rare musical njoyment may be expected. Tickets are on le and are being rapidly taken at Denton & ttier's.

ST. LOUIS REPUBLIC.

FORMERLY

THE REPUBLICAN.

SATURDAY, MAY 10, 1890.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The audience which assembled last night in the Exposition Hall to hear the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was by no means as large as the very great merit of the performance deserved. But still any ordinary hall would have been well-filled with the enthusastic audience which thoroughly enjoyed the perfect performance. St. Louis has already had two visits of this organization, under the direction of Mr. Gericke, whose five years' work brought the orchestra to a pitch of perfection in delicacy of treatment not before achieved in this country. But one fault might be found. The work was too fine, too delicate. It lacked strength. Arthur Nikisch has added in his magnificent conducting and training, this one thing, and the orchestral work last night left nothing to be desired. Mr. Nikisch leads his orchestra in the true Hungarian fashion—that is, without notes. In every piece except the accompaniments the score did not appear on the conductor's desk—he had it in his head. By this means he gets closer to his orchestra, is enabled to watch every point, bring out each perfect effect, and keep the whole performance together in a way that would be impossible, if he had to watch the score in addition. In the Wagner "Vorspiel" to "Die Meistersinger" the difference between his conducting and that of Geriche, who gave the same piece last year, was most apparent. While there was all the delicacy imaginable in the tender parts, yet one did not miss that full, broad effect which typifies the life of the mediæval German burghers. The playing of the brasses was unexceptionable, they were full, round and true. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns has a lovely, fresh voice, rich and sympathetic, one might say a thoroughly "healthy" tone. She made a fine impression, especially in the songs with piano, which were exquisitely accompanied by Mr. Nikisch, who plays the piano as well as he conducts. These were regular German "Lieder" sung and played in true German fashion.

Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield - Zeisler, the pianiste, is what may be called an emotional player—her success must depend upon her mood. The first movement of the concerto was rather disappointing, but the pianiste warmed up to her work in the second movement and gave it and the rest of the piece in a dashing style. It is a pity she did not have a better instrument, for the "Steinway" was old and worn rather thin and wiry. The piece she played also was somewhat commonplace, the last movement being a mixture of Dutch hymn and tipsy tarantelle. The pianista would have made a much better effect in a work by a better composer than Litolff. Instead of the Mendelssohn symphony as announced, the symphony No. 4 in D minor of Schumann was played, the change having been made at the request of a prominent musical lady of the city. The Schumann symphony is a much greater composition than that of Mendelssohn, and Mr. Nikisch and his band of true artists showed that they had individually and collectively a true conception of what is probably the finest piece of romantic music ever written. All the exquisite nuances of the treatment where the brass, wood and strings are played off against each other or blended in weirdest harmonies, were worked out to the highest degree of perfection. It is a great treat to hear the brass instruments so well played that one feels their full power without being overpowered by noise. After the thrilling close of this masterpiece the audience gave the conductor a triple recall. The concluding piece, "Les Preludes," by Liszt, has been often played here, and well played, too; but the performance last night was in all respects fully equal, and perhaps in the moving quality of the strings, superior than others. There will be one more concert tonight, at which Beethoven's immortal Fifth Symphony will be played, and all music lovers should attend.

St. Louis Daily Globe-Democrat, Saturday Morning, May 10,

GRAND MUSIC HALL.

One of the finest entertainments ever given at the Grand Music Hall was the concert last evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Arthur Nikisch. There was a large audience present, and one, too, that was appreciative. Mr. Nikisch is a mild-mannered gentleman, who is rather quiet in his movements, and shows the spirit of a master in the position of conductor. He dosen't swing the baton as if he was a madman wildly fighting an imaginary foe, but every movement is as graceful as the waving bough in a summer breeze. Mrs. Steinbach-Jahns, the dramatic soprano, was given what might be called an ovation. Her voice is one of excellent quality and power, and her rendition of the aria, "O, Lovely Bells," was heartily applauded. She probably appeared to the greatest advantage in "Die Quelle," from Goldmark. Miss Fannie Bloomfield also proved to be a valuable acquisition to the concert. The orchestra displayed its wonderful training and gave an exhibition of its best work, perhaps, in the Mendelssohn Symphony in A (Italian). The concert was one which can be keenly enjoyed by the critic and the ordinary lover of music alike.

The last concert is to-night.

NOTES.

Clipping from Times Albany N.Y.
Date 5/22

[illegible] Bell. [illegible] 10)

Amusements.

The individual excellence of the players composing the Boston Symphony orchestra is indicated by the fact that in its ranks are found the members of the two leading string quartettes of the country, the Kneisel quartette and the Adamowski quartette. With a membership of seventy such artists as these, it is not to be wondered at that the performances of the Boston orchestra surpass anything of the kind ever known in America. The Boston orchestra, under its celebrated conductor, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, will be heard here for the first time at Harmanus Bleecker hall, to-morrow evening, in a brilliant programme, well calculated to display the great superiority of this splendid organization. One of Leipzic's great operatic sopranos, Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, will appear as soloist, as will also Mr. Timothee Adamowski, the well known violinist. Mr. Nikisch has shown excellent judgment in arranging a programme which is not too severe, but will appeal to all classes of music lovers. The Liszt symphohic poem, "Les Preludes," and Grieg's suite, "Peer Gynt," are representative examples of the most brilliant of modern orchestral compositions, while the performance of that magnificent creation, Beethoven's fifth symphony, by the full orchestra of seventy, will be something never to be forgotten. The exceedingly low scale of prices for such a performance brings it within the reach of all, and a very large attendance may be expected.

Clipping from Times Albany N.Y.
Date 5/22

The Symphony Concert.

The four weeks tour of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, conductor, which will close with the concert at Harmanus Bleecker hall to-morrow evening, has been a succession of triumphs for the great organization and its gifted conductor. The Chicago concerts were packed to the doors, and the critics of that city vied with each other in their expressions of delight at the perfect performances of the orchestra. For the Cleveland concert on Wednesday evening every seat in the immense Music hall had been sold a fortnight in advance, and in Milwaukee, Detroit and Buffalo, the desire to hear the Boston organization was hardly less. A splendid program is announced for Friday, and no lover of music can afford to miss the only opportunity to hear this superb orchestra in this city. With a room available and so well adapted for orchestral concerts as Harmanus Bleecker hall, it is to be hoped that the attendance will be such as to induce the management to arrange several visits of the Boston orchestra for next

Clipping from Express Albany, N.Y.
Date 5/21

[illegible] accompany him to star[illegible] company.

The next great event in the local amusement world, will be to-morrow night, the concert by the famous Boston Symphony orchestra of 70 performers, under the baton of Arthur Nikisch, and Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, dramatic soprano, and Tommasso Adamowski, the eminent violinist. The programme will include Liszt's symphonic poem, "Les Preludes;" Greigh's brilliant suite, "Peer Gynt," and Beethoven's immortal Fifth Symphony. Popular prices will prevail, ranging from 50 cents to $1. The sale is now open at the music stores.

VOLUME XI.—SATURDAY EVENING SPECTATOR MINNEAPOLIS, SATURDAY, MAY 3, 1890.—TWELVE PAGES.

COLISEUM CONCERT.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra in Minneapolis.

The Famous Organization and its Great Conductor, Nikisch.

ONE week from next Monday evening will occur at the University Coliseum one of the most notable musical events ever know in the Northwest, being a concert by the famons Boston Symphony Orchestra of seventy members, under the direction of the great conductor, Arthur Nikisch. From sale of seats, the receipts already amount to several thousand dollars, and upon the occasion of the concert the great Coliseum, seating 4,000 to 5,000 people, promises to be filled to its utmost capacity. The local management of the concert is by Mr. Louis Miller.

The great organization, which now makes its initial appearance in Minneapolis, was founded nine years ago, and has been growing in excellence until it is now acknowledged to be the finest orchestra in this country, and the equal, with perhaps a single exception, of any in the world. Its Boston season opens usually about October 15 and closes late in April. Twenty-four Friday afternoon public rehearsals and twenty-four Saturday evening concerts are given in the famous Music Hall, which seats 2,400. Season tickets are placed at $7.50 and $12, but the $12 seats are usually sold at auction at an average of $20 each, and every reserved seat is generally sold a month before the first concert, purchasers sometimes standing in line for five days and nights before the commencement of the sale. The program is arranged to last and hour and a half, and usually comprises an overture, a solo, an orchestral selection of a light order, another solo, and as a closing selection some standard symphony.

In each winter month, a week is devoted to a trip to New Haven, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. These concerts have this season been a great triumph. The orchestra started on its four weeks western tour a week ago. It will appear at Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Richmond, Columbus, O., Louisville, St. Louis, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Chicago, Milwaukee, Ann Arbor, Detroit, Cleveland, Pittsburg, Buffalo and Albany.

The liberal policy of Mr. Henry L. Higginson the founder, and the exacting requirements of the Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and his predecessors have resulted in the assembling of a body of artists of unusual ability, well fitted to sustain the high standard of the organization. Originally made up of the best available players of Boston and New York, each year the Orchestra has been strengthened by the acquisition of superior performers wherever they could be found, until it is now everywhere conceded that no such company has before been brought together in America.

In its ranks may be found representatives from the leading orchestras of Vienna, Leipzig, Paris and London. At the head of the violins as concertmeister is Herr Franz Knisel, who is ably supported by Mr. C. M. Loeffler, Mr. T. Adamowski, and a corps of players, every member of which is a solo artist. At the first desk of the celli sit Herr Anton Hekking and Herr Leo Schulz, new comers of whom flattering accounts are heard. Patrons of the concert will notice with pleasure the brilliant playing on flute and obeo of Messrs Molé and Sautet, who came two years ago from the Opéra Comique, Paris. Other prominent players among the wind instruments are Herr Xavel Reiter, first horn, Mr. Pierre Muller, first trumpet, late of the Lamoureux Orchestra, Paris, and Herr Goldschmidt, first clarinet.

An extensive library collection during the past nine months, containing the orchestral compositions of the old masters and all worthy modern works, enables Mr. Nikisch to present an infinite variety of programs, including the most interesting, instructive and attractive selections. To give permanent value to the concert and add to the enjoyment of those who attend, an analytical program will be issued in book form, similar to those which have been received with so much favor in Boston and other cities.

The great conductor of the orchestra, Arthur Nikisch, came from Leipzig last September. He was born Oct. 12, 1855, in Lichtenstein. In earliest childhood the boy showed such extraordinary talent that his parents determined to educate him as a musician. He began his studies with the violin, and he mastered this instrument with such ease and so completely that, at the age of eight, he appeared in public with most extraordinary success,—in fact, the young prodigy received a genuine ovation. His first studies in harmony and organ-playing were under the direction of the organist Prochazka, in the neighboring town of Buschtowitz; and in all branches the lad made such remarkable progress as to enable him to enter the Royal Conservatory in Vienna at the unusually early age of eleven. He remained at the conservatory for eight years, during which time he won many more prizes for his compositions, as well as the first prize and silver medal for violin playing.

He applied for a desk among the first violinists at the Royal Opera; and obtaining this honorable position without the least difficulty, he occupied it during four years, receiving in this way the best possible practical instruction in conducting. During this time, he played through an enormous repertoire of operatic and concert music, aud had constantly before him the splendid example of such magnificent conductors as Richter and Jahn. At the end of his experiences as a member of the orchestra (1878), he went with the celebrated manager, Angelo Neumann, to Leipzig, and was installed as assistant conductor in the Old Opera House. He remained in this position for a year, drilling the chorus and soloists, and conducting the smaller operas and operettas; but Neumann's experience had shown him that he had found a real musical wonder, and at the end of the year he was transferred to the New Opera House as head conductor, where he remained until he left for Boston. He made his debut in this position with one of the most magnificent performances of "Tannhauser" ever heard in Leipzig, and from that moment he was universally acknowledged as one of the most gifted and important conductors in Europe. It is no exaggeration to say that he has done more for music in Leipzig than any other individual can justly claim. Under his care and direction, the Leipzig Theatre orchestra has gained a European fame, which entitles it to an equal or even superior place to the Gewandhaus orchestra.

Nikisch has also, during these years in Leipzig, distinguished himself quite as much as a concert conductor as in the theatre. He conducted on many occasions in the Gewandhaus as Reinecke's substitute, and has also given many remarkably successful concerts with his own theatre orchestra. More especially noteworthy, however, is the manner in which he conducted the recent monster concerts of the Listz Society. With them, he achieved a success which caused all the noted German critics to acknowledge that Arthur Nikisch is one of the most brilliant and talented living conductors, both in the theatre and on the concert stage.

A fitting conclusion of this sketch will be a portion of a letter received by the SPECTATOR last Fall from a Boston lady correspondent, formerly a resident o this state. It is eloquently descriptive of the beautiful harmonies evoked by the great orchestra, under the directing genius of the wonderful Nikisch.

* * "I was glad to recoguize so many familiar faces among the players, but my interest naturally centered in the new conductor. Ruskin says that the two essential qualities of a great artist are sympathy and imagination; and as soon as Mr. Nikisch came before the audience that night I saw that he possessed the first of these; his subsequent work revealed the second. His graceful self-possession wins at once, but when he calls the attention of his orchestra and takes his place before them, it becomes evident that he possesses not only himself but orchestra and audience as well. That slight, gentle-swaying figure fascinates with its wonderful magnetism. The baton is raised high, still there is silence. Gradually every bow is made ready for action, every eye is fixed upon that lifted hand; an instant of suspense, then a sudden sweep of the white hands, and as though it were a mighty harp the great orchestra responds. During the Haydn symphony I almost forgot the score before me as I read its interpretation in the conductor. Directness and simplicity in the first movement, a quaint merriment in the last—surely, if spirits do come back, 'Papa Haydn' must have been pleased as he heard his symphony.

"The orchestra seemed inspired with true feeling of Mozart's great work, showing as it does the highest soaring of the artist soul, yet touching our most human sympathies by its plaintive sweetness and unrest. There were hearts beneath the violins as well as skillful hands upon the bows, the first movement was so full of new and exquisite beauty in its slow tempo, but over all was the perfect control and self-control of the master mind. At times the baton seemed almost unnecessary, his uneonsciously graceful gesture expressed so much. What could better call forth the singing voices of the strings than the gentle undulating motion of those white hands? What summon a tone of organ quality like their strong, downward pressure? Yet when the nature of the music required it, with what splendid precision, with what fire and energy he led his men! The power of his enthusiasm and their artistic and technical excellence must produce wonderful climaxes.

"Berlioz says that in the fifth symphony more than in any of its predecessors, we see the real life of Beethoven. Without doubt it is the most famous of the nine, appealing as it does alike to artist and amateur. The first movement throbbing with hopeless dispair, now breaking forth in a wild cry, now sinking back in utter exhaustion, speaks the tempest-tossed human heart, and brings the man of immortal fame nearer to us who suffer, strive and fail to-day, to be forgotten to-morrow.

"No one who watched Mr. Nikisch's conducting of this work could fail to see that in his mind there was no doubts as to its true conception. He had translated every bar to his own satisfaction and read much between the lines. The absence of score gave an added feeling of confidence in him; he had made Beethoven's symphony his own. The familiar andante, with its recurring phrase, at once so simple and so sad, can never fail to call forth our tenderest sympathies.

"The cherzo is weird, almost uncanny

(Continued on last page.)

ARTHUR NIKISCH, CONDUCTOR BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

MME. STEINBACH-JAHNS, VOCAL SOLOIST, BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTA CONCERT.

(Continued from first page.)

in its fascination. What a fury seems to seize the double basses in the trio as a kind of premonition of what is to follow! But the transition to the finale must be intrusted to instruments less inclined to let their feelings run away with them. When the violins and drums held their opposing chords in sweet mysterious conflict, and the decided rhythm of the allegro had appeared, the victorious march began with an effect truely thrilling. Mr. Nikisch was simply magnificent. He is a small man for such a great emotion, and from head to foot he seemed electrified with the true spirit of a great master. Even after the fanfare style had given place to the lofty dignity which never forskaes Beethoven one felt the thrill of triumph. I could only think of the ideas the ancients had of the power of their gods; it was like seeing Phoebus in his chariot dash across the noon-day.

"The tempest of applause which followed the last note shook the house—I could feel the vibration. The conductor turned to acknowledge it. The spell was broken, and I saw only 'a man of like passions as we are;' the pale, thoughtful face, deep-set, expressive eyes and dark hair; the white hands, the graceful deference to an enthusiastic public—Mr Arthur Nikisch. But I came away feeling that something greater than he—perhaps the spirit from that silent statue—had led the finale of the Fifth Symphony.

"That night I dreamed a strange thing. I seemed to be on a ship in mid-ocean. There had been a storm just before sunset, and in the east I saw a wonderful rainbow. There was crimson, as the rich, full tone of a horn; there was violet, as the soaring of the violins, and between the crimson and the violet was a harmonious blending of colors, each perfect in itself, yet a part of the whole, as the separate instruments in the orchestra unite in the symphony; and, as I looked, the glory of my rainbow seemed to cover the sky; there were twelve rainbows mounting one above another. I looked about the silent vessel and out over the ocean, which had no voice for me, and realized that in all the world I was alone but for the beauty of my rainbow. The sun sank in the west, and my dream was lost in the shadows."

The Tribune.

FOU CHICAGO 1847.

THURSDAY, MAY 15, 1890.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Nikisch, gave a symphony concert last evening at Central Music Hall before a large and brilliant audience. As this was the first appearance of the orchestra in this city since the change of conductor not a little curiosity was felt regarding the new leader and his work. The program opened with Liszt's magnificent symphonic poem, "Les Preludes." Of course, no two conductors will interpret the work exactly alike, nor will any conductor always give the work precisely the same treatment, but Mr. Nikisch presented a reading of the composition which differs in many ways from the generally accepted interpretation—that is to say, from the outlines usually followed in the main. In the first place, the tempo was considerably slower than that at which the work is usually taken, and the effect was much better for that reason. There was a majestic swing in the movement which has not been observable in other interpretations, and which was highly satisfactory except towards the close, in which something more of rapidity would have been desirable as producing a climax of greater brilliancy. Still, the earlier portions were so admirable that it may seem a little ungracious to find fault with the close. In the treatment of the individual instruments there was ample evidence that study and thought had been devoted to the elaboration of the various details. The individualization of the different instruments was remarkable, many things being heard that have hitherto only been seen in the score but not brought out in actual performance. The balance between brass and strings, too, was unusually well preserved, the latter obtaining in many places more prominence than usual, which is a distinct gain in the general effect—due no doubt partly, though not wholly, to the large number of strings employed. In the performance of the orchestra, considered as a whole, there was a virility never found in its work under Mr. Gericke. The Grieg suite, "Peer Gynt," was also delightfully played, the peculiar coloring being brought into great prominence. At the close of the last movement the applause was so spontaneous and long-continued that the movement had to be repeated. The Schumann symphony in D minor received an equally broad and dignified interpretation. It, too, was taken slower than the usual tempo, resulting in a marked improvement in clearness and impressiveness.

Mrs. Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler played the F minor concerto of Chopin with brilliant technical facility and beautiful shading and phrasing. The slow movement was particularly admirable in its artistic finish, while the more showy portions of the work were given with splendid fire and spirit.

Mme. Steinbach-Jahns was a disappointment. Her style is dramatic and she has a voice of considerable volume, but her intonation is not always pure, and the quality of tone which she produces is not good. There are many singers in America who would have been far more acceptable.

St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

SATURDAY, MAY 10, 1890.

Opening Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—At the Theaters.

Arthur Nikisch, the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a melancholy man. His form is slight, his legs are thin, his head is large and his heavy hair is carefully combed in careless lines. His bow is long and low, and the shadow on his handsome face is never lifted. Upon the stand he is the embodiment of formalism, though his direction is nervous, apparently erratic, and all his movements are angular.

One would imagine that he would have more moods than a pet tenor, and more whims than a company of sopranos.

These are impressions on a first sight of Gericke's successor in the control of that splendid organization. He is, because of peculiarities, something of a trial during the introductory movement of the first number. One fears that Nikisch has been delayed, is ill or is suffering from an accidental injury, and a substitute is endeavoring to direct the orchestra.

Before the number is ended Nikisch has a hold upon your heart and mind, has won your confidence and then you will forget his peculiarities and cease saying to the inner self, "Gericke's place has not been fitly filled."

A parquette full of ladies and gentlemen last night heard the first concert given in Music Hall by the Symphony Orchestra since the change of directors. If there had been any doubt of the orchestra's continued excellence the concert proved conclusively there was no foundation for it. Those who did not doubt, were given such a musical treat as few St. Louis audiences have enjoyed, and those who staid away missed the substance for an enchanting memory.

The programme was skilfully constructed. The numbers were near the popular heart, and if the word was not so worn, one might say that an artist had built the concert, that an artist directed it and that artists rendered it. But the word no longer has any meaning and the sentences are not descriptive.

The "Meistersinger" introduction showed the orchestra's strength. Schumann's symphony (No. 4) in D minor, substituted for Mendelssohn's Italian symphony, showed the director's genius. Besides these numbers the work of the orchestra included accompaniments for Mrs. Steinbach-Jahns and Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, and Liszt's "Les Preludes," the final number.

Mrs. Jahn's voice is rich and full. It is used intelligently and won prolonged applause. Recalls followed every number sung, but the singer won most certainly on her little bits sung with piano accompaniment. Arthur Nikisch played the accompaniments—without ostentation the director took the seat at the piano and played delicately while the lady held the eye and ear of the house. That was the remarkable feature of the concert. A viola player turned the music for him, and a second violin insisted on helping to place the piano in the proper position.

Mrs. Zeisler's number, Litloff's "Holland National Symphony," was quite the best thing she has ever done in St. Louis, and she is very well known here. The composition was new to most ears, and the rendition met with a hearty reception. The closing passages of the andante aroused great enthusiasm.

To-night the orchestra gives the second and last concert of this season, introducing as soloists Franz Kneisel (violin) and Leo Schulz (violoncello). Following is the programme:

Goldmark.....Overture, "Sakuntala"
Brahms—First movement from concerto for violin and orchestra in D, Op. 77.
Allegro non troppo. (Cadenza by Mr. Kneisel.)
Mr. Franz Kneisel.
Greig.....Suite, "Peer Gynt," Op. 46
"Daybreak."
"The Death of Aase."
"Anitra's Dance."
"In the Halls of the King of the Dovre Mountains."
(The imps are chasing Peer Gynt.)
Eckert—Concerto for violoncello in A minor, Op. 26,
Mr. Leo Schultz.
Allegro moderato, Andante; Scherzo vivace; Andante.
Allegro non troppo (Rondo a la Cosaque).
Beethoven.....Symphony No. 5, in C minor
Allegro con brio.
Andante con moto.
Allegro (Scherzo).
Allegro (Finale).

ping from Tribune
Albany N. Y.
5/9/90

power and S... which Mr. Linde presented it last w...

The Boston Symphony Concert.

Those who attend the grand concert of the celebrated Boston Symphony orchestra on Friday evening at the new hall will enjoy a musical feast. Beethoven's superb fifth symphony will be played in its entirety for the first time in Albany and the program embraces several novelties. If this concert is a financial success Manager Oliver hopes to arrange for a series of these grand symphony concerts next season. There is a great desire to see Herr Nickish, the celebrated Hungarian conductor whose masterly leading has been the source of great praise from the New York and Boston critics. Our musical and cultured people should turn out in full force and make this engagement a great financial success. Choice seats may be had at the music stores.

The Tribune.

MINNEAPOLIS, MAY 12, 1890.

IN THE CITY.

Arthur Nikisch, the Orchestra Leader, and His 74 Musicians, in the City.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Mme. Steinbach-Jahns and Herr Arthur Vikisch, arrived on its special train last night about two hours late, owing to an accident, reference to which is made in another column, and the entire party proceeded at once to the West Hotel, where supper was served to the belated guests. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns could not be seen, being fatigued from the excitement of the journey and the accidents; but Herr Nikisch talked easily and comprehensively on musical matters for over an hour. He first summarized his American experience by saying that high as had been his expectations regarding the American musical public, the reality transcended his most favorable opinion. He then went on in praise of the energetic character of the new world's typical characters. Everything breathes new life, strength and vigor, especially referring to the twin cities whose phenomenal growth had been explained to him.

Of the Hub he said: "In spite of all the ridicule cast on Boston culture and taste, it is the leading city of America in the higher orchestral music. There is no fashion that could draw crowded houses for a series of 24 weeks every winter to hear programs composed mainly of the strictest masterworks. It is genuine enthusiasm for music that draws the Music Hall audiences in the Boston Symphony concerts, and their rapturous applause of such a difficult work as Brahm's C minor Symphony is not feigned. This is what pleases me—this true and deep love of the classics in musical art. They are appreciated, and every one in the orchestra feels it, and all put on their nettle. "There is no hoodwinking a Boston Music Hall audience in the slightest degree," said the celebrated conductor, with a most convincing turn of the head.

Regarding the present state of musical matters in Germany, he said: "The younger generation has not produced anything of serious importance in composition, though there is plenty of the lighter styles written every day. But Wagner is alone in his magnificent and sublime operatic conceptions."

Discoursing on different composers, he gave a decided preference to Brahms as the greatest living symphonic composer. "There are many of the pleasing composers whose works are important," said he, "Dvorak, Moskowski, but the classic compositions, the works that grow on you with every hearing, are very scarce. The lighter forms are catchy at first, but soon lose their charm, whereas the genuine classics, from even being repellant in some cases, grow more and more into the heart and give it some of the strength of the character whose genius inspired its creation."

Regarding his work in orchestra, he said whenever he undertook to conduct a work, he studied it till he knew it as if it was his own composition and then he directed from memory, when every one in the orchestra was thoroughly imbued with his artistic conception, "And when they play with fire and zeal there is no lagging," he replied.

"Berlin, the metropolis of Germany," he added, "has by no means the finest orchestra nor the most musical public. The orchestra there, though composed of artists individually, has so long lacked an energetic leader, that it is completely demoralized." The symphony of Schuomann, which we play tonight in Minneapolis, received three recalls in St. Louis. Quite phenomenal! He expressed a very kindly feeling for the young American composers, whom he called men of intense and earnest love for the very best in musical art, and stated his desire to assist in the hard path of their development. After this he talked of the state of Europe politically and on the labor question, and proved himself alive to the leading questions of the day outside of his chosen art.

A SHORT SKETCH OF TONIGHT'S PROGRAM.

The program to be presented in Minneapolis tonight is one of the most popular ever offered to an American audience. "Les Preludes" of Liszt is one of the sublimest bits of harmony ever written, ranking among the best of this composer's works; it is a superb opening number, as, at the outset, it will show the capabilities of the orchestra. The vocal selection from the "Huguenots," that follows, is a more pleasing number than would be some heavy selection, and one that will meet with the approval of the audience. The next number will be a solo for violin, with orchestral accompaniment, and will introduce Herr Lœffler, the most romantic and poetic performer among the first violins of the orchestra. This number is lovely, full of Spanish melodies, and will be within the grasp of everybody. Patrons of the concert will note Herr Lœffler's marvelous control of the violin. Then follows the "Peer Gynt," a "suite" by the great Norwegian composer, Greig. This will be the most "taking" number with the audience. It is full of bright, dashing and brilliant music, and has never failed of an encore wherever it has been given. Then three songs by Madame Steinbach-Jahns, with piano accompaniment by Herr Nikisch, will add a pleasant variety to the program. A symphony concert without a symphony would be like Hamlet without the melancholy Dane, so the closing number will be the famous D minor of Schumann, which Herr Nikisch chose as the symphony for his first concert in Boston, Oct. 12, 1889, and which at once stamped him as one of the greatest of modern conductors.

Before the Schumann symphony, Herr Nikisch has decided to interpolate a flute solo, and Charles Mole, late of the Grand Opera in Paris, will perform a concert Fantasie on themes, from the opera "Oberon," for flute and orchestra by Demerssman.

The Times.

MINNEAPOLIS MAY 13.

It is little short of marvelous that 70 musicians, using half as many different instruments, should attain to a nice exactness of execution equal to the workings of a delicate machine without sacrificing a shade of the expression and soul power that the individual artist throws into his performance, and yet that is what has been accomplished in the Boston symphony orchestra which gave its first concert in Minnesota at the Coliseum building last evening. Seldom, if ever, has "Pillsbury's Folly" held so representative an audience as that which filled the great auditorium last night. Even Christine Nilsson attracted a no more fashionable class than the Symphony Orchestra. Not alone the flower of Minneapolis society, but brilliant and distinguished delegations from St. Paul and surrounding towns went to make up the great company that applauded Madame Steinbach-Jahns and encored the magnificent rendition of Schumann's fourth symphony.

At the close of every number the hall resounded with the warmest and most enthusiastic applause, and the number of encores was limited only by the willingness of the artists to accede to the demands of the audience.

The opening number was "Les Preludes" of Liszt, the third and last of the great master's "Symphonic Poems," and before it was half finished the Boston Symphony orchestra had taken its place at the head of the great musical organizations to which Minneapolis music lovers have listened.

Surely nothing human could be more nearly perfect than the harmonies of the composition and even being divine, they had lost nothing in the interpretation they received last night at the hands of Herr Arthur Nikisch and his aggregation of artists.

Madame Steinbach-Jahns was never in better voice than last evening, and she certainly could have found no more satisfactory audience on which to lavish the exquisite richness of her full, melodious voice.

While Mme. Steinbach is essentially an operatic singer and while her training has been mainly in the higher class of German opera, her performance would have done credit to the most practiced of concert vocalists, and every tone of her clear, bird-like voice reached to the furthest angles of the building, and thrilled each listener like the song of the first bird of spring. She rendered the Page's aria from Meyerbeer's masterpiece, "The Huguenots," in a manner far above the average of operatic stars, and in this, as well as the three songs which composed her second number, showed a power and range of voice and a delicacy of finish that ever mark the true artist.

In response to her first encore Mme. Steinbach sung a portion of the Aria again and was almost compelled to return a second time. Her second number on the program was; Schumann—Widmung; Brahms Staendchen and Umlauft-Erwartung. Each was enthusiastically applauded and when the singer rendered Brahms' beautiful "Lullaby" as an encore the audience went wild.

Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole" gave Mr. C. M. Loeffler a wonderful opportunity to display his power in bringing out that "soul quality" which the violin possess above all other instruments made by the hand of man. Every movement in the entire composition has something distinctly Spanish in it and the whole breathes of that "Sunny Spain" of which poets sing. The music is poetic to a degree and every shade of harmony was done the most ample justice. Mr. Loeffler declined to respond to a hearty encore.

The suite Peer Gynt was written by Grieg for a dramatic production of Ibsen's fanciful folk-lore poem of the same name and partakes in some passages of the wild and rugged fancy of the Norse folk-legends, while the passage descriptive of the death bed of Aase, is a grand funeral march, contrasting strangely but effectively with "Anitra's Dance," which follows it. All the melody, poetry and expression, which Ibsen has put in words, Grieg has intensified in music, and not a tittle of it is lost to him who hears it played as it was played at the Coliseum last night.

Mans Mole received a well deserved encore for his marvelous handling of the flute in Demerssemans, concert fantasie from the opera of Oberon, and then came the grand finale, Schumann's fourth symphony in D minor, by the full orchestra. This is the piece selected by Herr Nikisch for his debut last fall before a critical audience in Boston, the home of music on this side of the water, and his handling of the composition at once gave him among the critics of the east a standing to which no other single performance could have elevated him. The piece has been repeated many times since then in all the great musical centers of the country and has never failed of an encore. Its effect on last night's audience was almost magical. People sat spellbound, open-mouthed, drinking in the melody, and as the last notes died away it was a full half minute before the audience recovered itself sufficiently to render the tribute of applause which induced Herr Nikisch to repeat the last movement of the symphony.

[132]

(Continued from first page.)

in its fascination. What a fury seems to seize the double basses in the trio as a kind of premonition of what is to follow! But the transition to the finale must be intrusted to instruments less inclined to let their feelings run away with them. When the violins and drums held their opposing chords in sweet mysterious conflict, and the decided rhythm of the allegro had appeared, the victorious march began with an effect truely thrilling. Mr. Nikisch was simply magnificent. He is a small man for such a great emotion, and from head to foot he seemed electrified with the true spirit of a great master. Even after the fanfare style had given place to the lofty dignity which never forskaes Beethoven one felt the thrill of triumph. I could only think of the ideas the ancients had of the power of their gods; it was like seeing Phoebus in his chariot dash across the noon-day.

"The tempest of applause which followed the last note shook the house—I could feel the vibration. The conductor turned to acknowledge it. The spell was broken, and I saw only 'a man of like passions as we are;' the pale, thoughtful face, deep-set, expressive eyes and dark hair; the white hands, the graceful deference to an enthusiastic public—Mr Arthur Nikisch. But I came away feeling that something greater than he—perhaps the spirit from that silent statue—had led the finale of the Fifth Symphony.

"That night I dreamed a strange thing. I seemed to be on a ship in mid-ocean. There had been a storm just before sunset, and in the east I saw a wonderful rainbow. There was crimson, as the rich, full tone of a horn; there was violet, as the soaring of the violins, and between the crimson and the violet was a harmonious blending of colors, each perfect in itself, yet a part of the whole, as the separate instruments in the orchestra unite in the symphony; and, as I looked, the glory of my rainbow seemed to cover the sky; there were twelve rainbows mounting one above another. I looked about the silent vessel and out over the ocean, which had no voice for me, and realized that in all the world I was alone but for the beauty of my rainbow. The sun sank in the west, and my dream was lost in the shadows."

The Tribune.

FOU CHICAGO 1847.

THURSDAY, MAY 15, 1890.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Nikisch, gave a symphony concert last evening at Central Music Hall before a large and brilliant audience. As this was the first appearance of the orchestra in this city since the change of conductor not a little curiosity was felt regarding the new leader and his work. The program opened with Liszt's magnificent symphonic poem, "Les Preludes." Of course, no two conductors will interpret the work exactly alike, nor will any conductor always give the work precisely the same treatment, but Mr. Nikisch presented a reading of the composition which differs in many ways from the generally accepted interpretation—that is to say, from the outlines usually followed in the main. In the first place, the tempo was considerably slower than that at which the work is usually taken, and the effect was much better for that reason. There was a majestic swing in the movement which has not been observable in other interpretations, and which was highly satisfactory except towards the close, in which something more of rapidity would have been desirable as producing a climax of greater brilliancy. Still, the earlier portions were so admirable that it may seem a little ungracious to find fault with the close. In the treatment of the individual instruments there was ample evidence that study and thought had been devoted to the elaboration of the various details. The individualization of the different instruments was remarkable, many things being heard that have hitherto only been seen in the score but not brought out in actual performance. The balance between brass and strings, too, was unusually well preserved, the latter obtaining in many places more prominence than usual, which is a distinct gain in the general effect—due no doubt partly, though not wholly, to the large number of strings employed. In the performance of the orchestra, considered as a whole, there was a virility never found in its work under Mr. Gericke. The Grieg suite, "Peer Gynt," was also delightfully played, the peculiar coloring being brought into great prominence. At the close of the last movement the applause was so spontaneous and long-continued that the movement had to be repeated. The Schumann symphony in D minor received an equally broad and dignified interpretation. It, too, was taken slower than the usual tempo, resulting in a marked improvement in clearness and impressiveness.

Mrs. Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler played the F minor concerto of Chopin with brilliant technical facility and beautiful shading and phrasing. The slow movement was particularly admirable in its artistic finish, while the more showy portions of the work were given with splendid fire and spirit.

Mme. Steinbach-Jahns was a disappointment. Her style is dramatic and she has a voice of considerable volume, but her intonation is not always pure, and the quality of tone which she produces is not good. There are many singers in America who would have been far more acceptable.

St. Louis Post-Dispatch

SATURDAY, MAY 10, 1890.

Opening Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—At the Theaters.

Arthur Nikisch, the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a melancholy man. His form is slight, his legs are thin, his head is large and his heavy hair is carefully combed in careless lines. His bow is long and low, and the shadow on his handsome face is never lifted. Upon the stand he is the embodiment of formalism, though his direction is nervous, apparently erratic, and all his movements are angular.

One would imagine that he would have more moods than a pet tenor, and more whims than a company of sopranos.

These are impressions on a first sight of Gericke's successor in the control of that splendid organization. He is, because of peculiarities, something of a trial during the introductory movement of the first number. One fears that Nikisch has been delayed, is ill or is suffering from an accidental injury, and a substitute is endeavoring to direct the orchestra.

Before the number is ended Nikisch has a hold upon your heart and mind, has won your confidence and then you will forget his peculiarities and cease saying to the inner self, "Gericke's place has not been fitly filled."

A parquette full of ladies and gentlemen last night heard the first concert given in Music Hall by the Symphony Orchestra since the change of directors. If there had been any doubt of the orchestra's continued excellence the concert proved conclusively there was no foundation for it. Those who did not doubt, were given such a musical treat as few St. Louis audiences have enjoyed, and those who staid away missed the substance for an enchanting memory.

The programme was skilfully constructed. The numbers were near the popular heart, and if the word was not so worn, one might say that an artist had built the concert, that an artist directed it and that artists rendered it. But the word no longer has any meaning and the sentences are not descriptive.

The "Meistersinger" introduction showed the orchestra's strength. Schumann's symphony (No. 4) in D minor, substituted for Mendelssohn's Italian symphony, showed the director's genius. Besides these numbers the work of the orchestra included accompaniments for Mrs. Steinbach-Jahns and Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, and Liszt's "Les Preludes," the final number.

Mrs. Jahn's voice is rich and full. It is used intelligently and won prolonged applause. Recalls followed every number sung, but the singer won most certainly on her little bits sung with piano accompaniment. Arthur Nikisch played the accompaniments—without ostentation the director took the seat at the piano and played delicately while the lady held the eye and ear of the house. That was the remarkable feature of the concert. A viola player turned the music for him, and a second violin insisted on helping to place the piano in the proper position.

Mrs. Zeisler's number, Litloff's "Holland National Symphony," was quite the best thing she has ever done in St. Louis, and she is very well known here. The composition was new to most ears, and the rendition met with a hearty reception. The closing passages of the andante aroused great enthusiasm.

To-night the orchestra gives the second and last concert of this season, introducing as soloists Franz Kneisel (violin) and Leo Schulz (violoncello). Following is the programme:

Goldmark..... Overture, "Sakuntala"
Brahms—First movement from concerto for violin and orchestra in D, Op. 77.
Allegro non troppo. (Cadenza by Mr. Kneisel.)
Mr. Franz Kneisel.
Greig..... ...Suite, "Peer Gynt," Op. 46
"Daybreak."
"The Death of Aase."
"Anitra's Dance."
"In the Halls of the King of the Dovre Mountains."
(The imps are chasing Peer Gynt.)
Eckert—Concerto for violoncello in A minor, Op. 26,
Mr. Leo Schultz.
Allegro moderate, Andante; Scherzo vivace; Andante.
Allegro non troppo (Rondo a la Cosaque).
Beethoven .....Symphony No. 5, in C minor
Allegro con brio.
Andante con moto.
Allegro (Scherzo).
Allegro (Finale).

ping from Tribune
Albany N. Y.
5/12/

power and S... which Mr. Linde presented it last w...

The Boston Symphony Concert.

Those who attend the grand concert of the celebrated Boston Symphony orchestra on Friday evening at the new hall will enjoy a musical feast. Beethoven's superb fifth symphony will be played in its entirety for the first time in Albany and the program embraces several novelties. If this concert is a financial success Manager Oliver hopes to arrange for a series of these grand symphony concerts next season. There is a great desire to see Herr Nickish, the celebrated Hungarian conductor whose masterly leading has been the source of great praise from the New York and Boston critics. Our musical and cultured people should turn out in full force and make this engagement a great financial success. Choice seats may be had at the music stores.

The Tribune.

MINNEAPOLIS, MAY 12, 1890.

IN THE CITY.

Arthur Nikisch, the Orchestra Leader, and His 74 Musicians, in the City.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Mme. Steinbach-Jahns and Herr Arthur Vikisch, arrived on its special train last night about two hours late, owing to an accident, reference to which is made in another column, and the entire party proceeded at once to the West Hotel, where supper was served to the belated guests. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns could not be seen, being fatigued from the excitement of the journey and the accidents; but Herr Nikisch talked easily and comprehensively on musical matters for over an hour. He first summarized his American experience by saying that high as had been his expectations regarding the American musical public, the reality transcended his most favorable opinion. He then went on in praise of the energetic character of the new world's typical characters. Everything breathes new life, strength and vigor, especially referring to the twin cities whose phenomenal growth had been explained to him.

Of the Hub he said: "In spite of all the ridicule cast on Boston culture and taste, it is the leading city of America in the higher orchestral music. There is no fashion that could draw crowded houses for a series of 24 weeks every winter to hear programs composed mainly of the strictest masterworks. It is genuine enthusiasm for music that draws the Music Hall audiences in the Boston Symphony concerts, and their rapturous applause of such a difficult work as Brahm's C minor Symphony is not feigned. This is what pleases me—this true and deep love of the classics in musical art. They are appreciated, and every one in the orchestra feels it, and all put on their nettle. "There is no hoodwinking a Boston Music Hall audience in the sligatest degree," said the celebrated conductor, with a most convincing turn of the head.

Regarding the present state of musical matters in Germany, he said: "The younger generation has not produced anything of serious importance in composition, though there is plenty of the lighter styles written every day. But Wagner is alone in his magnificent and sublime operatic conceptions."

Discoursing on different composers, he gave a decided preference to Brahms as the greatest living symphonic composer. "There are many of the pleasing composers whose works are important," said he, "Dvorak, Moskowski, but the classic compositions, the works that grow on you with every hearing, are very scarce. The lighter forms are catchy at first, but soon lose their charm, whereas the genuine classics, from even being repellant in some cases, grow more and more into the heart and give it some of the strength of the character whose genius inspired its creation."

Regarding his work in orchestra, he said whenever he undertook to conduct a work, he studied it till he knew it as if it was his own composition and then he directed from memory, when every one in the orchestra was thoroughly imbued with his artistic conception, "And when they play with fire and zeal there is no lagging," he replied.

"Berlin, the metropolis of Germany," he added, "has by no means the finest orchestra nor the most musical public. The orchestra there, though composed of artists individually, has so long lacked an energetic leader, that it is completely demoralized." The symphony of Schuomann, which we play tonight in Minneapolis, received three recalls in St. Louis. Quite phenomenal! He expressed a very kindly feeling for the young American composers, whom he called men of intense and earnest love for the very best in musical art, and stated his desire to assist in the hard path of their development. After this he talked of the state of Europe politically and on the labor question, and proved himself alive to the leading questions of the day outside of his chosen art.

A SHORT SKETCH OF TONIGHT'S PROGRAM.

The program to be presented in Minneapolis tonight is one of the most popular ever offered to an American audience. "Les Preludes" of Liszt is one of the sublimest bits of harmony ever written, ranking among the best of this composer's works; it is a superb opening number, as, at the outset, it will show the capabilities of the orchestra. The vocal selection from the "Huguenots," that follows, is a more pleasing number than would be some heavy selection, and one that will meet with the approval of the audience The next number will be a solo for violin, with orchestral accompaniment, and will introduce Herr Lœffler, the most romantic and poetic performer among the first violins of the orchestra. This number is lovely, full of Spanish melodies, and will be within the grasp of everybody. Patrons of the concert will note Herr Lœffler's marvelous control of the violin. Then follows the "Peer Gynt," a "suite" by the great Norwegian composer, Greig. This will be the most "taking" number with the audience. It is full of bright, dashing and brilliant music, and has never failed of an encore wherever it has been given. Then three songs by Madame Steinbach-Jahns, with piano accompaniment by Herr Nikisch, will add a pleasant variety to the program. A symphony concert without a symphony would be like Hamlet without the melancholy Dane, so the closing number will be the famous D minor of Schumann, which Herr Nikisch chose as the symphony for his first concert in Boston, Oct. 12, 1889, and which at once stamped him as one of the greatest of modern conductors.

Before the Schumann symphony, Herr Nikisch has decided to interpolate a flute solo, and Charles Mole, late of the Grand Opera in Paris, will perform a concert Fantasie on themes, from the opera "Oberon," for flute and orchestra by Demerssman.

The Times.

MINNEAPOLIS MAY 13.

It is little short of marvelous that 70 musicians, using half as many different instruments, should attain to a nice exactness of execution equal to the workings of a delicate machine without sacrificing a shade of the expression and soul power that the individual artist throws into his performance, and yet that is what has been accomplished in the Boston symphony orchestra which gave its first concert in Minnnesota at the Coliseum building last evening. Seldom, if ever, has "Pillsbury's Folly" held so representative an audience as that which filled the great auditorium last night. Even Christine Nilsson attracted a no more fashionable class than the Symphony Orchestra. Not alone the flower of Minneapolis society, but brilliant and distinguished delegations from St. Paul and surrounding towns went to make up the great company that applauded Madame Steinbach-Jahns and encored the magnificent rendition of Schumann's fourth symphony.

At the close of every number the hall resounded with the warmest and most enthusiastic applause, and the number of encores was limited only by the willingness of the artists to accede to the demands of the audience.

The opening number was "Les Preludes" of Liszt, the third and last of the great master's "Symphonic Poems," and before it was half finished the Boston Symphony orchestra had taken its place at the head of the great musical organizations to which Minneapolis music lovers have listened.

Surely nothing human could be more nearly perfect than the harmonies of the composition and even being divine, they had lost nothing in the interpretation they received last night at the hands of Herr Arthur Nikisch and his aggregation of artists.

Madame Steinbach-Jahns was never in better voice than last evening, and she certainly could have found no more satisfactory audience on which to lavish the exquisite richness of her full, melodious voice.

While Mme. Steinbach is essentially an operatic singer and while her training has been mainly in the higher class of German opera, her performance would have done credit to the most practiced of concert vocalists, and every tone of her clear, bird-like voice reached to the furthest angles of the building, and thrilled each listener like the song of the first bird of spring. She rendered the Page's aria from Meyerbeer's masterpiece, "The Huguenots," in a manner far above the average of operatic stars, and in this, as well as the three songs which composed her second number, showed a power and range of voice and a delicacy of finish that ever mark the true artist.

In response to her first encore Mme. Steinbach sung a portion of the Aria again and was almost compelled to return a second time. Her second number on the program was; Schumann—Widmung; Brahms Staendchen and Umlauft-Erwartung. Each was enthusiastically applauded and when the singer rendered Brahms' beautiful "Lullaby" as an encore the audience went wild.

Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole" gave Mr. C. M. Loeffler a wonderful opportunity to display his power in bringing out that "soul quality" which the violin possess above all other instruments made by the hand of man. Every movement in the entire composition has something distinctly Spanish in it and the whole breathes of that "Sunny Spain" of which poets sing. The music is poetic to a degree and every shade of harmony was done the most ample justice. Mr. Loeffler declined to respond to a hearty encore.

The suite Peer Gynt was written by Grieg for a dramatic production of Ibsen's fanciful folk-lore poem of the same name and partakes in some passages of the wild and rugged fancy of the Norse folk-legends, while the passage descriptive of the death bed of Aase, is a grand funeral march, contrasting strangely but effectively with "Anitra's Dance," which follows it. All the melody, poetry and expression, which Ibsen has put in words, Grieg has intensified in music, and not a tittle of it is lost to him who hears it played as it was played at the Coliseum last night.

Mans Mole received a well deserved encore for his marvelous handling of the flute in Demerssemans, concert fantasie from the opera of Oberon, and then came the grand finale, Schumann's fourth symphony in D minor, by the full orchestra. This is the piece selected by Herr Nikisch for his debut last fall before a critical audience in Boston, the home of music on this side of the water, and his handling of the composition at once gave him among the critics of the east a standing to which no other single performance could have elevated him. The piece has been repeated many times since then in all the great musical centers of the country and has never failed of an encore. Its effect on last night's audience was almost magical. People sat spellbound, open-mouthed, drinking in the melody, and as the last notes died away it was a full half minute before the audience recovered itself sufficiently to render the tribute of applause which induced Herr Nikisch to repeat the last movement of the symphony.

[132]

MINNEAPOLIS MAY 12,

DASHED INTO ETERNITY.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Train Runs Into a Handcar Killing Two Men.

THE GREAT ORCHESTRA ARRIVES

The Little German Leader Talks Entertainingly of America and Americans.

The Boston symphony orchestra company arrived in the city at 9:30 last evening by special train over the Burlington road, direct from St. Louis. The entire company, consisting of seventy-five persons, went to the West, where rooms had been reserved for them. The party was two and one-half hours late, owing to an accident, which occurred just as the special vestibuled train carrying the orchestra pulled out of Prescott, a small station near Hastings, this state. As the train rounded a curve the engine struck a hand car on which were three section hands. One of the men saw the train in time to jump and escape with a broken arm but the other two, both Danes, clung to the car and when the train stopped and backed up, the two men were found dead some distance from the track. The injured man, whose name is John Alexander, said he and his companions, whose names he did not know, were out for a ride and knowing nothing about the special felt perfectly safe. Alexander has a wife and six children in Prescott, and after running the train back to the station the sympathizing people raised a handsome purse for his family.

THE GREAT CONDUCTOR.

Herr Arthur Nikisch Talks of His Orchestra and Its Performances.

Herr Arthur Nikisch, the director of the Boston symphony orchestra is eccentric enough in dress and appearance to satisfy the most romantic of his claims to the title of "artiste." He is short of stature and dresses in a way that, while it avoids the slouchy, indicates the utmost disregard for details. Last night in the lobby at the West the great little man appeared in a suit of coarse, gray cloth and an immense straw-colored overcoat that gave evidence of rough usage. His hat was of soft gray felt and would not have looked out of place with a pick swinging above it at regular intervals. His beard, however, is carefully kept and worn in the pointed style so popular across the water. In gesture and accent the great conductor seems as French as German and all the vivacity of manner and speech which an American imagines to be the distinguishing characteristic of a Parisian are found in him to a marked degree.

"'Do you speak German?' is my first question," said he after an introduction, "and 'How do you like America?' will probably be your's. Is it not? Well, I like America very much. I am very happy here. The people are very pleasant and American audiences are very kind."

"Then you don't find our people unappreciative" queried the reporter.

"Oh! no, not at all."

"But Mr. Comee tells me you are somewhat doubtful about another western tour."

"Oh not now. I was I admit. Of course, I knew that Boston, New York and Philadelphia were musical cities, but I am surprised with delight to find so much appreciation, so much warmth do you call it? all over the country, everywhere. No I like it much and hope to come again next year if the people show that they care for it. I was in doubt for a time, but not now."

Herr Nikisch was greatly surprised, he says, to find so fine an orchestra when he came here last September. He had no idea that America had such an organization of artists so perfectly trained and disciplined. Of course he was asked the stereotyped question regarding his opinion of the hotel and said:

"It is large, fine, beautiful and they have very good food. You have wonderful hotels in America; they have all been good except one—at Richmond—it was awful, but such a lovely audience as we had there. Then one could play, I could forget the hotel.

Assistant Manager Comee, who travels with the orchestra, is already pleased with the prospects for the concert this evening, and in speaking of it last night said: "While this is our fourth western tour and our first visit to Minneapolis I think we, as well as the people here, should be grateful to Mr. Miller, to whom alone is due the credit for bringing the organization to Minneapolis. He had to guarantee us a very large sum and take a considerable risk. One of the greatest troubles that we have where we are not known is that the people are apt to get frightened at a symphony concert programme. They see "Les Preludes, Liszt," on the programme and it doesn't mean much to them. They get an idea that it is heavy. They are mistaken. Now, in the programme this evening "Les Preludes" of Liszt is one of the sublimist bits of harmony ever written, ranking among the best of this composer's works; it is a superb opening number, as, at the outset, it will show the capabilities of the orchestra. The vocal selection from the "Huguenots," that follows, is a more pleasing number than would be some heavy selection. and one that will meet with the approval of the audience. The next number will be a solo for violin, with orchestral accompaniment, and will introduce Herr Loeffler, the most romantic and poetic performer among the first violins of the orchestra. The solo is lovely, full of Spanish melodies, and will be within the grasp of everybody. Then follows the "Peer Gynt," a suite, composed by Grieg, the greatest composer that Norway ever produced. This will be the most "taking" number with the average audience, the music being bright, brilliant and what is called "popular." Then Madame Steinbach—Jahns' three songs with piano accompaniments by Herr Nikisch, will add a pleasant variety to the pro- [illegible] A symphony concert without a [illegible] be like [illegible] Dane, so the [illegible] ber will be the famous D minor [illegible] mann, which Herr Nikisch chose as the symphony for his first concert in Boston, October 12, 1889, and which at once stamped him as one of the greatest of modern conductors.

The programme as made up will not fail to please the lovers of both the classical and popular.

Mr. Comee was somewhat doubtful about a second visit to Minneapolis, but said the success of the present venture would have much to do with the future course of the management.

"Some idea of the way these men play together can be gained" said Mr. Comee, when it is known that fifty per cent of them have been with the orchestra since its organization, nine years ago andthat during our regular season they have three two-hour rehearsals per week, besides giving three public performances. Nothing will be played here that has not been heard in our regular concerts in Boston and the performance will be as near artistic perfection as any we could give in Boston or New York. In addition to the fine programme already announced, Herr Nikisch decided this evening to introduce Demersseman's concert fantasie for flute and orchestra from the opera of "Oberon" to be played by Mans Mole, late first flute of the Grand Opera house, Paris, and one of the greatest flute soloists in the country.

The Tribune.

MINNEAPOLIS, MAY 13, 1890.

ON THE STAGE.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The greatest musical event of the season, one that had been talked of for weeks and weeks and looked forward to as a possible revelation in the way of orchestral music, took place last night at the Coliseum. As to its fulfilling the high expectations that were aroused by the undoubted success of the orchestra, especially in Boston and the Eastern cities, opinions will differ and the rich musical treat promised by the flattering press reports cannot be pronounced an unqualified success. So many elements were concerned in the undertaking that it might be accepted as a matter of course that some would miscarry. The enormous expense and risk of bringing this tremendous organization so far to the Northwest was the first serious drawback to making an absolute musical success of the occasion. A guarantee fund was lacking, and the management set too low a standard of taste for the local musical public. It was hoped to make it a popular success, and the program bears evidence of a painful desire to please, and a lack of the very grandest works of the day, such as one would naturally expect from such a strong organization—by far the greatest and finest orchestra on this continent, with a leader of world-wide musical reputation.

A guarantee fund that would have relieved the management from anxiety as to the financial result, and a request program, would, if the local symphony concert audiences are any criterion, certainly have brought forth a heavier program and one that would have better exhibited the ability of this famous organization. It was a musical audience chiefly, and not a popular gathering of amusement seekers—in consequence of which there was some disappointment on both sides.

It is superfluous to say that the program was faultlessly rendered in every detail, or would have been had the concert been in Boston Music Hall. The acoustic qualities of the Coliseum are very peculiar, and, as no rehearsal was held in Minneapolis, there was some preponderance of the bass in places and a lack of the fine balance peculiar to the customary work of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Mme. Steinbach-Jahns was very well received in spite of the fact that she was slightly out of voice and not certain of her effects. Both her numbers were encored and the last encore seemed to be the sweetest part of her musical renditions.

Mons Ch. Mole proved himself a master in his brilliant and yet delicately shaded technique and musical style. But it seems wrong to fill in so many solos when such a combination as the Nikisch Orchestra is to be heard. There are solos in plenty—in concert companies—but the stupendous expense of such an orchestra prevents this city being often favored with concerts of the magnitude of last night's. If the above mentioned facts were borne in mind on a return visit, it would add largely to the pleasure of the musical public.

The Symphonic Poem "Les Preludes," by Liszt, has the wealth and fullness of orchestration that always characterizes this master's work, and the audience at the very outset manifested its favorable disposition toward the conducting of Nikisch and the work of the orchestra. The Page's aria, from "The Huguenots," by Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, was the only familiar strain to the general public during the evening. More familiar numbers, not necessarily light, might have added to the enjoyment. Mr. Loeffer's work in poetic grace and delicacy, was all that could be desired.

The suite by Grieg "Peer Gynt" proved a lighter work than the introduction and deep nature of the poetical basis seemed to point out. Yet it was well received and the last movement with its exciting accelerando at the end won an enthusiastic recall. Three songs by Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, with the exquisite accompaniment of Mr. Nikisch proved a rare treat. The Brahms serenade was given with the rare musical expression due its graceful construction. The ever popular D. minor Symphony of Schumann was the most effective number for the orchestra and the listener was compelled to marvel at the certainty of Mr. Nikische's conducting when it is remembered that his repertory includes the whole range of the classics.

Altogether the event was memorable and may be expected to awaken new zeal and life in local musical culture. The visit puts Minneapolis in the rank of the few cities that are favored by this organization with a concert.

NOTES FROM THE CONCERT.

Frank Danz, Jr.: "I wish we could do as much rehearsing as these men."

Millard Patten: "There's no doubt he's a great leader; he holds the orchestra in such perfect check."

A peculiarity of the Coliseum is its sounding board. At some points of the hall where the reflected sound waves meet the music sounds much larger than perhaps a few feet away from the platform.

The hissing of the electric lights proved a continual annoyance to the ear, and some such plan of lighting as was used in the Harris Theater Danz concerts in St. Paul should have been employed. Colored lights gave a soft, diffused and even light.

The wag of the orchestra is a keen humorist by the strong German name of Schuchtman. He has no [illegible] of any kind, political or religious, [illegible] and in spite of his [illegible] satire, which spares not even the direc[illegible] maintained his position since the organization of the orchestra.

Nikisch paid a high tribute to Mme Steinbach-Jahns as an opera prima donna, especially in the Wagnerian operas, in which she was unsurpassed. Since her marriage, however, she does not sing on the stage, appearing only in concert music. Her appearance as Elsa was said to be the most poetical of all the Wagnerian heroines.

Some queer criticisms have been passed upon the Boston Symphony concerts by the enlightened press, which must understand everything under the sun. A New York critic claimed that a certain movement in "Peer Gynt" was successful only because of the odd introduction of the cymbals at irregular beats. As Mr. David Moore is the clever manipulator of these rather noisy necessities of modern music, he has come to be regarded as the soloist in this particular movement, and prides himself not a little on his distinction in a great New York daily.

THE AUDIENCE.

There was a large audience and the immense hall was about two-thirds filled. The audience was a representative one, with a greater representation of musicians than are generally present at an entertainment of this sort, unless it is exceptionally good. Long before the time for the beginning of the concert the streets leading to the building were crowded with carriages and the street cars also had as large loads as they could carry. There were two entrances for the audience, the one on the south side being the main one where those coming in carriages and on foot were received, the north entrance being reserved for a pedestrians' entrance. The large crowd was very easily handled by the force of 36 ushers, all university students, who had been detailed for that purpose, and but little confusion resulted. At 8:15 Herr Nikisch took his stand upon the platform before the audience, and then the doors were closed and no one admitted until after the first number had been played. There was naturally some grumbling over the arrangement, but every one, particularly those who were seated, acknowledged the justice of the system. There were many people attracted to the grounds by the sound of the sweet music and they loitered about the steps enjoying themselves nearly as well as those who were inside. When the crowd dispersed there was naturally enough some confusion as there was a large number of teams in the street, and the poor lighting of the grounds aided in the confusion. The street car company did its share in caring for the crowd and Fourth street was filled with cars running upon all the lines in the city.

It is estimated that there were at least 2,000 people present and among them were the following:

Mayor and Mrs. E. C. Babb, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Miller, Maj. and Mrs. W. D. Hale, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Calhoun, Mr. and Mrs. Emerson Cole, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Stratton, Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Russell, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Pillsbury, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Leland, Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Roberts, Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Heffelfinger, Mr. and Mrs. M. B. Koon, Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Gale, Dr. and Mrs. F. A. Dunsmoor, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Martindale, Mr. and Mrs. Selden Bacon, Mr. and Chas. H. Woods, Dr. and Mrs. E. B. Zier, Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Bailey, Dr. and Mrs. Frank Allport, Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Lawrence, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Putnam, Mr. and Mrs. Horace V. Winchell, President and Mrs. Cyrus Northrop, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Dyer, Mr. and Mrs. C. McC. Reeve, Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Barton, Mr. and Mrs. O. B. Bass, Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Kirkbride, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Morrison, Mr. and Mrs. Edward A. Perkins, Mr. and Mrs. Dorilus Morrison, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Butters, Dr. and Mrs. Henry C. Aldrich, Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Holmes, Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Gifford, Mr. and Mrs. N. R. Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Wolverton, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Foster, Mr. and Mrs. B. C. Bissell, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Hitchcocke, Mr. and Mrs. S. Segelbaum, Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Buchmann, Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Olson, Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Singer, Mr. and Nrs. Geo. Odlum, Prof. and Mrs. O. V. Tousley, Mr. and Mrs. Porter Tremaine, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Fevins, Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Hernlund, Mr. and Mrs. F. G. McMillan, Mr. and Mrs. P. D. McMillan, Mr. and Mrs. B. W. Bennett, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Yerxa, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Plant, Mr. and Mrs. W. M. McDonald, Dr. and Mrs. H. H. Kimball, Mr. and Mrs. John S. Clark, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Conant, Mr. and Mrs. T. M. McCord, Mr. and Mrs. Ell Torrance, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Phelps, Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Nickerson, Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Winslow, Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Tiffany, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Sinclair, Mr. and Mrs. George Marchant, Mr. and Mrs. Carl V. Lachmund, Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Snyder, Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Blacklin, Mr. and Mrs. B. A. Mason, Mr. and Mrs. Otto Keidel, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Heath, Mr. and Mrs. Weed Monroe, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Garney, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Stempf, Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Thyle, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Ringwall, Mr. and Mrs. G. Sommers, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Bovey, Mr. and Mrs. Will Wolford, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Moulton, Mr. and Mrs. Clinton Morrison, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Hill, Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Burnett, Mr. and Mrs. Theo. Wetmore, Dr. and Mrs. O. J. Evans, Mr. and Mrs. Jno. E. Bradley, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Kalkoff, Mr. and Mrs. J. Newton Nind, Mr. and Mrs. Lucien Swift, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Haskell, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Chris Ellingsen, Mr. and Mrs. H. Alden Smith, Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. L. F. Menage, Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Ballard, Mr. and Mrs. V. M. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Chamberlain, Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Maben, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Stetson, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Norton, Dr. and Mrs. Frank Burton, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Whitney.

Misses Lillian M. Rowe, Helene Shirmer, Laura C. Dennis, Fannie McLeod, Anna R. Stryker, E. H. Wadleigh, Maud Ulmer, Edith Cheney, Carrie Whitney, L. Norris, Mrs. Stickney and daughter, Mrs. Hunt, Mrs. M. A. Blaisdell, Mrs. H. G. Harrison, Mrs. M. C. Norton, Misses Florence B. Field, Thompson, Gale, Sweeney and Ames, Olive Williams, Mrs. W. B. Jackson, Mrs. Elise Heitzemann, Mrs. Paris Gibson, Mrs. Chas. Harlowe, Mrs. E. J. Terwilliger, Mrs. M. S. Ensign, Miss Gertie Cady, Josie Bruce, Misses Olive M. and Hattie Tromanhauser.

Messrs. A. L. Barton, Julius Flesch, Chicago; Alfred and Eugene Segelbaum, H. L. Hoskinson, E. L. Bidwell, Clarkson Lindley, G. P. Douglas, W. R. Thompson, Rev. Dr. J. H. Tuttle, R. Stewart, Ralph Whelan, E. B. Barnes, P. R. Benson, C. H. Morse, E. C. Gale, S. C. Gale, B. O. Foster, R. A. Maybey, Geo. Caven, Geo. R. Thompson, L. L. Longbrake, Hugh M. Wilson, E. Otto Baldamos, H. E. Zoch, D. M. Chute, E. L. Carpenter, A. B. Hush, J. F. Cole, W. B. Palmer, S. L. Hart, W. H. Peckham, Edward V. Loose, Fritz Schlachter, Harry W. Jones, Prof. D. N. Harper, Chas. J. Tryon, E. F. Reed, James H. Boyd, Alfred Sherlock, E. A. Brooks, Arthur M. Keith, Arthur Blodgett, Walter Petzet, H. L. Osborn, J. W. Pray, C. N. Dickey, B. W. Taylor, A. G. Keidel, W. H. Clark, J. W. Shryock, James M. Boyd, Jr., Heinrich Hoevel, Harry P. Robinson, F. V. Homer, F. G. Danill, H. C. Morse, Jno. A. Schleuer, Fred A. Smith, E. B. Moore, Carlos A. Sperati, A. A. Grant, W. H. Hawley, M. F. Shutt, C. D. Weigel, J. S. McKenzie, Fred S. Shepherd.

THE JOURNAL

MINNEAPOLIS, MAY 13, 1890.

THE CONCERT AT THE COLISEUM

What a matchless monument the world's makers of harmony have builded for posterity; and what splendid visions of it were presented in the coliseum building last night. Preserved upon modern papyrus written close with the characters of a universal language, interpreted by no Rosetta stone discovered by the minions of some musical Napoleon, but by those whose training and whose intelligence alone fit them for interpretation, what wondrous stories were told us of the inmost thoughts and emotions and sensations of the men who builded the monuments which these musicians now unveil to our sight. And what crown too royal for the composers on the program not yet passed away to the realm of eternal melody?

It was to bring to our ears the sweetest, indeed the grandest of music, that the symphony orchestra came across a continent. Not but that gold was an object and the financial wisdom of the journey was shown last night—not gold alone but a love for the work. The man who writes great poetry cannot do it for money alone; the man who writes great music cannot do it when his vision takes in only the round rim of a dollar; the man who is to interpret music cannot do it if he has nothing in view but the contents of his weekly envelope. The members of the Boston Symphony orchestra are musicians—musicians in the higher truer sense; their leader is a still greater musician. With these two elements and with the splendid music of the scores what else could there be but a magnificent performance.

Two things were demonstrated last night in this, one of the chief musical events in the history of Minneapolis. First, that the reputation of the city for a kindly word for and a hearty support of fine music is not confined to the indorsement of local musicians, which are among the first to be found East or West—in other words, it is not mere charity or fashion that gives sanction to artistic work. Second, that Minneapolis keenly appreciates the severest of classical music.

There is a wide field between appreciation and understanding? Granted, a wide and, to many, an unexplored field, but as well say that a man cannot appreciate a gorgeous sunset on the Western prairies merely because he has no knowledge of the technique of colors; as well say that a man cannot appreciate a great actor dealing with the most tragic or the most comic phases of our common life unless he has studied the stage a life time, as to say that one must be a talented performer to appreciate music. The man who was at the Coliseum last night and did not appreciate to the full the wondrous music played there must be fatally defective in one of the sweetest senses of humanity.

The initial number on the program was one of the finest—Liszt's symphonic poem, "Les Preludes." Here, as perhaps in no other number, the orchestra displayed its marvelous ability to do concerted ensemble work. Dealing with a score which called for intelligence, for sympathy, for close concord with high human sentiment, the individual performer was in touch with the man at his elbow and the whole orchestra was as one man, and that man Nikisch.

The most delicate of phrasing, the most exact harmony, the most perfect time, and, above all and the rarest thing of all, the interpretation—it was the acme of orchestral effect. The parts are most admirably balanced.

The number in which Loeffler appeared, the "Symphonic Espagnole," for violin and orchestra, by Lalo, was capitally rendered. Comparison would at once run post haste to Sarasate, whose wonderful performance is not a distant memory, but it would be manifestly unfair to put the two side by side. Mr. Loeffler plays with a charming nicety and with skillful execution; it would seem that in soul he lacked most but perhaps in a different number he would have appeared to a better advantage.

What could have been said when the last note of Grieg's suite "Peer Gynt" was silent—what but that the great Norwegian had made for himself a new and noble prominence in this city where dwell so many who love his music with passion and with patriotism. The sobbing of the strings in the death of Aase, touching and vibrating the chords of the heart; the fantastic dance of Anitra, the peculiar movement when the imps are after Peer Gynt, a movement that is startling in its eccentricities but never untuneful—it was all a triumphant token that music writing has no confines and an irrefutable proof that he who looks for poor music in the land of the Norseman looks for a dull stone and finds a precious diamond. It was, all in all, the most popular number of the evening.

The closing number, which followed the fantasie for flute and orchestra, most capably played by Mons. Mole, was Schumann's Symphony No. 4 in D minor, played with fine style and finish. It was the only number which was in any sense tiresome.

The leader of this great orchestra is a master. He makes no spectacular display of himself, there is none of the windmill business in his directing, but his work is all done with consummate skill—he is undeniably one of the few great conductors of the day.

Mme. Steinbach-Jahns sang her numbers most acceptably. Her voice is dramatic without being strident. If she lacks in anything, as she probably does, it is in soulfulness.

The audience last night was as fine as ever appeared in Minneapolis. It is but voicing common sentiment to say that if the Boston Symphony orchestra shall decide, as is partially promised, to visit Minneapolis annually, it will always be warmly welcomed with ever increasing patronage.

[133]

The Times.

BY THE CHICAGO TIMES CO.

THURSDAY, MAY 15, 1890.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

The concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra last night at Central Music hall very nearly filled the large hall entirely, being far more largely attended than any former concert by the same band in this city. There has been a goodly amount of more or less acrid controversy in Boston over the respective merits of the late conductor, Mr. Gericke, and Mr. Nikisch, who is just ending his first season in that position. Both have been censured for being "too German," and from an American point of view probably both are open to the criticism. But because the present season has been the most successful in the history of the band it is not to be concluded that the present conductor is the better. Had this been the band's first visit to Chicago the audience would quite certainly have been smaller than it was. Mr. Gericke "bore the heat and burden" of making the orchestra favorably known outside of Boston, and Mr. Nikisch's administration profits by his labors.

Speaking in a general way, as far as one can judge from one concert, the playing under the present conductor is little if at all less remarkable for precision and delicacy, and is certainly marked by broader and bolder shading and more striking exhibition of climaxes. Mr. Nikisch is certainly remarkable for the firmness of his grasp of the thought and inspiration of a composition, and seems to possess in an eminent degree that peculiar magnetic quality which translates his own deeply enthusiastic feeling for the poetry of music into and through the expression of his players.

The concert opened with Liszt's familiar symphonic poem "Les Preludes," often heard here by the Thomas orchestra and by others. Thomas has made it what the others have failed to do, interesting, but the melodic element in it has never been raised into finer relief, its musical thought never more thoroughly brought out than last night. The superb delicacy and finish of the work for the strings was especially and most delightfully conspicuous. Liszt's works usually have behind them a kind of after-taste of artificiality, but, though Mr. Nikisch does not entirely escape this, he goes nearer to it than any other conductor who has presented them here, or at least did so in this one last night. The well known and always beautiful D minor symphony of Schumann was also charmingly played throughout. Perhaps the third movement, the exquisitely melodic romance, was most to be admired, but probably it seemed so from its own transcending beauty more than from any actual superiority of interpretation. The whole work had all its deep, often touching, poetry expressed not only with musicianly skill but with profound feeling. The tendency of Mr. Nikisch to use the brasses more boldly than has been customary in this orchestra was very noticeable in this work, but it was indulged with admirable sagacity and telling effect.

Grieg's "Peer Gynt" suite has not, within the writer's recollection, been heard here before. It is part of the music written by Grieg as a setting of one of Ibsen's dramatic poems, whose hero, Peer Gynt, is a kind of Scandinavian Faust, who, after laying waste the hearts of a great number of women, must be saved by a woman, and so goes back to his early love when he is old and "no good" for anything but salvation. It is quaintly melodic, with the characteristic Scandinavian folk-music coloring throughout. The funeral march is very impressive and solemn, subdued in coloring and movement, the mazurka a fine bit of rhythm that a few more measures would make monotonous, and the imps tormenting Gynt is a most effectively fantastic bit of scoring. All were played with splendid precision and finish, the odd accellerando of the last so "capturing" the audience that its repetition was compelled.

Mr. Nikisch conducts without the score, gaining the advantage of having no use for his eyes except to assist in controlling his players. His conducting is peculiar, too, in that while not ostentatious for the audience it is for his players not only a guide in tempo but almost a pantomimic presentation before their eyes of the whole movement of every composition—its rhythm, its accent, its emphasis, even its shading, and all its part relations. Certainly it is splendidly effective.

Mme. Bloomfield played the F minor concerto of Chopin. Her playing is very familiar to Chicago music-lovers and is no less admired. It has been notable always for keen musical intelligence, and for life and spirit, and for breadth and strength of phrasing and shading. It is still so, and has gained in technical precision. The meditative, almost dreamy, second movement of the concerto she played with profound poetic feeling and delightful warmth and repose, in strikingly artistic contrast with which was the flashing brilliancy of technic in the next movement. She was recalled again and again, but only acknowledged the calls without playing.

Mme. Steinbach-Jahns is a tall, rather fine looking woman of the German blonde type. She sang the favorite aria from "Der Freischuetz" with excellent vocal style and finish, with rather too little shading for the best effect, but in a way to show perfect self-possession and much training and experience. Her voice is a large one, quite even and true, but not especially musical in quality, and with all the freshness it may have had at some time worn quite away. Later she sang songs by Schumann, Nikisch, and Goldmark. The first was sung badly and that by Nikisch better than either of the others. She does not appear to advantage, however, in this style of music.

THE CHICAGO HERALD,

THURSDAY, MAY 15

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The concert given last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was one of the most notable events of the season, and one that will not soon be forgotten by the music-loving people of Chicago. In every respect it was a great success. The audience was the largest, the most brilliant and the most enthusiastic assemblage that has been seen in Central Music Hall for many a day. Society, as if repenting for its shameful neglect of the German opera performances, turned out in full force. Scattered through the thickly peopled Auditorium were the faces of some of the most cultured and most distinguished ladies and gentlemen that grace the highest circles of social life, and mingling with these were the familiar faces of the leading musical talent of the city. Such an outpouring of society and art patrons has seldom been known in connection with an event of similar character, and only once this season, on the occasion of the Sarasate-D'Albert concerts, has an instrumental performance drawn a larger attendance. It was the largest audience that the Boston orchestra ever played to in Chicago. Of the entertainment, so far as concerns the work of the orchestra, nothing can be said except in connection with terms of warmest praise. It was beyond all dispute the finest orchestral performance that has ever been given in this city, and that is, considering the high class of musical entertainments Chicago is accustomed to, the strongest commendation that could possibly be penned. The orchestra has for several years enjoyed a wide degree of popularity in Chicago and the increased fame that preceeded its present visit had a tendency to stimulate public interest. Arthur Nikisch, the new conductor, who is credited by Bostonians with having accomplished wonders in one brief season, was the central figure around which interest clustered, and when he made his first bow to a Chicago audience last evening he was given a cordial welcome. Before the evening was half spent Mr. Nikisch had achieved a genuine triumph, the audience quickly recognizing his superior talents and manifesting its appreciation in the most demonstrative fashion that can be imagined. In appearance he is much finer looking than the portraits that have been so profusely scattered about the city would indicate. Tall, stately, with a noble face and a scholarly, intellectual cast of features, he made an excellent impression as he walked down to the footlights and mounted the conductor's desk, but it was when he tapped the orchestra to order and waved it into motion that the most pleasing part of his personality became apparent. Such charming grace has never been seen here in any orchestral director, not excepting Mr. Thomas, nor has there ever appeared before a Chicago audience a conductor who has manifested such absolute control over every part of his organization, from the leading violinists and celloists down to the artist who beats the cymbals. In former years the orchestra, under Mr. Gericke, became famous for the perfection of its strings, but Mr. Nikisch has made very great improvements in the general tonal effects by still further refining the work of the strings and by developing the power of the wind instruments. It was the unnecessary suppression of the latter that called forth the only adverse criticism the orchestra received during its last western tour, but with that defect remedied and the same degree of precision maintained or even bettered, the orchestra is now very nearly, if not quite, the acme of artistic perfection.

Last night's programme, though presenting no distinct novelty, was one of exceptional merit. The opening number was Liszt's "Les Preludes," the most brilliant and most exquisitely melodious of any of the famous composer's "symphonic poems." It has never been so magnificently performed in Chicago, and probably not in any other city in this country, except where the Boston orchestra has interpreted it under Mr. Nikisch. The second orchestral number, and the one that afforded the greatest enjoyment to the audience, was Grieg's "Peer Gynt," which has once before been admirably performed in this city, though on that occasion the beauties of the score were not so vividly brought out as they were last night. The closing movement, presenting many novel and striking effects of instrumentation, made a pronounced hit and was so persistently encored that Mr. Nikisch graciously performed it a second time. Schumann's fourth symphony in D minor brought the performance to a close. The soloists of the evening were Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, who performed with her usual skill and intelligence Chopin's concerto the pianoforte in F minor, and Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, who made her debut before a Chicago audience as a singer. The latter, although possessing a voice of considerable range, of strong dramatic power, was scarcely in keeping with the general excellence of the entertainment. She is said to have been an artist of considerable repute in her own country, but the manner in which she rendered the aria from the second act of "Der Freischutz" did not impress her hearers with any degree of favor, nor did she redeem herself later in the evening when she sang three songs, accompanied on the piano by Mr. Nikisch. Mrs. Zeisler, however, added to the many good opinions that have been formed of her artistic qualities during her long and successful career in Chicago, and she was well deserving of the generous applause that punctuated each movement of Chopin's popular concerto. Besides Mme. Jahn's the only regrettable feature of the entertainment is the fact that so many engagements elsewhere prevent the orchestra from giving a second concert in Chicago this season.

Clipping from Times, Richmond, Va.

Date 4/80

Sale of seats opens on SATURDAY MORNING NEXT. ap30-1t

MAY FESTIVAL.

MOZART ACADEMY OF MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Friday, May 2.....Symphony Night.
Saturday, May 3.....Chorus Night.

SCALE OF PRICES-

Ticket sale opens MONDAY, April 28th, at 9 A. M. at Box-office Academy of Music.

First two rows in Orchestra Circle, front row in Balcony, $2 each; all other parts of the house, $1.50 each, general admission, $1 Gallery, 75 c. Not more than six tickets sold to one person.

MEMBERS OF MOZART ASSOCIATION.

Membership tickets without seat coupons will not admit to the May Festival. Seats to to whole house except first to rows in Orchestra Circle and front row in Balcony, $1 each. Only two seats to each performance sold to one menber. When buying seat, membership ticket must be shown two ticket-seller. On nights of the Festival both membership tickets and seat coupons must be shown at the door and punched.

ap24,25,26,29,30

THE DAILY [illegible]

THURSDAY, MAY 15, 1890.

CHICAGO.

NIKISCH AS A LEADER.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Superior Rendition of a Select Concert Programme at Central Music Hall—Songs and Symphonies—Music from the Masters.

In many respects the concert given at Central Music hall last evening by the Boston Symphony orchestra was one of the most interesting events of the musical season now drawing to a close. When this organization visited Chicago a year ago it was under the leadership of Herr Gericke and of necessity its return with a new conductor invites comparisons.

In a country boasting such orchestral leaders as Thomas, Seidl, Van der Stucken, and Damrosch any change in an organization like the Boston band is watched with an interest amounting to concern. Herr Arthur Nikisch, the present leader, was born in Hungary, and made his first appearance in this country in October of last year. He is 35 years of age, and in appearance even younger. He has a rather slight physique, but is of medium height and perfectey self-poised. He has the bearing of an artist, and impresses one as a man of acute poetic sensibilities. It is impossible to conceive of a more graceful figure on the conductor's stand. Unhampered by desk or book—for he uses no score—he stands facing his band, entirely free to use whatever gestures he pleases. There is no posing for the benefit of the spectators; in fact, he is remarkably self-controlled in bearing, and seems rather to gain his effect by some magnetism of personality than by force of gesticulation. That this restraint and poise does not diminish the effect of his work is evinced by the quickness of the response of his men and their absolute fidelity to his baton.

Praise for the Orchestra.

It should be understood at the outset that that small and ignoble function of criticism which consists merely in finding faults is entirely out of place in considering the work of Herr Nikisch's orchestra. All that can be done is to create, by a kind of contagion, an enthusiastic appreciation of the work of this, the best orchestral body in America. If the Boston orchestra under its new leader has not quite the exquisite precision that it had under Gericke, it has gained something far more useful and important—an interpretive power which no amount of merely mechanical perfection could throw into it. With all the marvelous finish displayed in the former leader's work, one frequently felt the lack of an informing poetry and fire. There was not the complete satisfaction which comes from hearing a performance of the present body. Only the caviling of pedantic conservatism, which fears to offend esthetic taste by the injection of the emotional quality, can find fault with the readings of Herr Nikisch. In shading, in nuance, and in the adjustment of tempi, however, the orchestra is still ahead of any similar aggregation in the country—the necessary advantage of a band not subject to occasional change and disintegration.

The programme heard by the audience which filled Central Music hall last night consisted of Lizst's symphonic poem, "Les Preludes," Grieg's suite, "Peer Gynt," Schumann's symphony in D minor, two vocal solos, an aria from Weber's "Freischutz," and three songs by Mme. Steinbach Jahns, and Chopin concerto in F minor by Mrs. Bloomfield Zeisler.

Unity and Finish.

All the orchestral numbers were applauded liberally. The suite of Grieg was given an entirely different reading from the one made familiar here by Mr. Thomas—a reading certainly not less effective, though unfamiliar in its novelty. Of the two other orchestral works it is only necessary to repeat what has been said of the general work of the orchestra. No more poetically beautiful rendition of "Les Preludes" has ever been given here, and the wonderful unity and finish of the strings enhanced considerably the effect of its performance. Mme. Steinbach Jahns, who is said to be a successful Wagnerian artist, sung her numbers acceptably, although her voice is unsympathetic in lyric song, however admirable it may be in declamation. The three songs, Schuman's "Auftraege," Nikisch's "Lehnsucht," and Goldmarck's "Die Tuelle," were given with animation and pure tone, Nikisch himself accompanying her on the piano. Mrs. Bloomfield Zeisler's rendition of the Chopin concerto was genuinely delightful—without strength or virility of conception, it is true, but poetic and graceful and revealing an admirably delicate touch, adequate technique and true sentiment. Altogether, the concert was one of the most enjoyable of the season. One only regrets that the management made the mistake of assigning Chicago only one instead of a series of performances.

The Inter Ocean.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 15, 1890.

AMUSEMENTS.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

"Good wine needs no bush," and it may be remarked with equal emphasis that criticism, in the ordinary sense of the term, can only usher itself into commendation when it comes to consider the work of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is a credit to Chicago that the concert of this strong and symmetrically artistic organization last evening attracted an audience that almost tested the capacity of Central Music Hall. This band of virtuosi, that has for several years appealed to lovers of the highest class of music, rather than to popularity through a money-making mission, has at last, after a severe struggle and a wonderfully successful season in its home city, Boston, justly come to be regarded by the people as the foremost organization of the kind in America. In its two former visits to this city the orchestra won the almost united praise of the press, but for some reason failed to win patronage commensurate with its merit. It is now evident, however, that the good seed sown in seasons past is to reap a rich return; and the instrumentalists under the inspiration of a master hand are in better condition than ever to fulfill the promise of time in the sympathetic, poetic, and impressive interpretation of the compositions that are destined to live forever. Arthur Nikisch, the new leader, was a conspicuous and interesting feature of the entertainment. Gericke was quiet, self-sustained, but not impressive, thorough as a drill-master, but non-magnetic as a conductor; Nikisch has an assertive and something of a sensational personality; his portraits indicate it and his stage demeanor demonstrates it. Fortunately it is a masterful of merit, sustained [illegible] and he swings the baton in graceful and impressive style; using both hands in directing, in the encouraging rather than the perfunctory or dictatorial style; making the thorough sympathy with subject, and the complete control of instrumentalists. Musically he might be denominated a mesmerist, gaining from the subject of his spell the most delicate gradations of finished tone color, a force fairly astonishing for this association, and a finish that is at times almost startling in its precision. Director Nikisch leads without a score, his memory serving him admirably, while he concentrates his entire attention upon the players. He also played the piano accompaniaments for the vocalist of the evening, displaying rare and sympathetic proficiency in this capacity. The concert opened with Listz's symphonic poem, "Les Preludes," described in the admirably arranged programme as follows: "This work, the third of Listz's "Smyphonic Poems," was begun at Marseilles in 1845, and finished at Weimar, five years later. Its first performance took place at Weimar in 1854. As their generic name implies, all Liszt's compositions of the present class have an avowed poetic basis. That of the work played is found in a passage from Lamartine's "Meditations Poetiques."

"What is our life but a series of preludes to that unknown song of which death intones the first solemn note? Love constitutes the enchanting dawn of all existence; but where is an experience in which the first sensations of happiness are not disturbed by some storm; the deadly breath of which dispels its fond illusions, while blasting lightning burns up its altar? What cruelly wounded soul, when one of these tempests has passed away, does not seek to lull its memories in the sweet calm of country life? Nevertheless, man can not long resign himself to the beneficent insipidity which at first charmed him in the bosom of nature; and, 'when the trumpet gives the signal of alarm,' he runs to the post of peril, whatever be the war that calls him to the ranks, so that he may recover in combat full consciousness of himself and entire possession of his powers." "Les Preludes" may, taking the composer's indications of tempo as a guide, be divided into six sections: Andante (strings, then flutes). Andante maestoso (trombones and basses). Allegro ma non troppo (violins and 'cells). Allegro tempestuoso (violins and horns). Allegretto pastorale (harp, then horns). Allegro marziale animato (violins, then trumpets). The strings have always been considered the strength of this orchestra, but never before have they been more harmoniously or sympathetically adjusted; the bones appear to move in unison as if contested by a single hand, making a tone that is almost faultless. The wood-wind instruments possess even to a more marked degree than formerly the vocal quality of richness; while the brass, a comparatively modest factor in this organization, has been most conspicuous and meritorious in harmonious strength of development. The concert-going public has frequently listened to the rendition of "Les Preludes," but it may be said without fear of contradiction, that its ingenious changes have never been more admirably or artistically sung than they were last night. The succeeding orchestral selection, a sparkling novelty, was Grieg's suite "Peer Gynt," op. 46. The programme says: "The dramatic poem of 'Peer Gynt' was written by Ibsen in 1867, a midway period in the career of one who is now occupying a share of the cultivated world's attention. 'The character of Peer Gynt is taken from one of the Norwegian folk legends. He is a Norwegian Faust, whose superabundance of imagination will bring him to destruction if he is not saved by a woman. His youthful arrogance knows no bounds. He goes to a wedding and carries off the bride to the mountains, where he afterwards deserts her. During the night he wanders about and meets with some frolicsome dairy-maids. He harbors at last in the hall of the King of the Dovre Mountains, where he falls in love with the king's daughter, but is finally turned. He returns home, where he finds his mother, Aase, on her deathbed. After her death he sails for foreign climes and lands, after the lapse of many years, a rich man, on the coast of Morocco. In one of the Arabian deserts he meets Anitra, the daughter of a Bedouin chief. She only succeeds in captivating him temporarily, and leaves him. Peer Gynt dreams about Solveig, the love of his youth, who has faithfully been waiting for him, and to whose arms he at last returns, old and gray." The suite is a reduction of the voluminous music Grieg composed for the production of the drama on the stage. The first movement, Daybreak, allegretto pastorale, is scored for small orchestra. The second, andante doloroso, consisting of four measured periods for muted strings, is a funeral march. The third, tempo di mazurka, is written for divided strings and triangle. The fourth, alla marcia e molto marcato, a somewhat grotesque march, is scored for full modern orchestra and picturers the imps tormenting Peer Gynt. The work was given with fine discrimination for dramatic effect, the third movement winning a most beautiful and finished interpretation, and the final one carried with a vim and vigor that was electrical in its weird rush of instrumentation. The third and final selection was the Schumann symphony No. 4, in D minor, op. 120, the heaviest feature of the programme, and received an artistic and meritorious rendition, if it was not as interesting as some of the less labored achievements of the night. Mme. Magdalene Steinbach-Jahns, the vocalist, recently came from Frankfort. She is a dramatic soprano of rather light weight, artistically, compared with her surroundings; and while she sings in fair German style her quality of tone is throaty. Her first selection, the famous prayer from "Der Frieschutz," was lacking in animation, considering she is qualified as a "dramatic soprano." Her songs, with piano, in which she was admirably accompanied by Mr. Nikisch, had a marked excellence of brevity, and pleased. They were: Schumann, "Auftraege;" Nikisch, "Sehnsucht;" Goldmark, "Die Quelle."

Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler is a pianiste that Chicago can claim as her own with justifiable pride, and it is pleasing to note her association with such an artistic organization as the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This city has had many evidences of her finished powers as a pianiste, and they were emphasized anew at this concert, and had the advantage of a rare accompaniment. She was on the programme to play Beethoven's concerto No. 5, in E flat, one of the masterpieces of Beethoven art, the necessity of change from which was not apparent. When it was announced from the stage that Mrs. Zeisler would play Chopin's concerto in F minor instead of the Beethoven selection there was a shade of disappointment passed over the audience in spite of some advance applause. She played Chopin in satisfactory style, but perhaps she did not know De Pachmann gave himself to the interpretation of that composer on the same stage twice during the preceding week. The Boston Symphony Concert will be remembered as something of a red letter night.

[134]

[135]

THE NORTHWESTERN CONGREGATIONALIST

ST. PAUL, FRIDAY, MAY 16.

At last St. Paul and Minneapolis have heard some music. This remark is not intended to cast reflection upon all that has taken place in the years gone by, since this portion of the country was rescued (?) from the Indians, which has been included under the general category of music, but merely to emphasize the fact that in the two concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week the purest and the best in music was rendered in a style which was the purest and best ever witnessed in this locality. It was as near perfection as any one could wish to hear this side of the heavenly harmonies. It was a feast in its variety, its abundance, and its magnificence; it was not a feast, however, in that its impression upon the mind and the soul of every responsive listener was vastly more inspiring and enduring than any feast could possibly be. Mr. Nikisch is an ideal conductor, and his band are in thorough sympathy with him. So great was the unity of their performance that it seemed as if the whole effect was the production of a single personality. Nor does Mr. Nikisch take to himself the glory. It is his evident aim to bring as closely as possible the master-mind to the thoughts and sympathies of the audience. Hence there is an entire absence of anything like display; everything is made subservient to the ideal of the composer. Especially in the rendering of the two symphonies was this fact prominent. It was not Nikisch or the Boston Symphony Orchestra,—it was Mendelssohn and Schumann to whom the audience listened. To describe in detail the many delightful features of the concerts would take more space than can be given here. It is earnestly to be hoped that another year the orchestra may visit the twin cities and give—not two, but a week of concerts.

The Post.

The PITTSBURGH Western

TUESDAY, MAY 20, 1890.

MUSICAL AND THEATRICAL

CONCERT OF THE MOZART CLUB AT OLD CITY HALL.

A Large and Fashionable Audience. Herrmann at the Opera House and McCarthy's Mishaps at the Bijou—Performances Elsewhere.

On the great stage at old city hall last night were seated tier above tier the members of the Mozart club, the ladies in gay evening dresses, the gentlemen in regulation suits of black, forming a background for the jewels and colors of the ladies. Immediately in front of the club were ranged the 60 members of the Boston Symphony club. The audience was not disappointed in regard to the entertainment in store for it, for the Boston Symphony's playing is equal to any orchestral music that has been recently heard in Pittsburgh. The first number, Liszt's symphonic poem, "Les Preludes," won the orchestra the good will of the audience, and the applause was long and generous.

Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, on her first appearance, received a hearty welcome. She is a tall, stately blonde, with a voice of great power and compass. It perhaps lacked sweetness, but it is so flexible, and the singer so great an artist, that perhaps few noted or regretted the lack of this quality. "Freischuetz" is said to be one of Mme. Steinbach-Jahn's favorite operas. Her rendering of the aria won her an enthusiastic encore, to which she declined to respond.

Grieg's "Peer Gynt," by the Boston Symphony club, was perhaps the finest thing on the program. The suite is in four parts, "Daybreak" "The Death of Aase," "Anita's Dance" and "In the Hall's of the King of the Doore Mountains." In "The Death of Aase" the last notes melted so softly away, as the soul of Aase faded into eternity, that the audience could not tell when the music had ended. "Anita's Dance" was altogether different in character. One could almost see the graceful, sylph-like form, with fairy feet and tambourine keeping time to the music of the dance. The finest of the series was the last. It won from the people a determined demand for its repetition, to which Mr. Nikisch yielded. This represented the imps torturing the weak and faithless Gynt through the subterranean caverns of the Doore mountains.

The second part of the program comprised Mendelssolm's "Hymn of Praise," by Mrs. M. Henkler, Miss Adah Scandrett and Mr. H. B. Brockett; and the chorus assisted the Boston Symphony club. Mr. James P. McCollum now took his position on the conductor's stand and the three soloists took their places. These musicians are so well known that nothing need be said except that their singing was up to their usual high standard. That of Miss [illegible] opportunity she was [illegible] do was be-

PITTSBURGH

TUESDAY, MAY 20, 1890.

SWEET MELODY.

The Boston and Pittsburgh Combination a Big Attraction.

THE MOZART CLUB'S SUCCESS.

Old City Hall the Scene of a Brilliant Musical Event Last Evening. Receptions Tendered—Decorative Art—Social Notes of Both Cities.

The combined attraction of the celebrated Boston Symphony Orchestra and its sixty performers, the appearance of Madame Steinbach-Jahns, the renowned vocalist, together with Pittsburgh's popular Mozart Club, with reputation established in local circles, was sufficient to throng Old City Hall last evening to completion, a fitting tribute to the interest which provided the feast of melody which the evening had in store. The concert was given under the auspices of the Mozart Club, of which Mr. J. P. McCollum is conductor, and will be supplemented by a second performance to-night; the two entertainments, comprising the fourth and fifth concerts of the twelfth season of the popular club. The audience was composed of the more prominent representatives of the circles of society and fashion, with a goodly ballast of musicians and music-loving people generally. The keenest attention was given throughout the program, recognition of merit was hearty and sincere, and the visiting musicians, as also the home club, have every reason to be gratified with the enthusiasm invoked and the appreciation extended. The Mozart Club, fully represented, occupied the raised portion of the platform, and in the foreground was the celebrated orchestra, which included among its many instruments also a magnificent harp.

THE CELEBRATED ORCHESTRA.

Promptly at 8:15 Herr Arthur Nikisch, the conductor, lifted his baton and in unison the instruments in low rich tones took up "Les Preludes" of the magnificent symphonic poem of Liszt. The deep, full tones reached out in their suppressed intensity until the magic bonds which seemed to hold burst asunder, and a free tumultuous melody was wafted forth that scattered on the winds and broke itself against the sweet-toned string instruments like the tender murmuring of an æolian harp. Dirge-like then and low, one part answering to another, then rolling together, and the distant thunder awakened the echoes in the cave of the winds. Forth rushed the hurricane, sweeping all before it, swifter, wilder, until crash followed crash, and a regular cyclone of music rent the air. But the wildness spent its force, and again the plaintive melody, then the merry dancers, and at last all nature seemed to join in one triumphal chorus, which in its close awakened a most tumultuous applause from the audience, and Herr Nikisch was repeatedly called forward to acknowledge the recognition.

THE PRIMA DONNA.

Madam Jahns, who next appeared, was enthusiastically greeted. The talented singer, who made her American debut in Boston last April, and who is accompanying the Boston organization on their present tour, was attired in a low cut grown of pale pink crepe and silk. Diamonds flashed in her hair and upon her shoulders, and her silver embroidered girdle was fastened with a clasp of jewels. Bright and pleasing in appearance, the interest of her singing was thus intensified. The aria selected by Madam Jahns was from Weber's "Freischultz." From the beginning it was evident that the singer had perfect control of a well-trained voice of remarkable compass, varying, as it did, from the low, sympathetic tones with which the selection opened, to the clear volume of tone which the impassioned finale demanded. In the latter the singer was at her best, the vigor revealing a power of voice which but increased in sympathy and magnetism in the ratio of intensity. At the conclusion Madam Jahns was repeatedly applauded and an elegant tribute of flowers was presented. Again the orchestra claimed attention. This time selections from Grieg's "Peer Gynt" were evolved from the many instruments.

PEER GYNT INTERPRETED.

The "daybreak," with its complicated melodies rising and swelling, filling the air with harmony as the mists were clearing and the golden beams of light struggling through the clouds, was swiftly followed by the doleful melody, "The Death of Aase," with the wailing and the moaning so realistically evolved that not until the baton of the conductor dropped and the last dismal groan lost itself in a silence most profound, could the audience dare to breathe. "Anitra's dance," merry and brilliant, suggesting the castanet and the coquettish movements of the Spanish maidens, was followed by a host of imps in the halls of the King of the Dovre Mountains, who chased Peer Gynt, laughed at him, mocked him and danced and mimicked until Herr Niksch took a hand in the fight, and with his slender wand chased them back to their haunts. The imps were acceptable to the audience that clapped and clamored so for their return, that the good Herr Niksch graciously allowed another selection by his obedient orchestra.

During the intermission of ten minutes which followed, slips were distributed through the audience by the ushers, which by a return with the yearly due of $10 would constitute any one present an associate member of the club. It was explained that the reason the club was able to give so many high-class concerts during the year was on account of its increased associate membership. From the funds thus realized the club has been able to more than double its capacity for good and thoroughly classical musical development, not only among the active members, the chorus, but among its hearers.

The Mozart Club was to be considered a musical factor of undeniable influence, and, if assistance and co-operation was pledged, next season five concerts should be given, three with the local orchestra and two with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, or some band equally as effective.

Part second of the program was in the hands of the club, with an introduction by the Symphony orchestra responding to the directorship of Mr. J. P. McCollum. Mendelssohn "Hymn of Praise" was the selection. The solo parts were taken by Mrs. M. Henkler, first soprano, Miss Ada Scandrett, second soprano, and Mr. H. B. Brockett, tenor. The soloists, who are well known to the Pittsburgh public, but added to their laurels by the renditions of the selected solos of last evening, while the chorus was effective and in its usual good trim. The orchestral opening of the hymn was an inspiration to good deeds, the dignified Maestoso con moto, the allegro, allegretto agitato and the adagio religioso being presented through all their varied intricacies and shadings with artistic effect.

To-night the program will include orchestral selections, a violoncello solo, by Mr. Anton Hekking; a vocal solo, by Mr. Paul Zimmerman; songs, with piano, by Madam Jahns, and a chorus hymn.

The Dispatch.

PITTSBURG, TUESDAY, MAY 20, 1890.

MUSIC LOVERS DELIGHTED.

The Climax of the Season Reached in the Boston Symphony Concert—A Varied and Exquisite Programme Presented to a Large Audience.

PITTSBURG'S musical season of 1889-90 reached its climax last night in the first of the two concerts given by the Mozart Club with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Quite appropriately one of the very largest and most representative audiences of the season crowded Old City Hall, from the brilliant stage to the dingy cock-loft. If nearly 1,500 people will pay from $1 to $2 for the privilege of climbing up the steep stairs into that hot, barn-like hall, with its noisy unpleasant surroundings, what would be the patronage of a like attraction in a roomy, first floor auditorium, away from the noise-some market-place, and large enough to hold more money at half the prices? At home, the Boston Symphony Orchestra played this season before 30,000 people who paid but from 25 to 50 cents apiece, in addition to the 75,000 who bought the higher priced tickets, many of them bidding large premiums in the fashionable rivalry for choice of seats. Pittsburg would rejoice to have some local Higginson step forth and sustain such an orchestra; but first and foremost we need the large and suitable hall, indispensable to such popular results. Everyone who endured the discomforts of Old City Hall through the lengthy programme last night will join in a hearty godspeed to at least one part of Mr. Carnegie's munificent plans for the public good. Under more favorable physical conditions, the epithet lengthy, as applied to this programme, could not have conveyed the faintest suggestion of weariness in the listeners. There was abundant variety in its several numbers, and a due sense of artistic fitness and proportion in their combination—as a glance will show:

PART I.

Liszt, Symphonic Poem.....“Les Preludes.”
Weber, Aria from “Freischuetz”.....
.....Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Grieg, Suite.....“Peer Gynt,” Op. 46.
“Daybreak.”
“The Death of Aase.”
“Anitra's Dance.”
“In the Halls of the King of the Dovre Mountains.”
(The imps are chasing Peer Gynt.)

PART II.

Mendelssohn's hymn of praise.
Mrs. M. Henkler, first soprano.
Miss Adah Scandrett, second soprano.
Mr. H. B. Brockett, Tenor.
Chorus and Boston Symphony Orchestra.

— — —

THE Liszt symphonic poem (a work that has been heard too often to need description) afforded the writer, from his temporary coigne of vantage behind the curtain, a good opportunity to observe the personality of the conductor, who was called from the Leipzig Opera House to rule our country's best orchestra. All music-loving Americans have a right to be interested in the man at that post: they have equal reason to rejoice that the pitifully absurd contract labor law, which was blatantly invoked for the purpose, did not avail to deprive us of Mr. Arthur Nikisch. A short, slender, wiry frame, clean-limbed and with a fine reposeful face dominated by a wide brow, lit up by a pair of bright, deep eyes and softened by a sensitive mouth—Mr. Nikisch presents upon the conductor's stand a personality that inspires confidence and sympathy. He conducts wholly from memory, but without seeming to forget a single entrance of any instrument or losing the thread of the most complex passage. His beat, while firm and masterful to a degree, is yet singularly eloquent in subtly suggesting to the players all the varying shades of expression.

— — —

THE splendid body of players which had acquired such technical proficiency under five years of Mr. Gericke's strict discipline, seems to have needed only such a warm, magnetic leadership as that of Mr. Nikisch in order to approximate absolute perfection very closely indeed. There has been no falling off on the technical side in any department, and there has been a decided gain in the vividness and richness of the orchestral colors. The symphonic poem was in truth a poem; full of life and feeling. One could not ask for more passionate intensity than filled the swelling phrases in the allegro tempestuoso, caught up from the 'cellos by the violins; yet the pastoral measures that followed were as deliciously pure and cool in their way.

— — —

GRIEG is chiefly known here by his songs. His "Peer Gynt" suite, while not originally intended for concert use, is eminently characteristic of the man both in its subject matter and in its orchestral treatment. It consists of extracts from the incidental music written for Ibsen's drama of the same name. The first movement, "Daybreak," with its simple theme akin to that of Mendelssohn's "Hebrides" overture, is a most graceful and tender morceau, redolent of northern climes. "The Death of Aase" is of a piece with the pathetic haunting volks-leider of the Scandinavian people; it is given to the muted strings, and is harmonized in a style that suggests Palaestrina. "Anitra's Dance" could not be daintier, with its touches of the triangle and its quaint Oriental melody; while the last movement is one of the most grotesque of fancies, its weird theme commencing in strongly marked staccati by the low strings and bassoon, rising gradually into the higher instruments and working up bit by bit to the most amazing tutti climax, with cymbals and everything else in full blast. The performance of the suite was superb in all particulars. At its close the applause was so enthusiastic that Mr. Nikisch was compelled to repeat the final section.

Mrs. Steinbach-Jahns is blessed with a personal attractiveness and an ease of manner that prepossessed her audience in her favor. She began the favorite scene from "Freischuetz" in a somewhat reserved mood, that soon deepened, with the "Leise, Leise," into a genuine tenderness [illegible]

[illegible] hall was [illegible] to the very [illegible], and the private carriages that blocked the way for a square or more showed the audience to be not only an appreciate and cultivated one, but fashionable as well.

[illegible] culmination in a [illegible] brilliance. Almost her only fault was a disposition to overdo the ritard in various places. Her voice is a full, rich, solid soprano, of unusual flexibility for its caliber. The audience gave Mrs. Steinbach-Jahns quite an ovation, recalling her several times.

Through the second half of the programme our local forces were in the ascendant. Mr. McCollum received a very cordial round of applause as he stepped forward to conduct Mendelssohn's "Symphonie-Cantata," one of the few successful attempts to imitate Beethoven's innovation—in the immortal Ninth—of writing a symphony with a cluster of vocal numbers in place of the last movement. It is a pity that the symphony could not have the most favorable conditions for performance. The orchestra as a whole had never played it before, and the brief morning rehearsal was not all sufficient for the men and the new conductor to arrive at a perfect understanding either of each other or of the score. Under these circumstances, the symphony was surprisingly well played; that is to say, there were no hitches and there were a great many beauties fairly brought out.

— — —

THE vocal part of the "Lobgesang" forms one of Mendelssohn's best works. The scene, for instance, of the watchman creates an extraordinary dramatic effect with simple means; the reiterated question, "Is the night far spent?" with its disappointing answer, works up most effectively at last to the triumphant declaration—first by the solo soprano, unaccompanied and with only the change to the major key, and then by the whole force of chorus and orchestra—"The night, it departeth, the day cometh quickly." The strong massive choruses, the lofty chorale, the lovely duet for two sopranos and the richly varied numbers for tenor solo, all go to make up a thoroughly delightful and inspiring work—one well worthy of commemorating the invention of printing, as it was intended, or any other great event in the progress of mankind.

C. W. S.

The Dispatch.

PITTSBURG, WEDNESDAY, MAY 21, 1890.

A SUPERB PROGRAMME.

Review of the Second Grand Concert by the Mozart Club and the Boston Symphony Orchestra—An Admirable Interpretation of Great Works.

THE second great concert by the Mozart Club and the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night drew another representative audience that tested the full capacity of Old City Hall. After making certain alterations, rendered necessary by the severe indisposition of Mr. Paul Zimmerman, who was to have been the tenor soloist of the evening, the programme read as follows:

Goldmark—Overture, “Sakuntala.”
Servais—“Fantasie Characteristique” for violoncello.
Mr. Anton Hekking.
Mozart—Aria from the opera “Entfuehrung aus dem Serail”
Madam Steinbach-Jahns.
Schumann—Symphony No. 4 in D minor, op. 120.
Introduction (adagio non troppo).
Allegro.
Romance (adagio non troppo).
Scherzo.
Finale (allegro).
Demersseman, “Fantasie for Flute”.....
.....Monsieur Charles Mole.
Wagner, Overture.....“Tannhaeuser.”
Weber, Hymn, “In Constant Order” Op. 36.....
Mrs. W. B. Wolfe, soprano.
Miss Maggie P. Fraser, contralto.
Mr. Joseph A. Vogel, tenor.
Mr. John A. Strouss, basso.
Chorus and Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Goldmark's romantic and richly colored overture forms a worthy embodiment of one of the loveliest of Hindu myths. The tender suavity of the introduction, the graceful rippling of the theme first assigned to the 'cellos and clarinets, the more passionate character of the subsidiary motive that appears in the violas and oboes, and the barbaric pomp of the subject flung out by the brasses, all have their proper place in depicting the emotions incident to the story of Sakuntala, daughter of a saint and a water-nymph, wife of a king and mother of the glorious race of the Bharatas. Under Mr. Nikisch's inspired baton, the work was played con amore throughout, its every detail receiving due weight and the whole gamut of its emotional phases seeming to be reflected from the heart of each participant from conductor to tympanist.

— — —

THE D minor symphony, though numbered as the fourth by reason of its later publication, was the second in time of composition, following in the same year (1841) its inferior predecessor in B flat. Throughout its length a remarkable unity of effect is produced, first, by the absence of pauses between the movements and, second, by the constant recurrence of the same thematic material in various guises through the different movements. The orchestra had evidently bestowed the same careful study upon this noble work; it would be hypercriticism to attempt to pick flaws in it. Especially well realized was the surpassing sweetness of the romance, which is a bit of genuine poetic inspiration. In the very familiar "Tannhaeuser" overture Mr. Nikisch's interpretation differed from the tradition (if the "music of the future" can have any tradition) in the more subdued and delicate treatment of the earlier part of the tremulous, voluptuous "Venusberg" episode. This was fully justified by the increased effect of the bacchanalian whirl into which it merged.

— — —

WEBER'S noble, earnest hymn made an admirable close for such a programme. The choral writing is in the composer's best vein, and highly effective throughout. It gave our much prized chorus a fine test of its prowess. The test was finely borne. The massive breadth of the opening chorus, and the powerful, intricate phrases of the final fugue (what a superb chorus this last one is), as well as the soft accompanimental work with the soloists, were all done in a fashion worthy of high praise.

Mr. John A. Strouss' resonant bass had the best opportunity among the solo parts of the hymn. He sang with much discretion and taste Mrs. Wolfe's solo work was of her customary high quality, though she sang at times as if tired—especially so in the trying unaccompanied choral, where the pitch fell considerably. Miss Fraser and Mr. Vogel filled out the quartet in a thoroughly satisfactory manner.

— — —

MME. STEINBACH-JAHNS, in Mozart's brilliant air, displayed more clearly than before the rare flexibility of her large voice. Besides her excellent vocalization, her dramatic style deserves recognition. Mr. Moll showed himself to be a flautist worth importing from China, had he not been so near as the Paris Opera Comique. A glittering technique and artistic phrasing made his not very deep selection exceedingly attractive.

But Mr. Anton Hekking easily carried off the palm among the soloists. His tone, while not large, is rarely sympathetic, pure and mobile, and the facility and certainty of his execution could not be surpassed. There was a deal of artistic feeling in the fantasie and yet more in the familiar Chopin nocturne with which he responded to an irrepressible encore. He ought to be called the Sarasate of the violoncello.

C. W. S.

[136]

PITTSBURGH [illegible]

WEDNESDAY, MAY 21, 1890.

THE SECOND EVENING.

Another Brilliant Success Scored By the Boston Orchestra.

The second concert under the auspices of the Mozart Club, with the celebrated Boston Symphony Orchestra and the renowned vocalist, Madame Steinbach-Jahns, as the principal attractions, was if possible a more signal success than the event of the previous evening. From platform to entrance Old City Hall was thronged with an enthusiastic audience, which from time to time gave way to an almost furious recognition of the performer, compelling encores and proving to the most obtuse the intense appreciation of first-class music which has a lodgment in the hearts of a Pittsburgh audience.

The orchestra, with its seventy performers, was superb, and whether in the brilliant overture, "Sakuntala," from Goldmark, or through the magnificence of Schumann's symphony in D minor, with its artistic introduction with the movement adagio non troppo, the stately allegro, sparkling romance, vigorrus scherzo, and intricate finale, or in the grandeur and magnificenee of Wagner's Tannhauser, nothing seemed lacking in sympathy, movement or artistic conception. The second number on the program was a "fantasie characterisque" for violoncello, which was played by Mr. Anton Hekking in such superb and impressive manner that an encore was almost wildly demanded at the close, and a second selection, a nocturne from Chopin, was granted by the expert violoncellist.

Owing to illness Mr. Paul Zimmerman did not appear on the program as announced. A transposition therefore placed Madam Jahns as number three. The fair vocalist, who rendered selections from Franz, Rubinstein, Schumann and Goldmark, but deepened the impression of the previous evening and was an especial favorite with the appreciative audience. In the orchestral rendition of Schumann's Symphony in D minor, an interpolation of a flute solo, by one of the members of the orchestra was a revelation of the wonderful scope of the instrument in the hands of an expert. The program of the evening concluded with a chorus selection of Weber's hymn "In Constant Order." The solo parts were acceptably rendered by Mrs. William B. Wolfe, soprano; Miss Maggie Fraser, contralto; Mr. Joseph A. Vogel, tenor, and Mr. John A. Strauss as bass.

The Post.

PITTSBURGH Western

WEDNESDAY, MAY 21, 1890.

SCORED ANOTHER SUCCESS.

The Symphony Orchestra's Second Concert Highly Gratifying—Witnessed by a Large Audience.

A most successful event was the second concert of the Boston symphony orchestra and the Mozart club. Old City hall held as large an audience last evening as it could comfortably accommodate, and that all were well pleased it is hardly necessary to state. The program was changed somewhat from its original form. Mr. Paul Zimmerman, who was to have sung Rossini's "Cujus Animam," was announced as suffering from a bad cold, and his place was filled by Mr. Joseph Vogel. There were a few other changes.

The overtures from Goldmark's "Sakuntala" was first on the program and was excellently rendered. Mr. Anton Hekking delighted the audience by his wonderful violoncello playing of a "Fantasie Characterisque" by Servais. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns followed in an aria from Mozart's opera, "Entfuehrung aus dem Serail." After Schumann's symphony No. 4 in D minor, op. 120, by the orchestra, Monsier Charles Mole played a beautiful fantasie for flute in a superb manner. The concluding piece was Weber's hymn, "In Constant Order," op. 36, for solo voices, chorus and orchestra. The soloists were Mrs. William B. Wolfe, soprano; Miss Maggie Fraser, contralto; Mr. Joseph Vogel, tenor, and Mr. John A. Strauss, bass.

Clipping from Times Pittsburg Pa,

Date 5/21.

[illegible] detained [illegible] night releasing prisoners.

CHARMING TO THE EAR.

The Second Mozart Club-Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert a Great Success.

The second concert of the Mozart Club-Boston Symphony Orchestra series at Old City Hall last night was attended by as fashionable and critical an audience as ever gathered in Pittsburg. Anton Hekking in "Fantasie Characterisque," for violoncello, was greeted with deafening applause and had to respond to an encore. Madam Steinbach-Jahns, in the aria from Mozart's opera, "Eutfuehrung aus dem Serail," was treated to three recalls. The orchestra in Schumann's symphony No. 4 in D minor, opus 120, did excellently. Charles Mole divided the evening's honors with Hekking in Demersseman's fantasie for flute. Wagner's overture "Tannhauser" kept the audience so quiet that it seemed as if no person was present. Weber's hymn "In Constant Order," by chorus and orchestra was the closing number, Mrs. W. B. Wolfe was soprano, Miss Maggie R. Frazer, contralto, John A. Strauss, basso and Joseph A. Vogel, tenor. Paul Zimmerman, originally scheduled for the tenor parts, not being able to [illegible] a severe cold.

PAUL GLOBE

MAY 14.

IN DULCET STRAINS.

Concert by the Boston Symphony Company an Artistic Success.

Lovers of the Classic Greet Each Number With Much Applause.

"Tannhaeuser," the third and perhaps the greatest of Wagner's successes, has been performed many times before St. Paul audiences, but never has its performance evoked so rapturous a response as that drawn from the vast crowd which heard the overture as given at the People's church last evening by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the dictorship of Arthur Nikisch. The auditorium was packed with lovers of the classic, and a glance over the sea of faces from the front of the house betrayed that the audience was one which would know how to appreciate or condemn, as the merits of the music should justify. The first distant notes of the pilgrim song, growing nearer and louder, at last near at hand, and again lost in the distance, were enough to interest every listener in the fortunes thus musically told of the erring Tannhaeuser. Then, as the thread of the strange legend is followed in the fantastic measure of that weird dance, and Tannhaeuser's song of defiance to the unholy crew rings jubilantly, the interest is intensified to a degree which tells its own story of the magnificence of the interpretation. The boisterous reveling and shrieks of wild delight, representing Tannhaeuser's surrender to the charms of the goddess, and the later dawn of day with the song of the reapproaching pilgrims, to which gives place the gruesome murmur following the orgie of the sirens, were all so vividly truthful as to leave a lasting impression on each hearer; and as the joyful song of the pilgrims swelled louder and more loudly, until in its ecstasy it chronicled the release of Tannhaeuser from the spell of the Venusberg, and the strange story thus grandly told had reached its end, there arose from the audience a burst of applause than which a more spontaneous or continuous tribute was never paid an orchestral performance in St. Paul.

Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, the sopraniste of the company, sang the aria "O Lovely Halls" in so perfect a manner as to win for her a perfect avalanche of plaudits, and compel her to return to the front of the stage three times in acknowledgement. Timothee Adamowski's violin solo work was very fine, and he, too, came in for a share of the laurels. The success of the evening, however, was "Peer Gynt," a summary of Greig's composition for operatic production. The piece as summarized is in four parts, representing "The Break of Day," "The Death of Aase," "Anitra's Dance" and "The Hall of the Mountain King."

The character of Peer Gynt is taken from one of the Norwegian folk-legions. He is a Norwegian Faust, whose superabundance of imagination will bring him to destruction, if he is not saved by a woman. Peer Gynt is a peasant lad, whose parents were well-to-do people; but the father is now dead, and the mother and son are living in great poverty. The lad is full of great ideas, and has many wonderful plans for the future. These he confides to his mother, who, notwithstanding his wild ways and fantastic ideas, believes in him. His youthful arrogance knows no bounds. He goes to a wedding and carries off the bride to the mountains, where he afterwards deserts her. During the night he wanders about and meets with some frolicsome dairymaids. He harbors at last in the hall of the king of the Dovre mountains, where he falls in love with the king's daughter, but is finally turned out of doors. He returns home, where he finds his mother, Aase, on her death-bed. After her death he sails for foreign climes, and lands, after the lapse of many years, a rich man, on the coast of Morocco. In one of the Arabian deserts he meets Anitra, the daughter of a Bedouin chief. She only succeeds in captivating him temporarily, and leaves him. Peer Gynt dreams about Solveja, the love of his youth, who has faithfully been waiting for him, and to whose arms he at last returns, old and gray.

The impressive solemnity of the death chant is followed by the weird strains to which the Bedouin maiden executes her fantastic dance, and temporarily captures the heart of Peer Gynt. One almost expects Anitra in her quaint garb to appear among the players, and give to the picture that realism it almost possesses without her presence. The fourth movement, a grotesquely impish march, representing the imps tormenting the wanderer, is as strangely characteristic of the composer as the first three, and the reception given the interpretation compelled the repetition of the scene in the hall of the mountain king. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns gave three song numbers, "Es blinkt der Thau," "Lullaby" and "Die Quelle," each of which were received with great applause, and the lady sang as an encore number a German ballad, and sang it so charmingly as to add to the laurels she had already won.

The closing glory was the Mendelssohn symphony in A, "Italian." Among all Mendelssohn's works there is not one more characteristic than this symphony of that cheerful, sunshiny, happy disposition which was almost more remarkable than his genius. There is a force of freshness and life, and of youth, innocent without being weak, to which, perhaps, no parallel can be found, except it be his own [illegible] happy temperament. The B[illegible] phony of Beethoven in some [illegible] resembles it, but the absolute truth, [illegible] extraordinary spring, is wanting even there. The beautiful composition was given in a manner worthy of Nikisch and his wonderful orchestra. Again the house resounded in praise of the talented Bostonians, and the best concert of the season had reached its end.

The Pioneer Press

WEDNESDAY, MAY 14, 1890.

SAINT PAUL

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA CONCERT.

"Ab urbe condita 1640" greets you at every turn in the goodly city of Boston, and as early as 1670 the Bostonese began to be proud of their home and its products. Certainly they have reason and the long line of great men who claimed the New England capital as home, together with the existing museums, libraries, colleges, schools and universities, give ample substrata for most of the claims put forth by the veriest hub-ite who ever peered through spectacles at a Philistinic world. And among the institutions at which pride's finger cannot point too often or too emphatically is the Boston Symphony orchestra. In the large, cultivated, appreciative and intelligently enthusiastic audience that filled the People's church last evening were many who once claimed Boston or its environs as an abiding place. They were filled with delight, and righteously. Never has St. Paul been favored with an instrumental concert of such superlative merit as that which regaled the very air from 8 until 10 o'clock. Much was expected, more was vouchsafed. As a body or as single performers the orchestra is inimitable, admirable, delightful. Waves of harmony, billows of melody, rivers of dainty, musical thought were given in every number, and so musicianly withal that fault-finding has no place, and to pick flaws would be as ungrateful as unnecessary.

Head and front, of course, is Arthur Nikisch, and it is easy to believe that Leipsig mourns for him. Gifted with graces of person, pose and manner, he is absolutely without charlatanry. He conducts without a score in front of him, because his memory is as accurate as any written page can be. His men are evidently thoroughly in sympathy with him, and he secures effects from the very tympani, from the bassoons, the tubas and the double basses. Unless you have heard the "Tannhauser" overture played by this orchestra you have never known its beauties, except mayhap abroad. This, the opening number, and Mendelssohn's Italian symphony, which closed the concert, were easily the noteworthy productions of the evening. In the symphony —which is fully as beautiful if not so well known as its Scotch sister—the second and third movements were simply perfection as to expression, phrasing and shading. The viola melodies will not be forgotten for many days by those who heard them, nor will the grand climax of the Saltarello which served as a finale. The much-talked-of Grieg suite was highly enjoyable, of course, and was the more so in that it showed what this assemblage of artists can evolve when led by such a baton as Nikisch wields. The first number of the suite, "Day break," is not especially noteworthy, nor is the third, the dance of the sheik's daughter, but Ibsen might gain new inspiration by listening to the funeral dirge for the roving lad's mother. Who, but was impressed with orchestral possibilities on hearing the diminuendo finale of the dirge wherein the great double-basses were as distinct yet subservient and pianissimo as the violins. In the final movement, representing Peer Gynt as the goal of impish pursuit, the music is grotesquerie itself. It is as indescribable as it would be impossible of proper production by almost any other orchestra on earth. This final movement was the only one repeated by the orchestra, though redemands were as earnest and pronounced as good breeding would allow.

Timothee Adamowski, who has rid himself of a great deal of hair (worn a la Wertheimer's lions) since he appeared in St. Paul as violin soloist with the Clara Louise Kellogg Concert company in 1881, played two movements from a violin concerto by Saint-Saens. He did not have the orchestral accompaniment which the composer intended, but was accompanied on the piano by Director Nikisch. Though somewhat hampered by a defective E string Adamowski played very well indeed. One or two pizzicato jugleries might have been omitted, but they were atoned for by the harmonic and double string work.

Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, who also had Mr. Nikisch as an accompanist part of the time—is a dramatic soprano with almost the breadth of Frau Materna and a good deal more flexibility than had that lady. Steinbach-Jahns is not unlike what Pappenheim was in her palmy days, and sang the famous aria, "O Lovely Halle," from "Tannhauser," effectively, with histrionic color and admirable reserve. In the ballad suite, Sommer's "Lullaby" was daintily sung, and in response to continued applause the lady sang a characteristic little German song, with a laughing refrain, very takingly.

It is not too much to hope that St. Paul and Minneapolis will forever hereafter be on the list of cities favored by visits from the Boston Symphony orchestra. They will find no places between the oceans where their great attainments are appreciated more fully.

The encore, as affected by St. Paul audiences, is at once unique, solitary and unapproachable. Its monotonous and indiscriminating employment, is becoming a reprehensible absurdity; a semi-barbarous torture to be dreaded by all theatrical, operatic and concert combinations as well as soloists. That audience in any city which demands—at the point of thunderous feet, vociferous clapping and hoarse cat calls—more than a third appearance of a favorite places upon itself the bar sinister of rudeness and enters into direct competition with variety hall boorishness and incivility. The reasonable demand of ritacimento is a just tribute to ability; its abuse carries the performance into the objectionable excess of ritornello and the ding-dong da capo of disagreeable perpetuity.

BOSTON, MAY 25, [illegible]

MUSICAL [illegible]

The Annual Tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The members of the Boston Symphony orchestra arrived back in this city yesterday, after the fourth annual tour of the organization, with the satisfaction of having completed the most successful series of concerts outside of this city's limits known in the history of this orchestra. During the four weeks the orchestra has been away from this city it has given 23 concerts, with an aggregate attendance of over 40,000 in the audiences, and in all its 4300 miles' travel no single mishap has occurred to the detriment of the health or engagements of the organization. The best test of the results of this tour is found in the fact that, wherever the orchestra has appeared, Manager Charles A. Ellis (under whose personal direction the tour was made, with Mr. Fred R. Comee's assistance) has received applications for more concerts next season. It is worthy of note that in St. Paul and Minneapolis, two cities never before visited by the Boston orchestra, the success of the organization was beyond all precedent, and the reception given to Conductor Nikisch throughout the tour has been most enthusiastic. It has been shown beyond question that the Boston orchestra has gained a recognition of its merits as an organization of the first rank throughout the country. Conductor Nikisch has, aside from the artistic success made under his direction by the orchestra, gained great personal favor throughout the tour, and his quick sympathy with American ideas has without doubt aided materially in adding to the satisfactory results of the trip so satisfactorily completed.

Clipping from Telegraph, Pittsburg Pa

Date 5/20.

[illegible] Rose, and other novelties.

***

Mozart Club Concert.

Those who heard last evening's concert in Old City Hall will not readily forget the musical treat they received.

The celebrated Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton which Arthur Nikisch wields with almost inspired hand, formed the center of attraction.

The Mozart Club, in full force, made a worthy background to the celebrated aggregation of Boston artists, and the club's conductor, J. P. McCollum, has cause to be proud of its success, and the applause it richly earned. Madame Steinbach-Jahns, the renowned vocalist, was enthusiastically rewarded by a most appreciative and numerous audience.

Li-zt's symphonic poem, "The Preludes," was rendered in magnificent style. This, the grandest feature of the programme, carried the audience away into the weird elements of a fantastic storm of music. Mr. Nikisch had to repeatedly bow his acknowledgments to the bursts of applause.

Madame Jahns, who made her debut last April, in Boston, sang the principal aria of Weber's Freischuetz in perfect style. Her voice has power, her rendition magnetism, and her intonation and enunciation are perfect.

The solo was followed by selections from Grieg's "Peer Gynt," which evidences the composer's peculiar style, as apparent in the shortest of his many songs.

The Mozart Club had control of the second part of the programme, introduced by the Symphony Orchestra with Mr. J. G. McCollum as conductor. Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" was the selection, with Mrs. M. Henkler as soprano, Miss Ada Scandrett, second soprano, and Mr. H. B. Brocket, tenor, as soloists.

Tribune, NewYork City.

Date 5/7

A SYMPHONY CONCERT IN WASHINGTON.

Washington, April 30.—The closing concert in the series of four by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Lincoln Hall to-night, was a fitting close of the musical season. As at the proceeding concerts, the house was packed with a cultivated and enthusiastic audience. The soloist, Madame Steinbach-Jahns, scored a signal success; and the features of the orchestra work were the Schumann symphony, which was finely played, and the Bal Costume of Rubinstein, the swing and dash of the latter composition exciting the applause of the audience.

[illegible] from

Globe, St. Paul, Minn.

Date 5/8

The approaching Boston Symphony Orchestra concert is rapidly taking on proportions commensurate with its position in the musical world—the leading orchestra in the United States. Its advent in the city ought to test the capacity of the People's church, large as it is, to the utmost, and from the sale of seats at Dyer's thus far it is well nigh certain that standing room will be at a premium. The analytical programmes in book form were issued to-day to subscribers, and may be had free by applying at the ticket office.

[136]

Commercial Gazette.
PITTSBURGH
WEDNESDAY, MAY 21, 1890.

THE SECOND EVENING.

Another Brilliant Success Scored By the Boston Orchestra.

The second concert under the auspices of the Mozart Club, with the celebrated Boston Symphony Orchestra and the renowned vocalist, Madame Steinbach-Jahns, as the principal attractions, was if possible a more signal success than the event of the previous evening. From platform to entrance Old City Hall was thronged with an enthusiastic audience, which from time to time gave way to an almost furious recognition of the performer, compelling encores and proving to the most obtuse the intense appreciation of first-class music which has a lodgment in the hearts of a Pittsburgh audience.

The orchestra, with its seventy performers, was superb, and whether in the brilliant overture, "Sakuntala," from Goldmark, or through the magnificence of Schumann's symphony in D minor, with its artistic introduction with the movement adagio non troppo, the stately allegro, sparkling romance, vigorrus scherzo, and intricate finale, or in the grandeur and magnificence of Wagner's Tannhauser, nothing seemed lacking in sympathy, movement or artistic conception. The second number on the program was a "fantasie characterisque" for violoncello, which was played by Mr. Anton Hekking in such superb and impressive manner that an encore was almost wildly demanded at the close, and a second selection, a nocturne from Chopin, was granted by the expert violoncellist.

Owing to illness Mr. Paul Zimmerman did not appear on the program as announced. A transposition therefore placed Madam Jahns as number three. The fair vocalist, who rendered selections from Franz, Rubinstein, Schumann and Goldmark, but deepened the impression of the previous evening and was an especial favorite with the appreciative audience. In the orchestral rendition of Schumann's Symphony in D minor, an interpolation of a flute solo, by one of the members of the orchestra was a revelation of the wonderful scope of the instrument in the hands of an expert. The program of the evening concluded with a chorus selection of Weber's hymn "In Constant Order." The solo parts were acceptably rendered by Mrs. William B. Wolfe, soprano; Miss Maggie Fraser, contralto; Mr. Joseph A. Vogel, tenor, and Mr. John A. Strauss as bass.

The Post.
PITTSBURGH
WEDNESDAY, MAY 21, 1890.

SCORED ANOTHER SUCCESS.

The Symphony Orchestra's Second Concert Highly Gratifying—Witnessed by a Large Audience.

A most successful event was the second concert of the Boston symphony orchestra and the Mozart club. Old City hall held as large an audience last evening as it could comfortably accommodate, and that all were well pleased it is hardly necessary to state. The program was changed somewhat from its original form. Mr. Paul Zimmerman, who was to have sung Rossini's "Cujus Animam," was announced as suffering from a bad cold, and his place was filled by Mr. Joseph Vogel. There were a few other changes.

The overtures from Goldmark's "Sakuntala" was first on the program and was excellently rendered. Mr. Anton Hekking delighted the audience by his wonderful violoncello playing of a "Fantasie Characterisque" by Servais. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns followed in an aria from Mozart's opera, "Entfuehrung aus dem Serail." After Schumann's symphony No. 4 in D minor, op. 120, by the orchestra, Monsier Charles Mole played a beautiful fantasie for flute in a superb manner. The concluding piece was Weber's hymn, "In Constant Order," op. 36, for solo voices, chorus and orchestra. The soloists were Mrs. William B. Wolfe, soprano; Miss Maggie Fraser, contralto; Mr. Joseph Vogel, tenor, and Mr. John A. Strauss.

Clipping from Times Pittsburg Pa,
Date 5/21.

...s detained at Central ...
night releasing prisoners.

CHARMING TO THE EAR.

The Second Mozart Club-Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert a Great Success.

The second concert of the Mozart Club-Boston Symphony Orchestra series at Old City Hall last night was attended by as fashionable and critical an audience as ever gathered in Pittsburg. Anton Hekking in "Fantasie Characterisque," for violoncello, was greeted with deafening applause and had to respond to an encore. Madam Steinbach-Jahns, in the aria from Mozart's opera, "Eutfuehrung aus dem Serail," was treated to three recalls. The orchestra in Schumann's symphony No. 4 in D minor, opus 120, did excellently. Charles Mole divided the evening's honors with Hekking in Demersseman's fantasie for flute. Wagner's overture "Tannhauser" kept the audience so quiet that it seemed as if no person was present. Weber's hymn "In Constant Order," by chorus and orchestra was the closing number, Mrs. W. B. Wolfe was soprano, Miss Maggie R. Frazer, contralto; John A. Strauss, basso and Joseph A. Vogel, tenor; Paul Zimmerman, originally scheduled for the tenor part, not being able to sing because of a severe cold.

SAINT PAUL
DAILY GLOBE:
MAY 14.

IN DULCET STRAINS.

Concert by the Boston Symphony Company an Artistic Success.

Lovers of the Classic Greet Each Number With Much Applause.

"Tannhaeuser," the third and perhaps the greatest of Wagner's successes, has been performed many times before St. Paul audiences, but never has its performance evoked so rapturous a response as that drawn from the vast crowd which heard the overture as given at the People's church last evening by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the dictorship of Arthur Nikisch. The auditorium was packed with lovers of the classic, and a glance over the sea of faces from the front of the house betrayed that the audience was one which would know how to appreciate or condemn, as the merits of the music should justify. The first distant notes of the pilgrim song, growing nearer and louder, at last near at hand, and again lost in the distance, were enough to interest every listener in the fortunes thus musically told of the erring Tannhaeuser. Then, as the thread of the strange legend is followed in the fantastic measure of that weird dance, and Tannhaeuser's song of defiance to the unholy crew rings jubilantly, the interest is intensified to a degree which tells its own story of the magnificence of the interpretation. The boisterous reveling and shrieks of wild delight, representing Tannhaeuser's surrender to the charms of the goddess, and the later dawn of day with the song of the reapproaching pilgrims, to which gives place the gruesome murmur following the orgie of the sirens, were all so vividly truthful as to leave a lasting impression on each hearer; and as the joyful song of the pilgrims swelled louder and more loudly, until in its ecstasy it chronicled the release of Tannhaeuser from the spell of the Venusberg, and the strange story thus grandly told had reached its end, there arose from the audience a burst of applause than which a more spontaneous or continuous tribute was never paid an orchestral performance in St. Paul.

Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, the sopraniste of the company, sang the aria "O Lovely Halls" in so perfect a manner as to win for her a perfect avalanche of plaudits, and compel her to return to the front of the stage three times in acknowledgement. Timothee Adamowski's violin solo work was very fine, and he, too, came in for a share of the laurels. The success of the evening, however, was "Peer Gynt," a summary of Greig's composition for operatic production. The piece as summarized is in four parts, representing "The Break of Day," "The Death of Aase," "Anitra's Dance" and "The Hall of the Mountain King."

The character of Peer Gynt is taken from one of the Norwegian folk-legions. He is a Norwegian Faust, whose superabundance of imagination will bring him to destruction, if he is not saved by a woman. Peer Gynt is a peasant lad, whose parents were well-to-do people; but the father is now dead, and the mother and son are living in great poverty. The lad is full of great ideas, and has many wonderful plans for the future. These he confides to his mother, who, notwithstanding his wild ways and fantastic ideas, believes in him. His youthful arrogance knows no bounds. He goes to a wedding and carries off the bride to the mountains, where he afterwards deserts her. During the night he wanders about and meets with some frolicsome dairymaids. He harbors at last in the hall of the king of the Dovre mountains, where he falls in love with the king's daughter, but is finally turned out of doors. He returns home, where he finds his mother, Aase, on her death-bed. After her death he sails for foreign climes, and lauds, after the lapse of many years, a rich man, on the coast of Morocco. In one of the Arabian deserts he meets Anitra, the daughter of a Bedouin chief. She only succeeds in captivating him temporarily, and leaves him. Peer Gynt dreams about Solvejg, the love of his youth, who has faithfully been waiting for him, and to whose arms he at last returns, old and gray.

The impressive solemnity of the death chant is followed by the weird strains to which the Bedouin maiden executes her fantastic dance, and temporarily captures the heart of Peer Gynt. One almost expects Anitra in her quaint garb to appear among the players, and give to the picture that realism it almost possesses without her presence. The fourth movement, a grotesquely impish march, representing the imps tormenting the wanderer, is as strangely characteristic of the composer as the first three, and the reception given the interpretation compelled the repetition of the scene in the hall of the mountain king. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns gave three song numbers, "Es blinkt der Thau," "Lullaby" and "Die Quelle," each of which were received with great applause, and the lady sang as an encore number a German ballad, and sang it so charmingly as to add to the laurels she had already won.

The closing glory was the Mendelssohn symphony in A, "Italian." Among all Mendelssohn's works there is not one more characteristic than this symphony of that cheerful, sunshiny, happy disposition which was almost more remarkable than his genius. There is a force of freshness and life, and of youth, innocent without being weak, to which, perhaps, no parallel can be found, except it be his own G minor concerto, which indeed was the colsoring of the same happy time of his life. The B-flat symphony of Beethoven in some respect resembles it, but the absolute truth, the extraordinary spring, is wanting even there. The beautiful composition was given in a manner worthy of Nikisch and his wonderful orchestra. Again the house resounded in praise of the talented Bostoniana, and the best concert of the season had reached its end.

The Pioneer Press
WEDNESDAY, MAY 14, 1890.
SAINT PAUL

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA CONCERT.

"Ab urbe condita 1640" greets you at every turn in the goodly city of Boston, and as early as 1670 the Bostonese began to be proud of their home and its products. Certainly they have reason and the long line of great men who claimed the New England capital as home, together with the existing museums, libraries, colleges, schools and universities, give ample substrata for most of the claims put forth by the veriest hub-ite who ever peered through spectacles at a Philistinic world. And among the institutions at which pride's finger cannot point too often or too emphatically is the Boston Symphony orchestra. In the large, cultivated, appreciative and intelligently enthusiastic audience that filled the People's church last evening were many who once claimed Boston or its environs as an abiding place. They were filled with delight, and righteously. Never has St. Paul been favored with an instrumental concert of such superlative merit as that which regaled the very air from 8 until 10 o'clock. Much was expected, more was vouchsafed. As a body or as single performers the orchestra is inimitable, admirable, delightful. Waves of harmony, billows of melody, rivers of dainty musical thought were given in every number, and so musicianly withal that fault-finding has no place, and to pick flaws would be as ungrateful as unnecessary.

Head and front, of course, is Arthur Nikisch, and it is easy to believe that Leipzig mourns for him. Gifted with graces of person, pose and manner, he is absolutely without charlatanry. He conducts without a score in front of him, because his memory is as accurate as any written page can be. His men are evidently thoroughly in sympathy with him, and he secures effects from the very tympani, from the bassoons, the tubas and the double basses. Unless you have heard the "Tannhauser" overture played by this orchestra you have never known its beauties, except mayhap abroad. This, the opening number, and Mendelssohn's Italian symphony, which closed the concert, were easily the noteworthy productions of the evening. In the symphony—which is fully as beautiful if not so well known as its Scotch sister—the second and third movements were simply perfection as to expression, phrasing and shading. The viola melodies will not be forgotton for many days by those who heard them, nor will the grand climax of the Saltarello which served as a finale. The much-talked-of Grieg suite was highly enjoyable, of course, and was the more so in that it showed what this assemblage of artists can evolve when led by such a baton as Nikisch wields. The first number of the suite, "Daybreak," is not especially noteworthy, nor is the third, the dance of the sheik's daughter, but Ibsen might gain new inspiration by listening to the funeral dirge for the roving lad's mother. Who, but was impressed with orchestral possibilities on hearing the diminuendo finale of the dirge wherein the great double-basses were as distinct yet subservient and pianissimo as the violins. In the final movement, representing Peer Gynt as the goal of impish pursuit, the music is grotesquerie itself. It is as indescribable as it would be impossible of proper production by almost any other orchestra on earth. This final movement was the only one repeated by the orchestra, though redemands were as earnest and pronounced as good breeding would allow.

Timothee Adamowski, who has rid himself of a great deal of hair (worn a la Wertheimer's lions) since he appeared in St. Paul as violin soloist with the Clara Louise Kellogg Concert company in 1881, played two movements from a violin concerto by Saint-Saens. He did not have the orchestral accompaniment which the composer intended, but was accompanied on the piano by Director Nikisch. Though somewhat hampered by a defective E string Adamowski played very well indeed. One or two pizzicato juggleries might have been omitted, but they were atoned for by the harmonic and double string work.

Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, who also had Mr. Nikisch as an accompanist part of the time—is a dramatic soprano with almost the breadth of Frau Materna and a good deal more flexibility than had that lady. Steinbach-Jahns is not unlike what Pappenheim was in her palmy days, and sang the famous aria, "O Lovely Halls," from "Tannhauser," effectively, with histrionic color and admirable reserve. In the ballad suite Sommer's "Lullaby" was daintily sung, and in response to continued applause the lady sang a characteristic little German song, with a laughing refrain, very takingly.

It is not too much to hope that St. Paul and Minneapolis will forever hereafter be on the list of cities favored by visits from the Boston Symphony orchestra. They will find no places between the oceans where their great attainments are appreciated more fully.

The encore, as affected by St. Paul audiences, is at once unique, solitary and unapproachable. Its monotonous and indiscriminating employment is becoming a reprehensible absurdity; a semi-barbarous torture to be dreaded by all theatrical, operatic and concert combinations as well as soloists. That audience in any city which demands—at the point of thunderous feet, vociferous clapping and hoarse cat calls—more than a third appearance of a favorite places upon itself the bar sinister of rudeness and enters into direct competition with variety hall boorishness and incivility. The reasonable demand of ritacimento is a just tribute to ability; its abuse carries the performance into the objectionable excess of ritornello and the ding-dong da capo of disagreeable perpetuity.

SUNDAY HERALD.
BOSTON, MAY 25, 1890.

MUSICAL MATTERS.

The Annual Tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The members of the Boston Symphony orchestra arrived back in this city yesterday, after the fourth annual tour of the organization, with the satisfaction of having completed the most successful series of concerts outside of this city's limits known in the history of this orchestra. During the four weeks the orchestra has been away from this city it has given 23 concerts, with an aggregate attendance of over 40,000 in the audiences, and in all its 4300 miles' travel no single mishap has occurred to the detriment of the health or engagements of the organization. The best test of the results of this tour is found in the fact that, wherever the orchestra has appeared, Manager Charles A. Ellis (under whose personal direction the tour was made, with Mr. Fred R. Comee's assistance) has received applications for more concerts next season. It is worthy of note that in St. Paul and Minneapolis, two cities never before visited by the Boston orchestra, the success of the organization was beyond all precedent, and the reception given to Conductor Nikisch throughout the tour has been most enthusiastic. It has been shown beyond question that the Boston orchestra has gained a recognition of its merits as an organization of the first rank throughout the country. Conductor Nikisch has, aside from the artistic success made under his direction by the orchestra, gained great personal favor throughout the tour, and his quick sympathy with American ideas has without doubt aided materially in adding to the satisfactory results of the trip so satisfactorily completed.

Clipping from Telegraph, Pittsburg, Pa
Date 5/20.

gress of mingles ... Rose, and other novelties.

***

Mozart Club Concert.

Those who heard last evening's concert in Old City Hall will not readily forget the musical treat they received.

The celebrated Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton which Arthur Nikisch wields with almost inspired hand, formed the center of attraction.

The Mozart Club, in full force, made a worthy background to the celebrated aggregation of Boston artists, and the club's conductor, J. P. McCollum, has cause to be proud of its success, and the applause it richly earned. Madame Steinbach-Jahns, the renowned vocalist, was enthusiastically rewarded by a most appreciative and numerous audience.

Liszt's symphonic poem, "The Preludes," was rendered in magnificent style. This, the grandest feature of the programme, carried the audience away into the weird elements of a fantastic storm of music. Mr. Nikisch had to repeatedly bow his acknowledgments to the bursts of applause.

Madame Jahns, who made her debut last April, in Boston, sang the principal aria of Weber's Freischuetz in perfect style. Her voice has power, her rendition magnetism, and her intonation and enunciation are perfect.

The solo was followed by selections from Grieg's "Peer Gynt," which evidences the composer's peculiar style, as apparent in the shortest of his many songs.

The Mozart Club had control of the second part of the programme, introduced by the Symphony Orchestra with Mr. J. G. McCollum as conductor. Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" was the selection, with Mrs. M. Henkler as soprano, Miss Ada Scandrett, second soprano, and Mr. H. E. Brocket, tenor, as soloists.

Tribune, New York City.
Date 5/7

A SYMPHONY CONCERT IN WASHINGTON.

Washington, April 30.—The closing concert in the series of four by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Lincoln Hall to-night, was a fitting close of the musical season. As at the proceeding concerts, the house was packed with a cultivated and enthusiastic audience. The soloist; Madame Steinbach-Jahns, scored a signal success; and the features of the orchestra work were the Schumann symphony, which was finely played, and the Hal' Costume of Rubinstein, the swing and dash of the latter composition exciting the applause of the audience.

Clipping from Globe, St. Paul, Minn.
Date 5/8

The approaching Boston Symphony Orchestra concert is rapidly taking on proportions commensurate with its position in the musical world—the leading orchestra in the United States. Its advent in the city ought to test the capacity of the People's church, large as it is, to the utmost, and from the sale of seats at Dyer's thus far it is well nigh certain that standing room will be at a premium. The analytical programmes in book form were issued to-day to subscribers, and may be had free by applying at the ticket office.

[137]

Clipping from LEADER, Cleveland, O

Date

THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

It Closes the Season of the Star Course at Music Hall—A Very Large Audience Delighted With a Fine Programme Artistically Carried Out.

The 4,000 and more seats of Music Hall were nearly if not all filled last evening, at the last concert of the Star course. The event that drew out so large a body of representative and musical people was the long anticipated appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In no sense does the organization seem to have suffered from its change of conductor. Mr. Arthur Nikisch appears to have a personality that is attractive and magnetic, and holds intimate sway over the orchestra. He conducts without notes, is quiet and reposeful in manner, but has eyes and ears for the remotest tone, and his control is felt throughout, while the evident intensity of his own emotion communicates itself to each player. The technique of the orchestral playing, always wonderfully clear and brilliant, is as wonderful as ever, and if there is change to note in results it is felt in the increased warmth and intensity of each individual member, who seems to gather from the conductor some of his own fire; and perhaps also in the ensemble shading, which has been brought to a nicety of expression that carries with it the impression that a human voice is singing. The well-known overture to "Tannhauser" opened the programme, and the evening closed with Schumann's beautiful symphony, No. 4 in D. minor, an intermediate number being the lovely descriptive music of Rubinstein's "Bal Costume." The latter was given with inimitable grace and a skill that won storms of applause from the happy audience. The Tannhauser overture was given a treatment that brought its beauties out splendidly, though its rendition was marred somewhat as is usual in Music Hall with first numbers by the noisy seating of late comers. The symphony would have held the audience spellbound from first to last, had not attention been interrupted and pleasure marred in a great measure by the going to and fro of ushers selling tickets. The introduction, with the four movements, "Allegro," "Romance," "Scherzo," and "Finale," were all given with a nicety and beauty of expression and exquisite phrasing, and, in the last two, with an intensity and fervor that made the players seem one great musical whole. The audience gave it storms of applause, though a few who had to catch night trains were compelled to leave before its close.

Madame Steinbach-Jahns marked a bright spot in the programme. She is exceedingly attractive in appearance and manners, and won the admiration of the audience, as she seems to have done of the orchestra, at once. Her voice is full, rich, and sympathetic in quality, flexible, and beautifully trained. She becomes a pleasing songstress to any phase of criticism and the audience paid her but the tribute she deserved in their warmth of applause. She was recalled several times, and received a handsome tribute of flowers. Her first number was the grand Aria from Der Freischuts. She gave it magnificently, and though embodying in it the pathos and purity of the character of the supposed singer as Weber intended, there was none of the extreme of woe and despair in her tones that is often given to it. Madame Jahns has an intelligent conception of what this aria calls for, and pleased the most critical. The singer also gave three lovely songs with piano—"Widmung," by Robert Franz; "Fruhlingslied," Rubinstein; and "Die Quelle," Goldmark, with exquisite phrasing and expression, making a fresh conquest of her audience.

Mons. Mole gave "Fantasie" for flute, with orchestra, by Demersseman, on themes from "Oberon," and so delighted his audience that twice ere he closed it they involuntarily burst into applause at his inimitable skill on this favorite instrument, of which he is a master. He was recalled over and again, but responded without playing again.

Clipping from Cleveland

Date 5/2

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The season of 1889-90 was brought to a close last evening by the Star course with a presentation to the Cleveland public of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The seating capacity of Music Hall was tested to its utmost by an enormous audience called forth to welcome this remarkable organization upon its second visit this season. Before indulging in a resume of the program, it is a pleasure to state that this famous body of musicians has lost none of its prestige under its new leader, Mr. Nikisch. Its ninth season, which has just closed, has been the most successful musically and financially since its organization. To Col. Higginson of Boston, America is indebted for the proud honor of calling this orchestra its own. Nine years ago this great musical philanthrophist selected Mr. George Henschel to take charge of and organize a body of musicians under the name of the "Boston Symphony Orchestra." For a number of years the expense account was enormous and at the end of each season Boston's generous benefactor balanced the accounts to the amount of thousands of dollars. To his munificence the majority of its present staff owe the magnificent instruments which they are so proud to use. Five years since Mr. Henschel resigned the baton to Herr Gericke and he, in his turn, resigned in favor of Mr. Nikisch. Its present conductor, like his predecessors, is an artist of rare ability, and is fully meeting the confidence placed in him. He has already made it quite certain that he can sustain to the full the place that Boston has made for herself in the possession of one of the finest orchestras in the world. The concert was a complete success from beginning to end. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, who appeared before a Cleveland audience for the first time, has a fine mezzo voice and much dramatic force. The two songs by Rubenstien, and Goldmark with piano, being very well rendered. Mons. Mole won the audience by his artistic rendering of the "Oberon" themes. One rarely hears a flute played with such freedom and wonderful delicacy. Of the orchestra itself one cannot give it too much credit. The playing of the Overture Tannhauser was magnificent, the work done by both wind instruments and cellos being wonderfully fine. The "Ball Costume," by Rubenstein was the most delightful and entertaining list of orchestral work heard for many a day, the last movement "Soreadore et Andalouse" fairly carrying the audience off their feet. The perfect control Mr. M.Nikisch has over his men was very observable in this part of the programme. We congratulate the Star Course upon the delight it has given its patrons in this complete entertainment.

Clipping from Dealer, Cleveland, Ohio

Date 5/22

MAGNIFICENT MUSIC

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert.

First Appearance of Mr. Arthur Nikisch as a Conductor—Mme. Steinbach Jahns and M. Mole the Soloists—Other Entertainments.

The Star course of entertainments for the season of 1889-90 closed brilliantly last evening with the concert by the renowned Boston symphony orchestra. Music hall was filled as it has seldom been and the great audience, which embraced the cream of the musical culture of the city, demonstrated its delight in frequent applause. The orchestra has been heard here before but there was much curiosity to see its new conductor, Mr. Arthur Nikisch. From the moment when he rapped with his baton upon his music stand for order it was apparent that he had complete control of the band of musicians. His method is pantomimic and his movements are precise, clearly conveying his directions to every instrument, never unduly demonstrative but always in keeping with the spirit of the score.

ARTHUR NIKISCH.

The playing by the orchestra last year and this year is entirely different. To be sure the performers are nearly all the same and their playing is recognizable as being the same as last year, but there is a different spirit. Mr. Arthur Nikisch is responsible for this state of things. One feels satisfied when seeing him guide his men and it is easy to be seen that the orchestra is more in sympathy with its director and consequently its playing is more free than under Mr. Gerike's leadership. In the wood wind one perceives the most marked change for the better. It is better balanced and the quality of tone more alike. The melodies are brought out in the different parts with more freedom and expression, due no doubt to the director giving his whole attention apparently to the instrument or instruments carrying the themes and parts to be made prominent. Mr. Nikisch's allowing to a degree the performers to take little liberties no doubt takes away the stiffness in the usual orchestral playing. The string department is grand, playing together as if one man. This is noticeable in one movement of the Rubinstein "Bal Costume," where all the violins, violas and 'cellos, assisted by the horns, carry the melody in unison. This was certainly a masterpiece of artistic playing.

The overture to "Tannhæuser" has never been given here so nearly perfect as last night. Had it not been for a little unsteadiness toward the end one could not see where the rendition could be improved upon. The introduction was perfect. Such shading and precision has never been heard here. The well known "Bal Costume" by Rubinstein was given also in a very satisfactory style. One is enchanted with the beautiful shading and delightful ensemble and where rhythm is required Mr. Nikisch insists on it in a very marked degree. One cannot help but wish for a little more sympathetic tone in the first horn.

The most important work of the evening was the Schumann symphony in D minor. This is not that composer's greatest achievement but nevertheless it is a wonderful work, somewhat peculiar in construction, as he uses what is termed "free fantasia." This is especially perceptible in the allegro, and in the movement also he does not adhere to the strict form but uses new material constantly. The romance is the most beautiful movement in the symphony. The chief subject was beautifully played by the 'cellos and oboi. Later on Mr. Kneisel, the concert meister, had an opportunity of showing his talents where he plays variations on the principal melody. The scherzo was given with a heaviness the composer intended and when the trio was introduced, which is a quick, beautiful movement, the effect was indescribable. The finale, which brought in reminiscences of different subjects from the work, was happily relieved by the new ones introduced and when the short presto is reached one is sure the work is nearing the end, but abruptly. All the themes were prominently brought out and upon Mr. Nikisch falls the credit of giving us as satisfactory a rendition of this grand work as is possible.

Mention must be made of the 'cello playing by Mr. Hekking. It is distinguished by refinement and a just appreciation of the requirements for producing the best effects.

Never in our recollection have we heard such marvelous execution as was shown by M. Ch. Mole, the flutist. After listening to him a few minutes one unconsciously felt that he was playing technically simple music, such was the perfection of his technic. Not only was he successful in the mere technic but his expression was as satisfactory as this instrument will allow. His phrasing, style and execution were perfect, even if his tone was not quite as full and rich as produced by some.

Of Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, the solo soprano, one can only say she is an artist possessing a grand, sympathetic voice, fine method and fairly good execution. Her singing of the group of German songs seemed to be her best effort of the evening, although her singing of the parts requiring dramatic force was excellent in the "Freischutz" aria. This appears to be her forte, as the more quiet themes lacked warmth.

Clipping from Appeal, Petersburg, Va.

Date 5/4/90

[137]

RICHMOND'S MUSIC FESTIVAL.

The Famous Boston Symphony Orchestra — Mme Steinbach-Jahns, Soloist — The Chorus.

It is safe to say that in the musical annals of Richmond no more important event stands recorded than the Music Festival which has been so generously provided by the Mozart association, and of which the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra is the stellar attraction. Ever since this celebrated instrumental organization has been before the public its fame has steadily increased and under Gerecke it was thought to have reached the highest possible degree of perfection. Under its present leader, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, however, it it said to have even taken further steps in advance and to have become the ideal orchestra. To listen to the performances of such an orchestra, composed of artists of acknowledged merit, and conducted by one who combines all the elements of perfect leadership, deep intelligence, broad interpretation, force, grace and elegance is an enjoyment so rarily offered to the people of Richmond and the surrounding country, that it may well be expected that her people will take full advantage of the occasion.

With this orchestra comes a famous German songstress, Mme. Magdalene Steinbach-Jahns. She made her debut in this country in Boston on April 19th, of which the Herald speaks in the following flattering terms:

This singer has been graciously favored with nature's endowments to fit her for the operatic and concert careers in which she has been so successful since her first appearance at Frankfort a little over ten years ago. She has a prepossessing stage presence, which wins her the immediate attention of an audience upon her entrance, and her gifts as a singer make good all the pleasant anticipations she arouses. She has a singularly fresh, bright and pleasing soprano voice, which shows the result of a thoroughly intelligent training, and in its use there is ample evidence of the keen musical instinct which always adds so much to the success of the vocalist. The aria by Mozart served to display her perfect control of the technique of her art, and her phrasing and delivery of the number gave great satisfaction. The group of songs, sung to the piano accompaniment of Mr. Nikisch, were not altogether happily chosen to display the singer's gifts at their best, but she pleased her audience by her interpretations of the selections, and, as upon the conclusion of the aria, was rewarded by a most pronounced demonstration of the audience. She is certainly a singer who will find favor with American audiences.

The Symphony orchestra and this lady will fill the programme on the first night of the festival.

On Saturday, the second night, not only these, but the great chorus of 285 voices and the "Virginia Gesangverein," of Richmond, will all be heard. The massed chorus is said to be in excellent training and the "Virginia" is too well known to need special commendation.

To Petersburgers an excellent opportunity is offered to hear one of the greatest orchestral organizations in this country, and exceptional advantages in the way of low railroad fares, &c., are offered. Parties intending to avail themselves of these will do well to consult the festival advertisement in today's issue of this paper.

Clipping from Journal, Minneapolis, Minn.

Date 5/8

A GREAT MUSICAL EVENT.

Next Monday evening at the University Coliseum the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give one of their delightful concerts, and, it is to be regretted, the only one they will give in this city.

Those who are familiar with the repertory of this representative American orchestra and its high reputation as an appreciative interpreter of the best classical music, need no coaxing to place themselves under the delicious and refining influence of the numbers of the program. Those whose taste is dominantly for the dash and grace of the most popular music will feel like placing themselves under the spell of Schumann's and Beethoven's wierd minors as rendered by this wonderful orchestra.

Boston has never produced a more influential musical combination and it is no wonder Boston people are proud of it and throng from October to April to the frequent concerts.

This orchestra in its personnel is strong with musical talent, there being seventy members, with exceedingly rich violin forces, while the distinguished Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, a marvellous soprano in full sympathy with her themes, and Herr S. M. Loeffler and other soloists make up the fullness of the measure of the orchestra's resources.

This concert, indeed, will be a great musical event for it is not often that we can listen to the richest of the measures of Beethoven, of Liszt, of Bach, of Mendelssohn, of Meyerbeer, of Schumann, of Schubert, of Weber and other masters and "chosen vessels" of heavenly music, interpreted so effectively. It is not pleasant to think that Clipping from News, St. Paul, Minn.

Date 5/2

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Something of the Famous Organization to Be Here in May.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra concert, at the People's Church on May 13, will be a musical event of unusual magnitude. The seventy musicians, besides the soloists and the conductor, will arrive by special train from St. Louis, be entertained at the Ryan, and depart by special train of sleepers for Chicago immediately after the concert. Each of the seventy men is an artist and soloist—the whole a band of virtuosi. It is impossible to over-rate its greatness. The programme will be as follows:

Wagner—Overture.....Tannhanser
Wagner—Aria, O Lovely Halls....Tannhanser.
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Saint-Saens.....Concerts for Violin
Mr. Timothee Adamowski.
Grieg—Suite, Peer Gynt op.
(a) Morning.
(b) The Death of Ase.
(c) Anitra's Dance.
(d) Troldans.
(e) The Imps Chasing Peer Gynt.
Three Songs With Piano, (to be announced.)
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Mendelssohn...Symphony in A (Italian)

The new conductor from Leipsic will conduct, a leader ranking with Richter, Thomas and Seidl, Mr. Arthur Mikisch. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, the prima donna soprano of Leipsic, has just arrived in this country. Mr. Adamowski, the violinist, is one of Boston's greatest soloists and a universal favorite. Altogether the concert bids fair to surpass anything ever held in the city. The sale of tickets begins on May 1 at 9 a. m. for subscribers, and on Monday, May 5, for the general public, at Dyer's. The concerts will begin promptly at 8 o'clock, the doors being closed at this hour, and no one will be admitted during the rendition of a number. The management earnestly request that the audience be seated at 8 o'clock sharp.

Clipping from Star, Cincinnati

Date 4/26

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

That superb organization, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will visit this city and give two concerts at the Odeon on the evenings of May 6 and 7. It goes without saying that the performances of this orchestra will be worthy the attention of every lover of fine music. No similar company has ever existed in this country under conditions so favorable to the best artistic results, and that these conditions have been availed of in the fullest degree is attested by the unanimous opinion of the highest critical authorities who rank the Boston orchestra with the foremost orchestras of Vienna, Berlin, Leipsic and Paris.

The sale of seats for these concerts opens next Monday at the John Church Co.'s, where programme books, with analytical notes can be obtained.

Clipping from LEADER, Cleveland, O

Date

THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

It Closes the Season of the Star Course at Music Hall—A Very Large Audience Delighted With a Fine Programme Artistically Carried Out.

The 4,000 and more seats of Music Hall were nearly if not all filled last evening, at the last concert of the Star course. The event that drew out so large a body of representative and musical people was the long anticipated appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In no sense does the organization seem to have suffered from its change of conductor. Mr. Arthur Nikisch appears to have a personality that is attractive and magnetic, and holds intimate sway over the orchestra. He conducts without notes, is quiet and reposeful in manner, but has eyes and ears for the remotest tone, and his control is felt throughout, while the evident intensity of his own emotion communicates itself to each player. The technique of the orchestral playing, always wonderfully clear and brilliant, is as wonderful as ever, and if there is change to note in results it is felt in the increased warmth and intensity of each individual member, who seems to gather from the conductor some of his own fire; and perhaps also in the ensemble shading, which has been brought to a nicety of expression that carries with it the impression that a human voice is singing. The well-known overture to "Tannhauser" opened the programme, and the evening closed with Schumann's beautiful symphony, No. 4 in D. minor, an intermediate number being the lovely descriptive music of Rubinstein's "Bal Costume." The latter was given with inimitable grace and a skill that won storms of applause from the happy audience. The Tannhauser overture was given a treatment that brought its beauties out splendidly, though its rendition was marred somewhat (as is usual in Music Hall with first numbers) by the noisy seating of late comers. The symphony would have held the audience spellbound from first to last, had not attention been interrupted and pleasure marred in a great measure by the going to and fro of ushers selling tickets. The introduction, with the four movements, "Allegro," "Romance," "Scherzo," and "Finale," were all given with a nicety and beauty of expression and exquisite phrasing, and, in the last two, with an intensity and fervor that made the players seem one great musical whole. The audience gave it storms of applause, though a few who had to catch night trains were compelled to leave before its close.

Madame Steinbach-Jahns marked a bright spot in the programme. She is exceedingly attractive in appearance and manners, and won the admiration of the audience, as she seems to have done of the orchestra, at once. Her voice is full, rich, and sympathetic in quality, flexible, and beautifully trained. She becomes a pleasing songstress to any phase of criticism and the audience paid her but the tribute she deserved in their warmth of applause. She was recalled several times, and received a handsome tribute of flowers. Her first number was the grand Aria from Der Freischuts. She gave it magnificently, and though embodying in it the pathos and purity of the character of the supposed singer as Weber intended, three was none of the extreme of woe and despair in her tones that is often given to it. Madame Jahns has an intelligent conception of what this aria calls for, and pleased the most critical. The singer also gave three lovely songs with piano—"Widmung," by Robert Franz; "Frualingslied," Rubinstein; and "Die Quelle," Goldmark, with exquisite phrasing and expression, making a fresh conquest of her audience.

Mons. Mole gave "Fantasie" for flute, with orchestra, by Demersseman, on themes from "Oberon," and so delighted his audience that twice ere he closed it they involuntarily burst into applause at his inimitable skill on this favorite instrument, of which he is a master. He was recalled over and again, but responded without playing again.

Clipping from Cleveland

Date 5/2

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The season of 1889-90 was brought to a close last evening by the Star course with a presentation to the Cleveland public of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The seating capacity of Music Hall was tested to its utmost by an enormous audience called forth to welcome this remarkable organization upon its second visit this season. Before indulging in a resume of the program, it is a pleasure to state that this famous body of musicians has lost none of its prestige under its new leader, Mr. Nikisch. Its ninth season, which has just closed, has been the most successful musically and financially since its organization. To Col. Higginson of Boston, America is indebted for the proud honor of calling this orchestra its own. Nine years ago this great musical philanthropist selected Mr. George Henschel to take charge of and organize a body of musicians under the name of the "Boston Symphony Orchestra." For a number of years the expense account was enormous and at the end of each season Boston's generous benefactor balanced the accounts to the amount of thousands of dollars. To his munificence the majority of its present staff owe the magnificent instruments which they are so proud to use. Five years since Mr. Henschel resigned the baton to Herr Gericke and he, in his turn, resigned in favor of Mr. Nikisch. Its present conductor, like his predecessors, is an artist of rare ability, and is fully meeting the confidence placed in him. He has already made it quite certain that he can sustain to the full the place that Boston has made for herself in the possession of one of the finest orchestras in the world. The concert was a complete success from beginning to end. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, who appeared before a Cleveland audience for the first time, has a fine mezzo voice and much dramatic force. The two songs by Rubenstien, and Goldmark with piano, being very well rendered. Mons. Mole won the audience by his artistic rendering of the "Oberon" themes. One rarely hears a flute played with such freedom and wonderful delicacy. Of the orchestra itself one cannot give it too much credit. The playing of the Overture Tannhauser was magnificent, the work done by both wind instruments and cellos being wonderfully fine. The "Ball Costume," by Rubenstein was the most delightful and entertaining list of orchestral work heard for many a day, the last movement "Soreadore et Andalouse" fairly carrying the audience off their feet. The perfect control Mr. M.Nikisch has over his men was very observable in this part of the programme. We congratulate the Star Course upon the delight it has given its patrons in this complete entertainment.

Clipping from Dealer, Cleveland, Ohio

Date 5/22

MAGNIFICENT MUSIC

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert.

First Appearance of Mr. Arthur Nikisch as a Conductor—Mme. Steinbach Jahns and M. Mole the Soloists—Other Entertainments.

The Star course of entertainments for the season of 1889-90 closed brilliantly last evening with the concert by the renowned Boston symphony orchestra. Music hall was filled as it has seldom been and the great audience, which embraced the cream of the musical culture of the city, demonstrated its delight in frequent applause. The orchestra has been heard here before but there was much curiosity to see its new conductor, Mr. Arthur Nikisch. From the moment when he rapped with his baton upon his music stand for order it was apparent that he had complete control of the band of musicians. His method is pantomimic and his movements are precise, clearly conveying his directions to every instrument, never unduly demonstrative but always in keeping with the spirit of the score.

ARTHUR NIKISCH.

The playing by the orchestra last year and this year is entirely different. To be sure the performers are nearly all the same and their playing is recognizable as being the same as last year, but there is a different spirit. Mr. Arthur Nikisch is responsible for this state of things. One feels satisfied when seeing him guide his men and it is easy to be seen that the orchestra is more in sympathy with its director and consequently its playing is more free than under Mr. Gerike's leadership. In the wood wind one perceives the most marked change for the better. It is better balanced and the quality of tone more alike. The melodies are brought out in the different parts with more freedom and expression, due no doubt to the director giving his whole attention apparently to the instrument or instruments carrying the themes and parts to be made prominent. Mr. Nikisch's allowing to a degree the performers to take little liberties no doubt takes away the stiffness in the usual orchestral playing. The string department is grand, playing together as if one man. This is noticeable in one movement of the Rubinstein "Bal Costume," where all the violins, violas and 'cellos, assisted by the horns, carry the melody in unison. This was certainly a masterpiece of artistic playing.

The overture to "Tannhæuser" has never been given here so nearly perfect as last night. Had it not been for a little unsteadiness toward the end one could not see where the rendition could be improved upon. The introduction was perfect. Such shading and precision has never been heard here. The well known "Bal Costume" by Rubinstein was given also in a very satisfactory style. One is enchanted with the beautiful shading and delightful ensemble and where rhythm is required Mr. Nikisch insists on it in a very marked degree. One cannot help but wish for a little more sympathetic tone in the first horn.

The most important work of the evening was the Schumann symphony in D minor. This is not that composer's greatest achievement but nevertheless it is a wonderful work, somewhat peculiar in construction, as he uses what is termed "free fantasia." This is especially perceptible in the allegro, and in the movement also he does not adhere to the strict form but uses new material constantly. The romance is the most beautiful movement in the symphony. The chief subject was beautifully played by the 'cellos and oboi. Later on Mr. Kneisel, the concert meister, had an opportunity of showing his talents where he plays variations on the principal melody. The scherzo was given with a heaviness the composer intended and when the trio was introduced, which is a quick, beautiful movement, the effect was indescribable. The finale, which brought in reminiscences of different subjects from the work, was happily relieved by the new ones introduced and when the short presto is reached one is sure the work is nearing the end, but abruptly. All the themes were prominently brought out and upon Mr. Nikisch falls the credit of giving us as satisfactory a rendition of this grand work as is possible.

Mention must be made of the 'cello playing by Mr. Hekking. It is distinguished by refinement and a just appreciation of the requirements for producing the best effects.

Never in our recollection have we heard such marvelous execution as was shown by M. Ch. Mole, the flutist. After listening to him a few minutes one unconsciously felt that he was playing technically simple music; such was the perfection of his technic. Not only was he successful in the mere technic but his expression was as satisfactory as this instrument will allow. His phrasing, style and execution were perfect, even if his tone was not quite as full and rich as produced by some.

Of Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, the sold soprano, one can only say she is an artist possessing a grand, sympathetic voice, fine method and fairly good execution. Her singing of the group of German songs seemed to be her best effort of the evening, although her singing of the parts requiring dramatic force was excellent in the "Freischutz" aria. This appears to be her forte, as the more quiet themes lacked warmth.

Clipping from Appeal Petersburg Va

Date 8/4/90

[137]

RICHMOND'S MUSIC FESTIVAL.

The Famous Boston Symphony Orchestra — Mme Steinbach-Jahns, Soloist — The Chorus.

It is safe to say that in the musical annals of Richmond no more important event stands recorded than the Music Festival which has been so generously provided by the Mozart association, and of which the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra is the stellar attraction. Ever since this celebrated instrumental organization has been before the public its fame has steadily increased and under Gerecke it was thought to have reached the highest possible degree of perfection. Under its present leader, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, however, it it said to have even taken further steps in advance and to have become the ideal orchestra. To listen to the performances of such an orchestra, composed of artists of acknowledged merit, and conducted by one who combines all the elements of perfect leadership, deep intelligence, broad interpretation, force, grace and elegance is an enjoyment so rarily offered to the people of Richmond and the surrounding country, that it may well be expected that her people will take full advantage of the occasion.

With this orchestra comes a famous German songstress, Mme. Magdalene Steinbach-Jahns. She made her debut in this country in Boston on April 19th, of which the Herald speaks in the following flattering terms:

This singer has been graciously favored with nature's endowments to fit her for the operatic and concert careers in which she has been so successful since her first appearance at Frankfort a little over ten years ago. She has a prepossessing stage presence, which wins her the immediate attention of an audience upon her entrance, and her gifts as a singer make good all the pleasant anticipations she arouses. She has a singularly fresh, bright and pleasing soprano voice, which shows the result of a thoroughly intelligent training, and in its use there is ample evidence of the keen musical instinct which always adds so much to the success of the vocalist. The aria by Mozart served to display her perfect control of the technique of her art, and her phrasing and delivery of the number gave great satisfaction. The group of songs, sung to the piano accompaniment of Mr. Nikisch, were not altogether happily chosen to display the singer's gifts at their best, but she pleased her audience by her interpretations of the selections, and, as upon the conclusion of the aria, was rewarded by a most pronounced demonstration of the audience. She is certainly a singer who will find favor with American audiences.

The Symphony orchestra and this lady will fill the programme on the first night of the festival.

On Saturday, the second night, not only these, but the great chorus of 285 voices and the "Virginia Gesangverein," of Richmond, will all be heard. The massed chorus is said to be in excellent training and the "Virginia" is too well known to need special commendation.

To Petersburgers an excellent opportunity is offered to hear one of the greatest orchestral organizations in this country, and exceptional advantages in the way of low railroad fares, &c., are offered. Parties intending to avail themselves of these will do well to consult the festival advertisement in today's issue of this paper.

Clipping from

Date

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

That superb organization, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will visit this city and give two concerts at the Odeon on the evenings of May 6 and 7. It goes without saying that the performances of this orchestra will be worthy the attention of every lover of fine music. No similar company has ever existed in this country under conditions so favorable to the best artistic results, and that these conditions have been availed of in the fullest degree is attested by the unanimous opinion of the highest critical authorities who rank the Boston orchestra with the foremost orchestras of Vienna, Berlin, Leipsic and Paris.

The sale of seats for these concerts opens next Monday at the John Church Co.'s, where programme books, with analytical notes can be obtained.

Clipping from St. Paul Minn

Date 5/2

Clipping from Journal Minneapolis Minn

Date 5/8

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Something of the Famous Organization to Be Here in May.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra concert, at the People's Church on May 13, will be a musical event of unusual magnitude. The seventy musicians, besides the soloists and the conductor, will arrive by special train from St. Louis, be entertained at the Ryan, and depart by special train of sleepers for Chicago immediately after the concert. Each of the seventy men is an artist and soloist—the whole a band of virtuosi. It is impossible to over-rate its greatness. The programme will be as follows:

Wagner—Overture.....Tannhanser
Wagner—Aria, O Lovely Halls....Tannhanser.
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Saint-Saens.....Concerts for Violin
Mr. Timothee Adamowski.
Grieg—Suite, Peer Gynt op.
(a) Morning.
(b) The Death of Ase..
(c) Anitra's Dance.
(d) Troldans.
(e) The Imps Chasing Peer Gynt.
Three Songs With Piano, (to be announced.)
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Mendelssohn...Symphony in A (Italian)

The new conductor from Leipsic will conduct, a leader ranking with Richter, Thomas and Seidl, Mr. Arthur Mikisch. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, the prima donna soprano of Leipsic, has just arrived in this country. Mr. Adamowski, the violinist, is one of Boston's greatest soloists and a universal favorite. Altogether the concert bids fair to surpass anything ever held in the city. The sale of tickets begins on May 1 at 9 a. m. for subscribers, and on Monday, May 5, for the general public, at Dyer's. The concerts will begin promptly at 8 o'clock, the doors being closed at this hour, and no one will be admitted during the rendition of a number. The management earnestly request that the audience be seated at 8 o'clock sharp.

all of this skin consigned to the Hallies.

A GREAT MUSICAL EVENT.

Next Monday evening at the University Coliseum the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give one of their delightful concerts and, it is to be regretted, the only one they will give in this city.

Those who are familiar with the repertory of this representative American orchestra and its high reputation as an appreciative interpreter of the best classical music, need no coaxing to place themselves under the delicious and refining influence of the numbers of the program. Those whose taste is dominantly for the dash and grace of the most popular music will feel like placing themselves under the spell of Schumann's and Beethoven's wierd minors as rendered by this wonderful orchestra.

Boston has never produced a more influential musical combination and it is no wonder Boston people are proud of it and throng from October to April to the frequent concerts.

This orchestra in its personnel is strong with musical talent, there being seventy members, with exceedingly rich violin forces, while the distinguished Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, a marvellous soprano in full sympathy with her themes, and Herr S. M. Loeffler and other soloists make up the fullness of the measure of the orchestra's resources.

This concert, indeed, will be a great musical event for it is not often that we can listen to the richest of the measures of Beethoven, of Liszt, of Bach, of Mendelssohn, of Meyerbeer, of Schumann, of Schubert, of Weber, and other masters and "chosen vessels" of heavenly music, interpreted so effectively. It is not pleasant to think that

[138]

Clipping from Democrat St. Louis Mo.
Date 5/9

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under direction of Mr. Arthur Nikisch, will give the first of its two concerts at Exposition Music Hall this evening. The orchestra, numbering seventy performers, will have the assistance of Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, soprano, and Mme. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, pianiste, who will appear as soloists. The programme in full is as follows:

Vesperial, "Die Meistersinger" ..... Wagner
Aria from "Tannhaeuser" ..... Wagner
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Concerto for pianoforte in E flat ..... Litolff
Mme. Bloomfield-Zeisler.
Symphony in A (Italian) ..... Mendelssohn
Songs with piano: ..... Liszt
(a) "O Lieb" ..... Brahms
(b) Lullaby ..... Goldmark
(c) Die Quelle ..... Liszt
Symphonic Poem "Les Preludes" ..... Liszt

A second concert, with a complete change of programme, will be given on Saturday evening.

Star, Washington, D.C.
Date May 9

The Symphony Concert.

The final concert in the series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given last evening in Lincoln Music Hall before an audience in numbers and in enthusiastic appreciation quite the equal of any that have gathered to do honor to this remarkable organization. The chief number of the program was Schumann's first symphony, overflowing with melodious ideas expressed in delightful orchestral tone color. In nothing does Mr. Nikisch show more clearly his sympathy with the romantic in music than in the works of Schumann, and the performance of this symphony was as ideally perfect as can well be imagined, full of warmth and richness and pregnant with subtle elaborations of detail which gave almost a new insight into the lovely and buoyant charactor of the work. The Saint Seah's "Danse Macabre" and the selections from Rubenstein's "Bal Costume," both bits of strongly drawn and incisive genre painting in music, were given interpretations equally characteristic. Those who effect to find any deterioration in the orchestra's hard-earned perfection of technical finish from Mr. Nikisch's free, original and thoroughly individual methods of conducting must search in vain in last evening's concert for any slightest trace of it. The concert was further the means of introducing to Washington Mme. Steinbach-Johns, soprano, and Mr. Leo Schultz, 'cello, the latter a member of the orchester. Mme. Steinbach-Johns displayed a voice of much power and superb dramatic quality, especially effective in the aria from Tannhæuser, "Dich Theure Halle," and yet capable of such lyric qualifications as were demanded by the three songs which she sang later, including one of exquisite tenderness and beauty by Mr. Nikisch himself. Her work was greeted with much liberality of applause, as was that of Mr. Schulz, whose style upon the 'cello is one of rare refinement, and whose command of the bravura effects upon that instrument is never-failing. With the exception of his tone, which appears somewhat veiled and at times thin, his performance of Eckert's pleasing and very effective concerto was a very gratifying one.

Clipping from Times Fall River
Date 4/28 1890

Boston Symphony Company.

Last evening, the Boston Somphony Orchestra, 70 in number, passed through this city, en route for Philadelphia, where they give to-night the last of the season's series of five concerts. From there they start on a Southern and Western trip of four weeks, giving concerts in most of the important cities as far West as Minneapolis and St. Paul.

The season which closed Saturday night n Boston has been by far the most successful in the history of the organization; the orchestra playing during the 24 weeks in that city alone to audiences aggregating over 135,000 people. While the best seats sold at auction in some cases at prices which averaged over $4 per entertainment, over 60,000 people attended these concerts at from 25 to 50 cts. per ticket.

Clipping from Times-Star, Cincinnati, OHIO
Date 5/7

[illegible] and wife have gone from the Burnet House to Delhi for the summer.

Musical Notes.

To-morrow evening the Boston Symphony orchestra will give its first concert at the Odeon, the second and last being on the following night. Arthur Nikisch will then make his first appearance as a conductor before a Cincinnati audience. The splendid concert of a year ago is so vividly and pleasurably remembered that the orchestra hardly needs a re-introduction. Its success then was instantaneous. There are more than seventy men in the organization and for years they have played together. Madame Steinbach-Jahns is the soloist.

Clipping from Dispatch Pittsburg Pa.
Date 5/2

1890.

MUSIC LOVERS DELIGHTED.

The Climax of the Season Reached in the Boston Symphony Concert—A Varied and Exquisite Programme Presented to a Large Audience.

PITTSBURG'S musical season of 1889-90 reached its climax last night in the first of the two concerts given by the Mozart Club with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Quite appropriately one of the very largest and most representative audiences of the season crowded Old City Hall, from the brilliant stage to the dingy cock-loft. If nearly 1,500 people will pay from $1 to $2 for the privilege of climbing up the steep stairs into that hot, barn-like hall, with its noisy unpleasant surroundings, what would be the patronage of a like attraction in a roomy, first floor auditorium, away from the noise-some market-place, and large enough to hold more money at half the prices? At home, the Boston Symphony Orchestra played this season before 80,000 people who paid but from 25 to 50 cents apiece, in addition to the 75,000 who bought the higher priced tickets, many of them bidding large premiums in the fashionable rivalry for choice of seats. Pittsburg would rejoice to have some local Higginson step forth and sustain such an orchestra; but first and foremost we need the large and suitable hall, indispensable to such popular results. Everyone who endured the discomforts of Old City Hall through the lengthy programme last night will join in a hearty godspeed to at least one part of Mr. Carnegie's munificent plans for the public good. Under more favorable physical conditions, the epithet lengthy, as applied to this programme, could not have conveyed the faintest suggestion of weariness in the listeners. There was abundant variety in its several numbers, and a due sense of artistic fitness and proportion in their combination—as a glance will show:

PART I.

Liszt, Symphonic Poem ..... "Les Preludes."
Weber, Aria from "Freischuetz" .....
..... Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Grieg, Suite ..... "Peer Gynt," Op. 46.
"Daybreak."
"The Death of Aase."
"Anitra's Dance."
"In the Halls of the King of the Dovre Mountains."
(The imps are chasing Peer Gynt.)

PART II.

Mendelssohn's hymn of praise.
Mrs. M. Henkler, first soprano.
Miss Adah Scandrett, second soprano.
Mr. H. B. Brockett, Tenor.
Chorus and Boston Symphony Orchestra.

THE Liszt symphonic poem (a work that has been heard too often to need description) afforded the writer, from his temporary coigne of vantage behind the curtain, a good opportunity to observe the personality of the conductor, who was called from the Leipzig Opera House to rule our country's best orchestra. All music-loving Americans have a right to be interested in the man at that post: they have equal reason to rejoice that the pitifully absurd contract labor law, which was blatantly invoked for the purpose, did not avail to deprive us of Mr. Arthur Nikisch. A short, slender, wiry frame, clean-limbed and with a fine reposeful face dominated by a wide brow, lit up by a pair of bright, deep eyes and softened by a sensitive mouth—Mr. Nikisch presents upon the conductor's stand a personality that inspires confidence and sympathy. He conducts wholly from memory, but without seeming to forget a single entrance of any instrument or losing the thread of the most complex passage. His beat, while firm and masterful to a degree, is yet singularly eloquent in subtly suggesting to the players all the varying shades of expression.

THE splendid body of players which had acquired such technical proficiency under five years of Mr. Gericke's strict discipline, seems to have needed only such a warm, magnetic leadership as that of Mr. Nikisch in order to approximate absolute perfection very closely indeed. There has been no falling off on the technical side in any department, and there has been a decided gain in the vividness and richness of the orchestral colors. The symphonic poem was in truth a poem; full of life and feeling. One could not ask for more passionate intensity than filled the swelling phrases in the allegro tempestuoso, caught up from the 'cellos by the violins; yet the pastoral measures that followed were as deliciously pure and cool in their way.

GRIEG is chiefly known here by his songs. His "Peer Gynt" suite, while not originally intended for concert use, is eminently characteristic of the man both in its subject matter and in its orchestral treatment. It consists of extracts from the incidental music written for Ibsen's drama of the same name. The first movement, "Daybreak," with its simple theme akin to that of Mendelssohn's "Hebrides" overture, is a most graceful and tender morceau, redolent of northern climes. "The Death of Aase" is of a piece with the pathetic haunting volks-leider of the Scandinavian people; it is given to the muted strings, and is harmonized in a style that suggests Palaestrina. "Anitra's Dance" could not be daintier, with its touches of the triangle and its quaint Oriental melody; while the last movement is one of the most grotesque of fancies, its weird theme commencing in strongly marked staccati by the low strings and bassoon, rising gradually into the higher instruments and working up bit by bit to the most amazing tutti climax, with cymbals and everything else in full blast. The performance of the suite was superb in all particulars. At its close the applause was so enthusiastic that Mr. Nikisch was compelled to repeat the final section.

Mrs. Steinbach-Jahns is blessed with a personal attractiveness and an ease of manner that prepossessed her audience in her favor. She began the favorite scene from "Freischuetz" in a somewhat reserved mood, that soon deepened, with the "Leise, Leise," into a genuine tenderness of feeling, and in the allegro culminated in a triumphant brilliance. Almost her only fault was a disposition to overdo the ritard in various places. Her voice is a full, rich, solid soprano, of unusual flexibility for its caliber. The audience gave Mrs. Steinbach-Jahns quite an ovation, recalling her several times.

Through the second half of the programme our local forces were in the ascendant. Mr. McCollum received a very cordial round of applause as he stepped forward to conduct Mendelssohn's "Symphonie-Cantata," one of the few successful attempts to imitate Beethoven's innovation—in the immortal Ninth—of writing a symphony with a cluster of vocal numbers in place of the last movement. It is a pity that the symphony could not have the most favorable conditions for performance. The orchestra as a whole had never played it before, and the brief morning rehearsal was not all all sufficient for the men and the new conductor to arrive at a perfect understanding either of each other or of the score. Under these circumstances, the symphony was surprisingly well played; that is to say, there were no hitches and there were a great many beauties fairly brought out.

THE Leipzig "Gewandhaus" Orchestra, one of Mendelssohn's best works. The scene, for instance, of the watchman creates an extraordinary dramatic effect with simple means; the reiterated question, "Is the night far spent?" with its disappointing answer, works up most effectively at last to the triumphant declaration—first by the solo soprano, unaccompanied and with only the change to the major key, and then by the whole force of chorus and orchestra—"The night, it departeth, the day cometh quickly." The strong massive choruses, the lofty chorale, the lovely duet for two sopranos and the richly varied numbers for tenor solo, all go to make up a thoroughly delightful and inspiring work—one well worthy of commemorating the invention of printing, as it was intended, or any other great event in the progress of mankind.

C. W. S.

Clipping from Leader, Pittsburg, Pa.
Date 5/2

lowest price last year was 15¾ cents. It is predicted that it will go still lower.

THE SECOND CONCERT.

The Mozart Club and Boston Symphony Orchestra Perform—The Musical Event of the Season Last Night at Old City Hall.

The second concert by the Mozart club and Boston Symphony orchestra, which took place at Old City hall last night, was probably the best musical event of the season in Pittsburg. A short delay occurred in commencing the program, on account of the vast throng of people who kept pouring into the hall to hear the delightful performance to be given, but when the conductor of the orchestra made his appearance a profound silence prevailed and the most perfect concert of the season commenced.

Goldmark's romantic overture "Sakuntala," led the program, and was a marvel in its interpretation of one of the loveliest of Hindu myths. The perfection with which each part of the orchestra gave its part of the story, was marked and most impressive, and at the close the appreciative audience which filled every nook and corner in the hall, gave vent to their appreciation by long and loud applause. A short interruption followed to allow those who had purchased seats more to be seen attending such an artistic entertainment than from any love for the sublime music given, to parade the isles at so late an hour, and then the concert continued.

The second number was a solo for violoncello, "Fantasie Characteristique," and was performed by Anton Hekking in such a manner that it left no doubt on the minds of his audience as to his artistic ability. The piano was only used as an accompaniment, but at the conclusion of his performance the burst of applause was so genuine he was obliged to respond to an encore and played with the most delicate and refined taste the familiar Chopin nocturne. Mr. Hekking's whole appearance on the stage is refined and graceful and nothing else could be expected from his artistic merits as a cello soloist. With the Pittsburg people he far outranks many other celebrated cello soloists！ that have performed here in the past.

Owing to a severe cold contracted the day previous Paul Zimmerman was unable to render Rossini's aria, "Cujus Animain," and Mme. Steinback-Jahns appeared in the number appointed him on the program. In Mozart's brilliant and beautiful aria she displayed the wonderful flexibility of her good voice but failed to respond to the repeated encores given by the audience. It was in rendering the D minor symphony by Shumann, that the conductor of the orchestra produced the greatest point in his favor as a director and it is seldom that any conductor can perfectly direct an orchestra of sixty pieces through the intricacies of the five movements, which embrace this work, without the aid of a score. Arthur Nikisch accomplished this wonderful feat without a flaw and proved himself competent in the task.

The solo for flute performed by Mr. Moli, great in technique and phrasing, while not very deep, was pleasing in the extreme, and called for a hearty encore, to which he failed to respond.

The Mozart club, under the direction of Professor McCollum, finished the program for the evening in a creditable manner, giving with spirit and earnestnes Weber's noble hymn, and the audienc then dispersed, fully satisfied with th second grand concert of the Mozart clu and Boston Symphony orchestra.

Post Louisville, Ky.
Date 5/9

DID you notice what an elegant criticism the Courier-Journal had today of the concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, the finest organization in America? It was fully equal and very similar to that paper's brilliant notices of the Shakespearean performances of Booth and Modjeska, our greatest tragedian and tragedienne. These were only rivaled by the charming way in which the great journal wrote up the divine Patti, the first singer of the world. The Courier-Journal has made a great hit by its remarkable work in the dramatic and musical line. Its interesting views on these matters of art emanate from a talented young gentleman in the counting-room and have attracted wide attention. There is nothing like encouraging true art.

THE audience last night at the Auditorium was one of the largest and most cultivated [illegible]

Republic, St. Louis, Mo.
Date 5/3

[illegible] Saladin, deserve special recognition for meritorious work.

This afternoon "Na[illegible]" will be repeated and to-night a new double bill, "Strike der Schmiede," and "Gelehrten Frauen."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The audience which assembled last night in the Exposition Hall to hear the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was by no means as large as the very great merit of the performance deserved. But still any ordinary hall would have been well-filled with the enthusastic audience which thoroughly enjoyed the perfect performance. St. Louis has already had two visits of this organization, under the direction of Mr. Gericke, whose five years' work brought the orchestra to a pitch of perfection in delicacy of treatment not before achieved in this country. But one fault might be found. The work was too fine, too delicate. It lacked strength. Arthur Nikisch has added in his magnificent conducting and training, this one thing, and the orchestral work last night left nothing to be desired. Mr. Nikisch leads his orchestra in the true Hungarian fashion—that is, without notes. In every piece except the accompaniments the score did not appear on the conductor's desk—he had it in his head. By this means he gets closer to his orchestra, is enabled to watch every point, bring out each perfect effect, and keep the whole performance together in a way that would be impossible, if he had to watch the score in addition. In the Wagner "Vorspiel" to "Die Meistersinger" the difference between his conducting and that of Geriche, who gave the same piece last year, was most apparent. While there was all the delicacy imaginable in the tender parts, yet one did not miss that full, broad effect which typifies the life of the mediæval German burghers. The playing of the brasses was unexceptionable, they were full, round and true. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns has a lovely, fresh voice, rich and sympathetic, one might say a thoroughly "healthy" tone. She made a fine impression, especially in the songs with piano, which were exquisitely accompanied by Mr. Nikisch, who plays the piano as well as he conducts. These were regular German "Lieder" sung and played in true German fashion.

Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, the pianiste, is what may be called an emotional player—her success must depend upon her mood. The first movement of the concerto was rather disappointing, but the pianiste warmed up to her work in the second movement and gave it and the rest of the piece in a dashing style. It is a pity she did not have a better instrument, for the "Steinway" was old and worn rather thin and wiry. The piece she played also was somewhat commonplace, the last movement being a mixture of Dutch hymn and tipsy tarantelle. The pianista would have made a much better effect in a work by a better composer than Litolff. Instead of the Mendelssohn symphony as announced, the symphony No. 4 in D minor of Schumann was played, the change having been made at the request of a prominent musical lady of the city. The Schumann symphony is a much greater composition than that of Mendelssohn, and Mr. Nikisch and his band of true artists showed that they had individually and collectively a true conception of what is probably the finest piece of romantic music ever written. All the exquisite nuances of the treatment where the brass, wood and strings are played off against each other or blended in weirdest harmonies, were worked out to the highest degree of perfection. It is a great treat to hear the brass instruments so well played that one feels their full power without being overpowered by noise. After the thrilling close of this masterpiece the audience gave the conductor a triple recall. The concluding piece, "Les Preludes," by Liszt, has been often played here, and well played, too; but the performance last night was in all respects fully equal, and perhaps in the moving quality of the strings, superior than others. There will be one more concert to-night, at which Beethoven's immortal Fifth Symphony will be played, and all music lovers should attend.

Dispatch, St. Louis, Mo.
Date 5/8

popular "Iron Master" will be [illegible]

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In the matter of orchestral music Boston is the leading city of this country. It is the only city in America that ever possessed a strictly permanent orchestra, and the immense patronage that it gives the forty-eight home performances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is highly creditable to the musical taste of the city. But the home concerts are by no means the only ones that are greeted with crowded houses. The merits of the organization have won for it a large clientele of cultured and fashionable people in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and its series of concerts in those cities have come to be looked upon as leading events of each musical season. The annual concerts in this city are to be given at Exposition Music Hall to-morrow and Saturday evenings. Mr. Nikisch has arranged most interesting programmes, introducing as soloists Mme. Steinback-Jahns, a noted Leipzic soprano, and Mme. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, the well-known pianiste. The analytical programmes in book form, which have been issued for these concerts, will add much to a better understanding and appreciation of the compositions to be performed.

Clipping from Dispatch Richmond Va
Date 5

Mr. Frederick R. Comee, the manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a great friend of Mr. Leo. Wheat. He is a genial, [illegible] gentleman, and has made [illegible] in Richmond.

[138]

Clipping from Herald St. Louis, Mo.

Date 5/9

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under direction of Mr. Arthur Nikisch, will give the first of its two concerts at Exposition Music Hall this evening. The orchestra, numbering seventy performers, will have the assistance of Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, soprano, and Mme. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, pianiste, who will appear as soloists. The programme in full is as follows:

Vesperial, "Die Meistersinger" ..... Wagner
Aria from "Tannhaeuser" ..... Wagner
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Concerto for pianoforte in E flat ..... Litolff
Mme. Bloomfield-Zeisler.
Symphony in A (Italian) ..... Mendelssohn
Songs with piano: ..... Liszt
(a) "O Lieb" ..... Brahms
(b) Lullaby ..... Goldmark
(c) Die Quelle ..... Liszt
Symphonic Poem "Les Preludes" .....
A second concert, with a complete change of programme, will be given on Saturday evening.

Clipping from

Date

The Symphony Concert.

The final concert in the series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given last evening in Lincoln Music Hall before an audience in numbers and in enthusiastic appreciation quite the equal of any that have gathered to do honor to this remarkable organization. The chief number of the program was Schumann's first symphony, overflowing with melodious ideas expressed in delightful orchestral tone color. In nothing does Mr. Nikisch show more clearly his sympathy with the romantic in music than in the works of Schumann, and the performance of this symphony was as ideally perfect as can well be imagined, full of warmth and richness and pregnant with subtle elaborations of detail which gave almost a new insight into the lovely and buoyant charactor of the work. The Saint Sean's "Danse Macabre" and the selections from Rubenstein's "Bal Costume," both bits of strongly drawn and incisive genre painting in music, were given interpretations equally characteristic. Those who effect to find any deterioration in the orchestra's hard-earned perfection of technical finish from Mr. Nikisch's free, original and thoroughly individual methods of conducting must search in vain in last evening's concert for any slightest trace of it. The concert was further the means of introducing to Washington Mme. Steinbach-Johns, soprano, and Mr. Leo Schultz, 'cello, the latter a member of the orchester. Mme. Steinbach-Johns displayed a voice of much power and superb dramatic quality, especially effective in the aria from Tannhæuser, "Dich Theure Halle," and yet capable of such lyric qualifications as were demanded by the three songs which she sang later, including one of exquisite tenderness and beauty by Mr. Nikisch himself. Her work was greeted with much liberality of applause, as was that of Mr. Schulz, whose style upon the 'cello is one of rare refinement, and whose command of the bravura effects upon that instrument is never-failing. With the exception of his tone, which appears somewhat veiled and at times thin, his performance of Eckert's pleasing and very effective concerto was a very gratifying one.

Clipping from New Fall River

Date 4/ Mar 28

Boston Symphony Company.

Last evening, the Boston Somphony Orchestra, 70 in number, passed through this city, on route for Philadelphia, where they give to-night the last of the season's series of five concerts. From there they start on a Southern and Western trip of four weeks, giving concerts in most of the important cities as far West as Minneapolis and St. Paul.

The season which closed Saturday night n Boston has been by far the most successful in the history of the organization; the orchestra playing during the 24 weeks in that city alone to audiences aggregating over 135,000 people. While the best seats sold at auction in some cases at prices which averaged over $4 per entertainment, over 60,000 people attended these concerts at from 25 to 50 cts. per ticket.

Clipping from Times-Star, Cincinnati, OHIO

Date 5/

...and wife have gone from the Burnet House to Delhi for the summer.

Musical Notes.

To-morrow evening the Boston Symphony orchestra will give its first concert at the Odeon, the second and last being on the following night. Arthur Nikisch will then make his first appearance as a conductor before a Cincinnati audience. The splendid concert of a year ago is so vividly and pleasurably remembered that the orchestra hardly needs a re-introduction. Its success then was instantaneous. There are more than seventy men in the organization and for years they have played together. Madame Steinbach-Jahns is the soloist.

1890.

MUSIC LOVERS DELIGHTED.

The Climax of the Season Reached in the Boston Symphony Concert—A Varied and Exquisite Programme Presented to a Large Audience.

PITTSBURG'S musical season of 1889-90 reached its climax last night in the first of the two concerts given by the Mozart Club with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Quite appropriately one of the very largest and most representative audiences of the season crowded Old City Hall, from the brilliant stage to the dingy eock-loft. If nearly 1,500 people will pay from $1 to $2 for the privilege of climbing up the steep stairs into that hot, barn-like hall, with its noisy unpleasant surroundings, what would be the patronage of a like attraction in a roomy, first floor auditorium, away from the noise-some market-place, and large enough to hold more money at half the prices? At home, the Boston Symphony Orchestra played this season before 30,000 people who paid but from 25 to 50 cents apiece, in addition to the 75,000 who bought the higher priced tickets, many of them bidding large premiums in the fashionable rivalry for choice of seats. Pittsburg would rejoice to have some local Higginson step forth and sustain such an orchestra: but first and foremost we need the large and suitable hall, indispensable to such popular results. Everyone who endured the discomforts of Old City Hall through the lengthy programme last night will join in a hearty godspeed to at least one part of Mr. Carnegie's munificent plans for the public good. Under more favorable physical conditions, the epithet lengthy, as applied to this programme, could not have conveyed the faintest suggestion of weariness in the listeners. There was abundant variety in its several numbers, and a due sense of artistic fitness and proportion in their combination—as a glance will show:

PART I.

Liszt, Symphonic Poem ..... "Les Preludes."
Weber, Aria from "Freischuetz" .....
..... Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Grieg, Suite ..... "Peer Gynt," Op. 46.
"Daybreak."
"The Death of Aase."
"Anitra's Dance."
"In the Halls of the King of the Dovre Mountains."
(The imps are chasing Peer Gynt.)

PART II.

Mendelssohn's hymn of praise.
Mrs. M. Henkler, first soprano.
Miss Adah Scandrett, second soprano.
Mr. H. B. Brockett, Tenor.
Chorus and Boston Symphony Orchestra.

— — —

THE Liszt symphonic poem (a work that has been heard too often to need description) afforded the writer, from his temporary coigne of vantage behind the curtain, a good opportunity to observe the personality of the conductor, who was called from the Leipzig Opera House to rule our country's best orchestra. All music-loving Americans have a right to be interested in the man at that post: they have equal reason to rejoice that the pitifully absurd contract labor law, which was blatantly invoked for the purpose, did not avail to deprive us of Mr. Arthur Nikisch. A short, slender, wiry frame, clean-limbed and with a fine reposeful face dominated by a wide brow, lit up by a pair of bright, deep eyes and softened by a sensitive mouth—Mr. Nikisch presents upon the conductor's stand a personality that inspires confidence and sympathy. He conducts wholly from memory, but without seeming to forget a single entrance of any instrument or losing the thread of the most complex passage. His beat, while firm and masterful to a degree, is yet singularly eloquent in subtly suggesting to the players all the varying shades of expression.

— — —

THE splendid body of players which had acquired such technical proficiency under five years of Mr. Gericke's strict discipline, seems to have needed only such a warm, magnetic leadership as that of Mr. Nikisch in order to approximate absolute perfection very closely indeed. There has been no falling off on the technical side in any department, and there has been a decided gain in the vividness and richness of the orchestral colors. The symphonic poem was in truth a poem; full of life and feeling. One could not ask for more passionate intensity than filled the swelling phrases in the allegro tempestuoso, caught up from the 'cellos by the violins; yet the pastoral measures that followed were as deliciously pure and cool in their way.

— — —

GRIEG is chiefly known here by his songs. His "Peer Gynt" suite, while not originally intended for concert use, is eminently characteristic of the man both in its subject matter and in its orchestral treatment. It consists of extracts from the incidental music written for Ibsen's drama of the same name. The first movement, "Daybreak," with its simple theme akin to that of Mendelssohn's "Hebrides" overture, is a most graceful and tender morceau, redolent of northern climes. "The Death of Aase" is of a piece with the pathetic haunting volks-leider of the Scandinavian people; it is given to the muted strings, and is harmonized in a style that suggests Palaestrina. "Anitra's Dance" could not be daintier, with its touches of the triangle and its quaint Oriental melody; while the last movement is one of the most grotesque of fancies, its weird theme commencing in strongly marked staccati by the low strings and bassoon, rising gradually into the higher instruments and working up bit by bit to the most amazing tutti climax, with cymbals and everything else in full blast. The performance of the suite was superb in all particulars. At its close the applause was so enthusiastic that Mr. Nikisch was compelled to repeat the final section.

Mrs. Steinbach-Jahns is blessed with a personal attractiveness and an ease of manner that prepossessed her audience in her favor. She began the favorite scene from "Freischuetz" in a somewhat reserved mood, that soon deepened, with the "Leise, Leise," into a genuine tenderness of feeling, and in the allegro culminated in a triumphant brilliance. Almost her only fault was a disposition to overdo the ritard in various places. Her voice is a full, rich, solid soprano, of unusual flexibility for its caliber. The audience gave Mrs. Steinbach-Jahns quite an ovation, recalling her several times.

Through the second half of the programme our local forces were in the ascendant. Mr. McCollum received a very cordial round of applause as he stepped forward to conduct Mendelssohn's "Symphonie-Cantata," one of the few successful attempts to imitate Beethoven's innovation—in the immortal Ninth—of writing a symphony with a cluster of vocal numbers in place of the last movement. It is a pity that the symphony could not have the most favorable conditions for performance. The orchestra as a whole had never played it before, and the brief morning rehearsal was not all all sufficient for the men and the new conductor to arrive at a perfect understanding either of each other or of the score. Under these circumstances, the symphony was surprisingly well played; that is to say, there were no hitches and there were a great many beauties fairly brought out.

THE vocal part of the "Lobgesang" forms one of Mendelssohn's best works. The scene, for instance, of the watchman creates an extraordinary dramatic effect with simple means; the reiterated question, "Is the night far spent?" with its disappointing answer, works up most effectively at last to the triumphant declaration—first by the solo soprano, unaccompanied and with only the change to the major key, and then by the whole force of chorus and orchestra—"The night, it departeth, the day cometh quickly." The strong massive choruses, the lofty chorale, the lovely duet for two sopranos and the richly varied numbers for tenor solo, all go to make up a thoroughly delightful and inspiring work—one well worthy of commemorating the invention of printing, as it was intended, or any other great event in the progress of mankind. C. W. S.

Clipping from Leader, Pittsburg, Pa.

Date 5/2

lowest price last year was 10¾ cents. It is predicted that it will go still lower.

THE SECOND CONCERT.

The Mozart Club and Boston Symphony Orchestra Perform—The Musical Event of the Season Last Night at Old City Hall.

The second concert by the Mozart club and Boston Symphony orchestra, which took place at Old City hall last night, was probably the best musical event of the season in Pittsburg. A short delay occurred in commencing the program, on account of the vast throng of people who kept pouring into the hall to hear the delightful performance to be given, but when the conductor of the orchestra made his appearanee a profound silence prevailed and the most perfect concert of the season commenced.

Goldmark's romantic overture "Sakuntala," led the program, and was a marvel in its interpretation of one of the loveliest of Hindu myths. The perfection with which each part of the orchestra gave its part of the story, was marked and most impressive, and at the close the appreciative audience which filled every nook and corner in the hall, gave vent to their appreciation by long and loud applause. A short interruption followed to allow those who had purchased seats more to be seen attending such an artistic entertainment than from any love for the sublime music given, to parade the isles at so late an hour, and then the concert continued.

The second number was a solo for violoncello, "Fantasie Characteristique," and was performed by Anton Hekking in such a manner that it left no doubt on the minds of his audience as to his artistic ability. The piano was only used as an accompaniment, but at the conclusion of his performance the burst of applause was so genuine he was obliged to respond to an encore and played with the most delicate and refined taste the familiar Chopin nocturne. Mr. Hekking's whole appearance on the stage is refined and graceful and nothing else could be expected from his artistic merits as a cello soloist. With the Pittsburg people he far outranks many other celebrated cello soloistsis that have performed here in the past.

Owing to a severe cold contracted the day previous Paul Zimmerman was unable to render Rossini's aria, "Cujus Animain," and Mme. Steinback-Jahns appeared in the number appointed him on the program. In Mozart's brilliant and beautiful aria she displayed the wonderful flexibility of her good voice but failed to respond to the repeated encores given by the audience. It was in rendering the D minor symphony by Shumann, that the conductor of the orchestra produced the greatest point in his favor as a director and it is seldom that any conductor can perfectly direct an orchestra of sixty pieces through the intricacies of the five movements, which embrace this work, without the aid of a score. Arthur Nikisch accomplished this wonderful feat without a flaw and proved himself competent in the task.

The solo for flute performed by Mr. Moli, great in technique and phrasing, while not very deep, was pleasing in the extreme, and called for a hearty encore, to which he failed to respond.

The Mozart club, under the direction of Professor McCollum, finished the program for the evening in a creditable manner, giving with spirit and earnestnes Weber's noble hymn, and the audience then dispersed, fully satisfied with the second grand concert of the Mozart club and Boston Symphony orchestra.

Post Louisville, Ky.

Date 5/9

***

Did you notice what an elegant criticism the Courier-Journal had today of the concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, the finest organization in America? It was fully equal and very similar to that paper's brilliant notices of the Shakespearean performances of Booth and Modjeska, our greatest tragedian and tragedienne. These were only rivaled by the charming way in which the great journal wrote up the divine Patti, the first singer of the world. The Courier-Journal has made a great hit by its remarkable work in the dramatic and musical line. Its interesting views on these matters of art emanate from a talented young gentleman in the counting-room and have attracted wide attention. There is nothing like encouraging true art.

***

THE audience last night at the Auditorium was one of the largest and most cultivated Republic, St. Louis, Mo.

Date 5/5

...Krueger as Saladin, deserve special recognition for meritorious work.

This afternoon "Na..." be repeated and to-night a new double bill, "Str... der Schmiede," and "Gelehrten Frauen."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The audience which assembled last night in the Exposition Hall to hear the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was by no means as large as the very great merit of the performance deserved. But still any ordinary hall would have been well-filled with the enthusastic audience which thoroughly enjoyed the perfect performance. St. Louis has already had two visits of this organization, under the direction of Mr. Gericke, whose five years' work brought the orchestra to a pitch of perfection in delicacy of treatment not before achieved in this country. But one fault might be found. The work was too fine, too delicate. It lacked strength. Arthur Nikisch has added in his magnificent conducting and training, this one thing, and the orchestral work last night left nothing to be desired. Mr. Nikisch leads his orchestra in the true Hungarian fashion—that is, without notes. In every piece except the accompaniments the score did not appear on the conductor's desk—he had it in his head. By this means he gets closer to his orchestra, is enabled to watch every point, bring out each perfect effect, and keep the whole performance together in a way that would be impossible, if he had to watch the score in addition. In the Wagner "Vorspiel" to "Die Meistersinger" the difference between his conducting and that of Geriche, who gave the same piece last year, was most apparent. While there was all the delicacy imaginable in the tender parts, yet one did not miss that full, broad effect which typifies the life of the mediæval German burghers. The playing of the brasses was unexceptionable, they were full, round and true. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns has a lovely, fresh voice, rich and sympathetic, one might say a thoroughly "healthy" tone. She made a fine impression, especially in the songs with piano, which were exquisitely accompanied by Mr. Nikisch, who plays the piano as well as he conducts. These were regular German "Lieder" sung and played in true German fashion.

Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, the pianiste, is what may be called an emotional player—her success must depend upon her mood. The first movement of the concerto was rather disappointing, but the pianiste warmed up to her work in the second movement and gave it and the rest of the piece in a dashing style. It is a pity she did not have a better instrument, for the "Steinway" was old and worn rather thin and wiry. The piece she played also was somewhat commonplace, the last movement being a mixture of Dutch hymn and tipsy tarantelle. The pianista would have made a much better effect in a work by a better composer than Litolff. Instead of the Mendelssohn symphony as announced, the symphony No. 4 in D minor of Schumann was played, the change having been made at the request of a prominent musical lady of the city. The Schumann symphony is a much greater composition than that of Mendelssohn, and Mr. Nikisch and his band of true artists showed that they had individually and collectively a true conception of what is probably the finest piece of romantic music ever written. All the exquisite nuances of the treatment where the brass, wood and strings are played off against each other or blended in weirdest harmonies, were worked out to the highest degree of perfection. It is a great treat to hear the brass instruments so well played that one feels their full power without being overpowered by noise. After the thrilling close of this masterpiece the audience gave the conductor a triple recall. The concluding piece, "Les Preludes," by Liszt, has been often played here, and well played, too; but the performance last night was in all respects fully equal, and perhaps in the moving quality of the strings, superior than others. There will be one more concert to-night, at which Beethoven's immortal Fifth Symphony will be played, and all music lovers should attend.

Dispatch, St. Louis, Mo.

Date 5/8

...to-night, popular "Iron Master" will be ...

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In the matter of orchestral music Boston is the leading city of this country. It is the only city in America that ever possessed a strictly permanent orchestra, and the immense patronage that it gives the forty-eight home performances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is highly creditable to the musical taste of the city. But the home concerts are by no means the only ones that are greeted with crowded houses. The merits of the organization have won for it a large clientele of cultured and fashionable people in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and its series of concerts in those cities have come to be looked upon as leading events of each musical season. The annual concerts in this city are to be given at Exposition Music Hall to-morrow and Saturday evenings. Mr. Nikisch has arranged most interesting programmes, introducing as soloists Mme. Steinback-Jahns, a noted Leipzic soprano, and Mme. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, the well-known pianiste. The analytical programmes in book form, which have been issued for these concerts, will add much to a better understanding and appreciation of the compositions to be performed.

Clipping from Dispatch Richmond Va

Date 5/

Mr. Frederick R. Comee, the manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a great friend of Mr. Leo. Wheat. He is a genial, whole-souled gentleman, and has made many friends in Richmond.

Pittsburg Dispatch

THE MUSIC WORLD.

Programmes for the Mozarts and Boston Symphony Orchestra.

THE LATTER'S SEASON AT THE HUB.

Progress in Musical Culture as Indicated by Recent Events.

NEWS FROM POPULAR PITTSBURGERS

The most important among the many events that throng in toward the close of our musical season are the two concerts of the Mozart Club (twelfth season; fifth and sixth concerts) to be given with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on Monday and Tuesday of next week, at Old City Hall. The full programmes, now first published, are as follows:

Monday Evening, May 19.

PART I.

Liszt.....Symphonic Poem, "Les Preludes."
Boston Symphony Orchestra; Mr. Arthur Nikisch, conductor.

Weber.....Aria, from "Der Freischuetz."
Mme. Magdalena Steinback-Jahns.

Grieg.....Suite, "Peer Gynt," Op. 46.
a. Daybreak; b. "The Death of Aase;" c. "Anitra's Dance;" d. "In the Halls of the King of the Dovre Mountains." (The imps are chasing Peer Gynt.)
Boston Symphony Orchestra.

PART II.

Mendelssohn.....'Hymn of Praise"
The Mozart Club, Mr. James P. McCollum, conductor, assisted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Soloists: Mr. Harry B. Brockett, tenor; Mrs. Mathilde Henkler and Miss Ada Scandrett, sopranos.

TUESDAY EVENING, MAY 20.

Goldmark.....Overture, "Sakuntala"
Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Rossini—"Cujus Animam," from "Stabat Mater"
Mr. Paul Zimmerman.

Servais—"Fantasie Characteristique" for Violoncello
Mr. Anton Hekking.

Schuman—Symphony No. 4, in D minor, Op. 120
Introduction (Adagio non troppo).
Allegro.
Romance (Adagio non troppo).
Scherzo.
Finale (Allegro).
Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Songs with Piano.
(a) Robert Franz.....'Widmung"
(b) Rubinstein.....'Es blinkt der Thau"
(c) Schumann.....'Auftraege"
(d) Goldmark.....'Die Quelle"
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.

Wagner.....Overture, "Tannhaeuser"
Weber.....Hymn, "In Constant Order"
The Mozart Club, accompanied by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Soloists: Mrs. W. B. Wolfe, soprano; Miss Margaret Fraser, contralto; Mr. Paul Zimmerman, tenor; Mr. Jno. A. Strouss, tenor. Mr. James P. McCollum, conductor.

***

Of Mme. Steinbach-Jahns we are told that she began her professional career singing soubrette parts in the Opera at Frankfort-on-the-Main. She next appeared in Danzig, where her remarkable gifts attracted attention, and brought her an engagement at the Leipzig Theater. Here she soon became the leading dramatic soprano, and her career was one of extraordinary success. Among her most notable triumphs were the roles of Elsa in "Lohengrin," Senta in Flying Dutchman," Donna Anna in "Don Juan," Eva in "Die Meistersinger," and Agathe in "Freischuetz." Since Mr. Nikisch brought her to this country to participate in the orchestra's present extended tour, the voice of our best critics has amply indorsed her growing European reputation.

The ninth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's regular concerts at Music Hall, which closed a fortnight ago, has been the most successful in its history. The new conductor, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, from Leipzig, has more than warranted his selection for this important post. He has wholly captivated the critics of the Hub, in spite of prejudices at the commencement of his work. The practical results of the season's efforts may readily be gathered from the following table from official sources:

The number who have attended the rehearsals on admission tickets at an expense of 25 cents is	20,985
Five hundred and eight season tickets for rehearsals were sold at $7 50, making the number who attended at an expense of 31¼ cents	12,192
Nine hundred and seventy-four season tickets for the evening concerts were sold at $7 50, making attendance at 31¼ cents	23,876
The number who have attended the evening concerts on admission tickets at 50 cents	3,697
Total number who have heard the orchestra at an expense of 50 cents or less	60,250
Add to this the number who bought the higher priced tickets at auction—1,423 season tickets for each series—1,423x48.	68,304
Admission and cheap season	60,250
Total attendance regular performances	128,554
Add again the number who attended the three young people's matinees (6,900) and the total number who have heard the orchestra is, by a close estimate	135,454

Think of it: Sixty thousand persons hearing the very best music performed in a manner nowhere excelled at an expense of 50 cents or less.

Those who have sneered at Mr. Higginson's wonderfully liberal patronage of the orchestra, as a fad, indulged in for the delectation of an aristocratic clique, will have hard work to find such another instance of musical evangelism for the masses.

Republic, St. Louis, Mo.

Date 5/8

Times, Richmond, Va.

Date 5/3

THE FESTIVAL CONCERT.

First of the Festival Concerts at the Academy of Music.

The first of the two festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra occurred at the Academy of Music last night. It has been some time since so magnificent a musical organization has been heard here. The orchestra, which has given such eclat, musically, to the city of Boston, and for which that city is so largely indebted to the generosity of one its citizens, Mr. Higginson, rendered the beautiful programme which had been arranged in a manner almost beyond criticism. The orchestra is composed of splendid material, having been recruited from the very best material of this country and Europe. Their playing is remarkable for an exquisite delicacy of tone—chiefly due no doubt to the distribution of instruments; for as the orchestra was selected especially with a view to the production of symphonies, strings and wood-winds largely predominate. The instruments respond to the touch of the director like one great many-voiced, many-toned organ.

Mr. Arthur Nikisch is essentially a poetic conductor. His phrasing evinces delicacy of feeling rather than dramatic breadth. This was evident in his beautiful interpretation of the first motive of the "Euryanthe" overture, in the third movement of the Rubinstein "Bal Costume," and the saltarello of the Italian symphony.

In appearance Mr. Nikisch is rather small and delicately framed. A mass of wavy black hair [illegible] closely cut beard covers his chin. In conducting the orchestra he is quiet and graceful in the extreme.

Mme. Steinbach Jahns, the vocalist, sang the "Prayer from der Freishuetz" and three German lieder, the latter with a piano accompaniment by Mr. Nikisch. She is a dramatic singer of the true German school. Her voice is remarkable for purity of tone and ampleness of register. There is, however, in her singing, a lack of soul and feeling. Mme. Jahns was suffering with a slight sore throat last night, which prevented her from doing justice to the "Freischuetz" number.

The concert was a gem, and the enthusiasm with which each number was received was a just tribute to the worth of the artists. The attendance was very large and highly fashionable, almost every seat in the house being occupied.

The programme to-night will be essentially a popular one. The orchestral numbers are: The "Tannhaeuser" overture and a Grieg suite. The choral numbers are: "Unfold, ye portals" (Gounod), and "Hail, bright abode" (Wagner). Festival chorus: "Victory Song" (Abt), Gesang Verein Virginia. Mme. Jahns will sing an aria from "Tannhaeuser," and Mr. Kneisel will play one of Vieuxtemps' polonaises for the violin. The concert will begin promptly at 8 o'clock.

Clipping from Plain Dealer Cleveland O

Date 5/4

[illegible]een three schools of music.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

[illegible]ently closed its ninth season in that city [illegible]d the newspapers there agree that it was [illegible]e most successful and most satisfactory [illegible]ason of all. The total attendance at the [illegible]entyfour afternoon rehearsals, the twenty-[illegible]ur evening concerts and the three young [illegible]ople's matinees was 135,454. Mr. Arthur [illegible]eld writes in the Post:

"It has been in every way, artistically and [illegible]ancially, in and out of Boston, by far the [illegible]ost successful season of this splendid organ-[illegible]tion thus far. Naturally the first question [illegible] be asked is: 'Has Mr. Nikisch proved [illegible]mself a proper successor of Mr. Gericke?' [illegible]nd there can be no doubt, but what the whole public will gladly answer, 'Indeed [illegible]he has.'"

Mr. Nikisch has played 106 works by 48 composers; 23 Germans, 8 Frenchmen, 4 Russians, 3 Englishmen, 2 Italians, 3 Scandinavians and 5 Americans, this division being made according to the schools to which the men are habitually considered to belong, Meyerbeer for example being ranked as a Frenchman, etc. There are 16 novelties, including 6 works by 5 Americans.

The western tour of the Boston symphony orchestra, beginning with concerts in Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore and Richmond last week, will take in the following cities in order: Columbus, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Chicago, Milwaukee, Ann Arbor, Detroit, Pittsburg, Cleveland (May 21), Buffalo, Albany. The orchestra is accompanied by Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, soprano, and Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield Zersler, pianist.

The program for the Cleveland concert embraces the Schumann symphony No. 4 and several popular numbers, including the overture to "Tannhaeuser" and a scene from "Der Freischuetz." Mme. Jahns will sing three selections.

[illegible] Kansas City; R. [illegible] and Dr. C. C. [illegible]worth, Kas.; S. [illegible]Main, Springfield, Mo.

THE THEATRES.

Boston Symphony Orchestra—The Kendals—Possart—Anton Concerts.

Music lovers will be glad to be reminded of the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—70 performers under the direction of Mr. Arthur Nikisch—which takes place at Exposition Music Hall to-morrow and Saturday evenings. To the attractions of happily chosen orchestr programmes will be added solo numbers by Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, a noted Leipzic soprano, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, the well-known pianiste, and Messrs. Franz Kneisel and Leo Schulz, violin and 'cello players respectively. The [illegible] is the largest musical or[illegible] this city during Times, Richmond, Va.

Date 5/7

A MAY MUSICAL FESTIVAL

THE MOZART ASSOCIATION'S FIRST GRAND ATTEMPT.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, the Famous Singer, the Gesang-Verein Virginia, and a Mixed Chorus of 285 Voices.

To-night will begin Richmond's first musical festival under the auspices of the Mozart Association. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the finest organization of its kind in this country, will make its debut in this city, with Mme. Steinbach-Jahns as the vocalist. This will be the symphony night. To-morrow will be chorus night, and the Gesang-Verein Virginia, sixty voices, Charles L. Siegel, conductor, and the festival chorus, 285 voices, Clarance A. Marshall, conductor, accompanied by the orchestra, will be heard. Here are the programmes for the two entertainments:

SYMPHONY NIGHT.

Overture, "Euryanthe,"
Orchestra.
Aria from "Freischutz,"
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
"Bal Costume," Rubinstein.
Ballet for Orchestra.
Songs with Piano.
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Symphony in A (Italian), Mendelssohn.
(Allegro Vivace-Andante Conmoto-Moderato-Salterello.)

CHORUS NIGHT.

Overture, "Tannhauser,"
Orchestra.
Chorus, "Unfold ye Portals,"
Festival Chorus and Orchestra.
Aria from "Tannhauser,"
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Suite, "Peer Gynt," Grieg.
Orchestra.
Male Chorus, "Siegesgesang." Abt.
Gesang-Verein Virginia.
Ballade and Polonaise for Violin, Vieuxtemps.
Mr. Kneisel.
March and Chorus, "Hail Bright Abode," Wagner.
Festival Chorus and Orchestra.

THE CONDUCTOR.

The conductor of the orchestra is that famous young Kapellmeister, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, one of the leading and most important conductors in the world. He comes from Szent-Miklos, a small town situated in the principality of Lichenstein. He is thirty-five years of age. His father occupied the position of head steward and auditor to the prince, and was himself an enthusiastic musical amateur. In earliest childhood, the boy showed such an extraordinary talent that his parents determined to educate him as a musician. He began his studies with the violin; and he mastered this instrument with such ease and so completely that, at the early age of eight, he appeared in public with most extraordinary success, —in fact the young prodigy received a genuine ovation. His first studies in harmony and organ-playing were made under the direction of the organist Prochazka, in the neighboring town of Buschtowitz; and in all branches the lad made such remarkable progress as to enable him to enter the Royal Conservatory in Vienna at the unusually early age of eleven. There he remained for eight years, and then applied for and was appointed to a desk at the Royal Opera. After that his rise was rapid. Under his care and direction the Leipzig Theatre orchestra has gained a European fame, which entitles it to an equal or even superior place to the Gewandhaus orchestra. A performance of the colossal Ninth Symphony in 1882 is said to have been the most magnificent ever given; while the superb manner in which he conducted the concerts of the last "Tonkunstler-Versammlung" in 1883 brought him a profusion of orders and decorations from all over the country. He also conducted on many occasions in the Gewandhaus as Reinecke's substitute, and has also given many remarkably successful concerts with his own theatre orchestra. More especially noteworthy, however, is the manner in which he conducted the recent monster concerts of the Liszt Society. With them, he achieved a success which caused all the noted German critics to acknowledge that Arthur Nikisch is one of the most brilliant and talented living conductors, both in the theatre and on the concert stage.

THE ORCHESTRA.

The orchestra was originally made up of the best available players of Boston and New York. Year by year it has been strengthened by the acquisition of superior performers wherever they could be found, until now it is everywhere conceded that no such company has ever been brought together. In its ranks are representatives of the leading orchestras of Vienna, Leipzig, Berlin, Paris and London. At the head of the violins, as concert master, is Franz Kneisel, who plays a solo to-morrow night, and he is supported by C. M. Loeffler, T. Adamowski, and a corps of players, every member of which is a solo artist. At the first desk of the 'celli sit Anton Hekking and Leo Schulz; on the flute and oboe will be heard Mole and Sautet, who came two years ago from the Opera Comique, Paris. Other prominent players among the wind instruments are Xaver Reiter, first horn; Pierre Muller, first trumpet, late of the Lamoureaux Orchestra, Paris, and Goldsmith, the first clarionet.

THE GESANG-VEREIN.

The Gesang-Verein Virginia will sing with the following voices, accompanied by the orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Charles M. Siegel:

First tenors: W. Ebel, Chas. Lundin, G. Loth, H. Greener, Ed. Moll, H. F. Miller, Chas. Phillips, M. F. Richter, S. Steinlein, P. Stumpf, and F. Will.

Second tenors: W. Herbig, P. Klein, H. Boltz, H. Bromm, Chas. Closs, C. Schaaf, J. Spilling, Herm. Schmidt, O. Ostergreen, O. Spott, A. Volkmann, and E. Stumpf.

First basses: M. Briel, B. Brauer, T. Ebel, F. C. Ebel, A. Hartung, Aug. Moll, G. Klein, L. Kaufmann, T. F. Koehler, C. F. Koehler, L. Bromm, M. Lindner, C. O. Loth, H. G. Miller, G. Runge and W. Zimmermann.

Second basses: W. Dietz, Chas. Ganser, O. Lohmann, Th. Keck, E. Lundin, A. Nickel, B. Haase, H. Ebel, C. Dietrich, M. Schaaf, H. Schmidt, Chas. Poindexter, A. Volmer, A. Wolff and Chas. Haase.

FESTIVAL CHORUS.

The festival chorus is an amalgamation of several smaller choral societies and members of church choirs, &c. Mr. Clarance A. Marshall will conduct the numbers. The chorus is composed as follows:

Sopranos: Miss L. Arnold, Mrs. J. Harvie Blair, Mrs. C. E. Brown, Mrs. Bigelow, Misses Mary Bass, Lucy Beech, Lula Bethel, Ellie Bethel, Kate Brennan, Lily Bishop, Kate Brown, Mrs. James Calder, Mrs. W. R. Cook, Mrs. Thomas Christian, Misses Ellora Chapin, Ferdie Davison, Lula Dunstan, Mollie Drinard, M. D. Denzler, Mrs. M. B. Ellet, Misses Fannie Eaton, Kate Ebel, Lena Ebel, Louisa Ebel, Mrs. W. E. Fitzwilson, Miss Jennie Fergusson, Mrs. W. J. Gilman, Mrs. P. F. Greenwood, Misses Fannie Gwathmey, Bettie Goode, M. L. Garnett, D. Gibbs, Mrs. A. C. Harding, Misses L. G. Henning, Eva Harris, Mollie Harrison, N. I. Harrison, Josie Harris, Selina Hempf, Mrs. E. Jenkins, Mrs. R. C. Lockerman, Mrs. J. Lundin, Misses Kate Lee, Mattie Landrum, Bessie Lee, E. Latham, Mrs. Dr. Machaux, Misses Viola Minor, Annie Meyer, Ledie Martin, B. Martin, Sallie Montgomery, Bessie Nichols, Mrs. D. W. Pugh, Mrs. W. S. Quarles, Misses L. M. Quarles, E. Quarles, Ellie Pumphrey, Lizzie Pumphrey, Emma Palmer, C. W. Pulliam, H. G. Pulliam, Annie Perkins, Fannie Powers, Mabel Pusey, Annie Poole, Mrs A. H. Raynal, Mrs. M. B. Ramos, Mrs. D. S. Redford, Mrs. L. Ramstetter, Misses Mollie Redford, Ida Robinson, Bertha Robinson, Kate Richardson, Laura Richardson, Emma Roberts, Estelle Shackleford, Emma Staude, Janie Steel, Mrs. Dr. Taylor, Misses Lena Thilow, Hattie Tinsley, Lizzie Vanlew, Mrs. E. Leslie Watson, Mrs. W. M. Wren, Mrs. J. C. Williams, Mrs. L. Weil, Mrs. S. E. Woodfin, Mrs. N. E. Worth and Miss Alice Whitcomb.

Contraltos: Misses Lizzie Adams, Kate Beckwith, Jessie Bailey, Annie Bailey, Bigelow, Clara Bethel, Mrs. B. A. Clement, Misses A. B. Carrington, Annie Calder, Calder, Maria Connor, Mrs. H. W. Greener, Mr. A. S. Gwathmey, Misses May Greener, E. Goodwin, J. R. Henning, Mrs. O. E. Jones, Mrs. Lett, Mrs. S. G. Lett, Mrs. Dr. Marcy, Mrs. J. London, Misses London, A. Martin, Martins, Cora Martin, Minnie McMahon, Zelle Minor, Mrs. F. H. Plumacher, Misses A. Pumphrey, L. Phillips, Lula Powell, Odie Perkins, A. Robinson, Mrs. F. R. Stover, Misses Minnie Taylor, Mattie Traylor and Georgie C. West.

Tenors: J. M. Brereton, C. C. Chapin, Esau Cocker, Clinton R. Carter, Alexander Cruickshank, Alvin Davis, W. S. Danforth, Jack Fergusson, Conway H. Gordon, W. S. Henning, George R. Hovey, John R. Hooper, A. B. Jones, R. E. Jones, E. J. Kemplen, J. L. Lewis, Walter Mercer, F. C. Minor, W. F. Moesta, R. L. Moody, M. V. Moon, L. P. Poole, Jannie Pleasants, F. H. Plumacher, S. S. Perkins, H. L. Reese, H. L. Reese, Jr., S. J. Reisenstein, Frank Sewell, J. J. Spilling, E. H. Spott, C. J. Schumann, D. Wherry, Fred Wells, C. D. Wilks, J. C. Williams, Jr. and E. Leslie Watson.

Basses: Frank Anthony, E. Burnett, J. Harvie Blair, Luther Bethel, Thomas Bethel, Robert Bailey, B. O. Blenner, James Calder, W. F. Crump, C. C. Crump, W. R. Clements, E. Carter, B. F. Cosby, Albert Cleversoll, R. W. Cardwell, C. W. Cardwell, J. C. Drinard, Nathan Doll, Jno. J. Finnegan, H. W. Farmer, S. C. Flemming, Scott Gibbs, Geo. D. Gaines, P. F. Greenwood, Dr. T. N. Garnett, William J. Gilman, R. R. Harrison, A. C. Harding, James Harris, Charles W. Hunter, George O. Jones, F. S. Jones, A. C. Jones, C. O. Keeh, W. A. King, Mr. Lett, M. Leitch N. S. Morton, Dr. David McCaw, Frank Morrissey, B. W. Nunnally, Charles Pollard, S. T. Pulliam, H. E. Pusey, O. D Phillips, Frank Perkins, E. W. Powers, Phil. Powers, J. E. Quarles, W. S. Quarles, J. W. Quarles, A. H. Raynal, J. M. Ryan, George Richardson, Robert Gwathmey, F. R. Stover, J. Louis Sullivan, G. H. Tompkins, W. A. Twynam, William F. Tyree, August Vanderlehr, Shepherd Webb and S. J. Young.

Commercial Louisville, Ky.

Date 5/10

[illegible] corruption of the popular vote [illegible] of Wednesday to go unwhipped.

TALK OF THE TOWN.

ARTHUR NIKISCH, Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has caused a flutter among the worshipers of the long-haired Walter Damrosch. Director Nikisch uses entirely different methods from Louisville's late ideal, and some musical people do not like his leading. A lady said during the concert: "Nikisch does not seem to have any enthusiasm in his make-up. I don't half appreciate the music with this sort of leading." Another musician said: "Nikisch really leads the orchestra; Damrosch merely made appropriate gestures as a sort of accompaniment to the music of the great orchestra, gotten together and trained by his father. Nikisch is a great leader, and controls his orchestra as if it were a single instrument in his hands."

Clipping from Commercial Louisville, K

Date 5/7

THE THEATERS.

Tomorrow night the Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its second appearance to a Louisville audience, with Arthur Nikish as director. Mr. Nikisch has only been in this country a short time. He has, however, made an excellent impression wherever he has appeared as director of the orchestra. One remarkable thing in his conducting is that he uses no score or music stand—which is a most remarkable thing to do, as all the music performed by this organization is of the heaviest kind. It is evident from the large sale of seats that the public are anxious to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra. To say the least, it is without doubt the strongest orchestral organization in America. One reason of its perfect work is the number of years its members have been playing together. The only thing to be regretted is, there is only one concert given. However, the music-loving people can be contented that the great city of Chicago will have only one concert. Mr. James B. Camp, the business manager, earnestly desires the purchasers of tickets to be in their seats by 8:15, as no one will be allowed to go down the aisles during the playing of a number.

[139]

Pittsburg Dispatch

THE MUSIC WORLD.

Programmes for the Mozarts and Boston Symphony Orchestra.

THE LATTER'S SEASON AT THE HUB.

Progress in Musical Culture as Indicated by Recent Events.

NEWS FROM POPULAR PITTSBURGERS

The most important among the many events that throng in toward the close of our musical season are the two concerts of the Mozart Club (twelfth season; fifth and sixth concerts) to be given with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on Monday and Tuesday of next week, at Old City Hall. The full programmes, now first published, are as follows:

MONDAY EVENING, MAY 19.

PART I.

Liszt.....Symphonic Poem, "Les Preludes."
Boston Symphony Orchestra; Mr. Arthur Nikisch, conductor.
Weber.....Aria, from "Der Freischuetz."
Mme. Magdalena Steinbach-Jahns.
Grieg.....Suite, "Peer Gynt," Op. 46.
a. Daybreak; b. "The Death of Aase;" c. "Anitra's Dance;" d. "In the Halls of the King of the Dovre Mountains." (The imps are chasing Peer Gynt.)
Boston Symphony Orchestra.

PART II.

Mendelssohn.....'Hymn of Praise"
The Mozart Club, Mr. James P. McCollum, conductor, assisted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Soloists: Mr. Harry B. Brockett, tenor; Mrs. Mathilde Henkler and Miss Ada Scandrett, sopranos.

TUESDAY EVENING, MAY 20.

Goldmark.....Overture, "Sakuntala"
Boston Symphony Orchestra.
Rossini—"Cujus Animam," from "Stabat Mater"
Mr. Paul Zimmerman.
Servais—"Fantasie Characteristique" for .....Violoncello
Mr. Anton Hekking.
Schuman—Symphony No. 4, in D minor, Op. 120
Introduction (Adagio non troppo).
Allegro.
Romance (Adagio non troppo).
Scherzo.
Finale (Allegro).
Boston Symphony Orchestra.
Songs with Piano.
(a) Robert Franz.....'Widmung"
(b) Rubinstein.....'Es blinkt der Thau"
(c) Schumann.....'Auftraege"
(d) Goldmark.....'Die Quelle"
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Wagner.....Overture, "Tannhaeuser"
Weber.....Hymn, "In Constant Order"
The Mozart Club, accompanied by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Soloists: Mrs. W. B. Wolfe, soprano; Miss Margaret Fraser, contralto; Mr. Paul Zimmerman, tenor; Mr. Jno. A. Strouss, tenor. Mr. James P. McCollum, conductor.

***

Of Mme. Steinbach-Jahns we are told that she began her professional career singing soubrette parts in the Opera at Frankfort-on-the-Main. She next appeared in Danzig, where her remarkable gifts attracted attention, and brought her an engagement at the Leipzig Stadt Theater. Here she soon became the leading dramatic soprano, and her career was one of extraordinary success. Among her more notable triumphs were the roles of Elsa in "Lohengrin," Senta in Flying Dutchman," Leonoveva, Eva in "Die Meistersinger," and Agathes in "Freischuetz." Since Mr. Nikisch brought her to this country to participate in the orchestra's present extended tour, the voice of our best critics has amply indorsed her growing European reputation.

The ninth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's regular concerts at Music Hall, which closed a fortnight ago, has been the most successful in its history. The new conductor, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, from Leipzig, has more than warranted his selection for this important post. He has wholly captivated the critics of the Hub, in spite of prejudices at the commencement of his work. The practical results of the season's efforts may readily be gathered from the following table from official sources:

The number who have attended the rehearsals on admission tickets at an expense of 25 cents is	20,985
Five hundred and eight season tickets for rehearsals were sold at $7 50, making the number who attended at an expense of 31¼ cents	12,192
Nine hundred and seventy-four season tickets for the evening concerts were sold at $7 50, making attendance at 31¼ cents	23,876
The number who have attended the evening concerts on admission tickets at 50 cents	3,697
Total number who have heard the orchestra at an expense of 50 cents or less	60,250
Add to this the number who bought the higher priced tickets at auction—1,423 season tickets for each series—1,423x48.	68,304
Admission and cheap season	60,250
Total attendance regular performances	128,554
Add again the number who attended the three young people's matinees (6,900) and the total number who have heard the orchestra is, by a close estimate	135,454

Think of it: Sixty thousand persons hearing the very best music performed in a manner nowhere excelled at an expense of 50 cents or less.

Those who have sneered at Mr. Higginson's wonderfully liberal patronage of the orchestra, as a fad, indulged in for the delectation of an aristocratic clique, will have hard work to find such another instance of musical evangelism for the masses.

Republic St. Louis Mo.

Date 5/8

Hamilton, Kansas City; [illegible] and Dr. C. C. Worth, Kas., S. W. Main, Springfield, Mo.

THE THEATRES.

Boston Symphony Orchestra—The Kendals—Possart—Anton Concerts.

Music lovers will be glad to be reminded of the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—70 performers under the direction of Mr. Arthur Nikisch—which takes place at Exposition Music Hall to-morrow and Saturday evenings. To the attractions of happily chosen orchestral programmes will be added solo numbers by Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, a noted Leipzic soprano, Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, the well-known pianiste, and Messrs. Franz Kneisel and Leo Schulz, violinist and cello players respectively. The Boston Orchestra is the largest musical organization that has visited this city during the season, and [illegible]

Times, Richmond, Va.

Date 5/8

THE FESTIVAL CONCERT.

First of the Festival Concerts at the Academy of Music.

The first of the two festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra occurred at the Academy of Music last night. It has been some time since so magnificent a musical organization has been heard here. The orchestra, which has given such eclat, musically, to the city of Boston, and for which that city is so largely indebted to the generosity of one its citizens, Mr. Higginson, rendered the beautiful programme which had been arranged in a manner almost beyond criticism. The orchestra is composed of splendid material, having been recruited from the very best material of this country and Europe. Their playing is remarkable for an exquisite delicacy of tone—chiefly due no doubt to the distribution of instruments; for as the orchestra was selected especially with a view to the production of symphonies, strings and wood-winds largely predominate. The instruments respond to the touch of the director like one great many-voiced, many-toned organ.

Mr. Arthur Nikisch is essentially a poetic conductor. His phrasing evinces delicacy of feeling rather than dramatic breadth. This was evident in his beautiful interpretation of the first motive of the "Euryanthe" overture, in the third movement of the Rubinstein "Bal Costume," and the saltarello of the Italian symphony.

In appearance Mr. Nikisch is rather small and delicately framed. A mass of wavy black hair falls over his [illegible] and a closely cut beard covers his chin. In conducting the orchestra he is quiet and graceful in the extreme.

Mme. Steinbach Jahns, the vocalist, sang the "Prayer from der Freishuetz" and three German lieder, the latter with a piano accompaniment by Mr. Nikisch. She is a dramatic singer of the true German school. Her voice is remarkable for purity of tone and ampleness of register. There is, however, in her singing, a lack of soul and feeling. Mme. Jahns was suffering with a slight sore throat last night, which prevented her from doing justice to the "Freischuetz" number.

The concert was a gem, and the enthusiasm with which each number was received was a just tribute to the worth of the artists. The attendance was very large and highly fashionable, almost every seat in the house being occupied.

The programme to-night will be essentially a popular one. The orchestral numbers are: The "Tannhaeuser" overture and a Grieg suite. The choral numbers are: "Unfold, ye portals" (Gounod), and "Hail, bright abode" (Wagner). Festival chorus: "Victory Song" (Abt), Gesang Verein Virginia. Mme. Jahns will sing an aria from "Tannhaeuser," and Mr. Kneisel will play one of Vieuxtemps' polonaises for the violin. The concert will begin promptly at 8 o'clock.

Clipping from Plain Dealer Cleveland O

Date 5/4

[illegible]een three schools of music.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

[illegible]cently closed its ninth season in that city [illegible]d the newspapers there agree that it was [illegible]e most successful and most satisfactory [illegible]ason of all. The total attendance at the [illegible]entyfour afternoon rehearsals, the twenty-[illegible]ur evening concerts and the three young [illegible]ople's matinees was 135,454. Mr. Arthur [illegible]eld writes in the Post:

"It has been in every way, artistically and [illegible]ancially, in and out of Boston, by far the [illegible]ost successful season of this splendid organ-[illegible]ation thus far. Naturally the first question [illegible] be asked is: 'Has Mr. Nikisch proved [illegible]mself a proper successor of Mr. Gericke?' [illegible]nd there can be no doubt, but what the whole public will gladly answer, 'Indeed [illegible]he has.'"

Mr. Nikisch has played 106 works by 48 composers; 23 Germans, 8 Frenchmen, 4 Russians, 3 Englishmen, 2 Italians, 3 Scandinavians and 5 Americans, this division being made according to the schools to which the men are habitually considered to belong, Meyerbeer for example being ranked as a Frenchman, etc. There are 16 novelties, including 6 works by 5 Americans.

The western tour of the Boston symphony orchestra, beginning with concerts in Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore and Richmond last week, will take in the following cities in order: Columbus, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Chicago, Milwaukee, Ann Arbor, Detroit, Pittsburg, Cleveland (May 21), Buffalo, Albany. The orchestra is accompanied by Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, soprano, and Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield Zersler, pianist.

The program for the Cleveland concert embraces the Schumann symphony No. 4 and several popular numbers, including the overture to "Tannhaeuser" and a scene from "Der Freischuetz." Mme. Jahns will sing three selections.

Times, Richmond, Va.

Date 5/7

A MAY MUSICAL FESTIVAL

THE MOZART ASSOCIATION'S FIRST GRAND ATTEMPT.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, the Famous Singer, the Gesang-Verein Virginia, and a Mixed Chorus of 285 Voices.

To-night will begin Richmond's first musical festival under the auspices of the Mozart Association. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the finest organization of its kind in this country, will make its debut in this city, with Mme. Steinbach-Jahns as the vocalist. This will be the symphony night. To-morrow will be chorus night, and the Gesang-Verein Virginia, sixty voices, Charles L. Siegel, conductor, and the festival chorus, 285 voices, Clarance A. Marshall, conductor, accompanied by the orchestra, will be heard. Here are the programmes for the two entertainments:

SYMPHONY NIGHT.

Overture, "Euryanthe,"
Orchestra.
Aria from "Freischutz,"
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
"Bal Costume," Rubinstein.
Ballet for Orchestra.
Songs with Piano.
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Symphony in A (Italian), Mendelssohn.
(Allegro Vivace-Andante Conmoto-Moderato-Salterello.)

CHORUS NIGHT.

Overture, "Tannhauser,"
Orchestra.
Chorus, "Unfold ye Portals,"
Festival Chorus and Orchestra.
Aria from "Tannhauser,"
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Suite, "Peer Gynt," Grieg.
Orchestra.
Male Chorus, "Siegesgesang." Abt.
Gesang-Verein Virginia.
Ballade and Polonaise for Violin, Vieuxtemps.
Mr. Kneisel.
March and Chorus, "Hail Bright Abode," Wagner.
Festival Chorus and Orchestra.

THE CONDUCTOR.

The conductor of the orchestra is that famous young Kapellmeister, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, one of the leading and most important conductors in the world. He comes from Szent-Miklos, a small town situated in the principality of Lichenstein. He is thirty-five years of age. His father occupied the position of head steward and auditor to the prince, and was himself an enthusiastic musical amateur. In earliest childhood, the boy showed such an extraordinary talent that his parents determined to educate him as a musician. He began his studies with the violin; and he mastered this instrument with such ease and so completely that, at the early age of eight, he appeared in public with most extraordinary success, —in fact the young prodigy received a genuine ovation. His first studies in harmony and organ-playing were made under the direction of the organist Prochazka, in the neighboring town of Buschtowitz; and in all branches the lad made such remarkable progress as to enable him to enter the Royal Conservatory in Vienna at the unusually early age of eleven. There he remained for eight years, and then applied for and was appointed to a desk at the Royal Opera. After that his rise was rapid. Under his care and direction the Leipzig Theatre orchestra has gained a European fame, which entitles it to an equal or even superior place to the Gewandhaus orchestra. A performance of the colossal Ninth Symphony in 1882 is said to have been the most magnificent ever given; while the superb manner in which he conducted the concerts of the last "Tonkunstler-Versammlung" in 1883 brought him a profusion of orders and decorations from all over the country. He also conducted on many occasions in the Gewandhaus as Reinecke's substitute, and has also given many remarkably successful concerts with his own theatre orchestra. More especially noteworthy, however, is the manner in which he conducted the recent monster concerts of the Liszt Society. With them, he achieved a success which caused all the noted German critics to acknowledge that Arthur Nikisch is one of the most brilliant and talented living conductors, both in the theatre and on the concert stage.

THE ORCHESTRA.

The orchestra was originally made up of the best available players of Boston and New York. Year by year it has been strengthened by the acquisition of superior performers wherever they could be found, until now it is everywhere conceded that no such company has ever been brought together. In its ranks are representatives of the leading orchestras of Vienna, Leipzig, Berlin, Paris and London. At the head of the violins, as concert master, is Franz Kneisel, who plays a solo to-morrow night, and he is supported by C. M. Loeffler, T. Adamowski, and a corps of players, every member of which is a solo artist. At the first desk of the 'celli sit Anton Hekking and Leo Schulz; on the flute and oboe will be heard Mole and Sautet, who came two years ago from the Opera Comique, Paris. Other prominent players among the wind instruments are Xaver Reiter, first horn; Pierre Muller, first trumpet, late of the Lamoureaux Orchestra, Paris, and Goldsmith, the first clarionet.

THE GESANG-VEREIN.

The Gesang-Verein Virginia will sing with the following voices, accompanied by the orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Charles M. Siegel:

First tenors: W. Ebel, Chas. Lundin, G. Loth, H. Greener, Ed. Moll, H. F. Miller, Chas. Phillips, M. F. Richter, S. Steinlein, P. Stumpf, and F. Will.

Second tenors: W. Heibig, P. Klein, H. Boltz, H. Bromm, Chas. Closs, C. Schaaf, J. Spilling, Herm. Schmidt, O. Ostergreen, O. Spott, A. Volkmann, and E. Stumpf.

First basses: M. Briel, B. Brauer, T. Ebel, F. C. Ebel, A. Hartung, Aug. Moll, G. Klein, L. Kaufmann, T. F. Koehler, C. F. Koehler, L. Bromm, M. Lindner, C. O. Loth, H. G. Miller, G. Runge and W. Zimmermann.

Second basses: W. Dietz, Chas. Ganser, G. Lohmann, Th. Keck, E. Lundin, A. Nickel, B. Haase, H. Abel, C. Dietrich, M. Schaaf, H. Schmidt, Chas. Poindexter, A. Volmer, A. Wolff and Chas. Haase.

FESTIVAL CHORUS.

The festival chorus is an amalgamation of several smaller choral societies and members of church choirs, &c. Mr. Clarance A. Marshall will conduct the numbers. The chorus is composed as follows:

Sopranos: Miss L. Arnold, Mrs. J. Harvie Blair, Mrs. C. E. Brown, Mrs. Bigelow, Misses Mary Bass, Lucy Beech, Lula Bethel, Ellie Bethel, Kate Brennam, Lily Bishop, Kate Brown, Mrs. James Calder, Mrs. W. R. Cook, Mrs. Thomas Christian, Misses Ellora Chapin, Ferdie Davison, Lula Dunstan, Mollie Drinard, M. D. Denzler, Mrs. M. B. Fillet, Misses Fannie Eaton, Kate Ebel, Lena Ebel, Louisa Ebel, Mrs. W. E. Fitzwilson, Miss Jennie Fergusson, Mrs. W. J. Gilman, Mrs. P. F. Greenwood, Misses Fannie Gwathmey, Bettie Goode, M. L. Garnett, D. Gibbs, Mrs. A. C. Harding, Misses L. G. Henning, Eva Harris, Mollie Harrison, N. I. Harrison, Josie Harris, Selina Hempf, Mrs. E. Jenkins, Mrs. R. C. Lockerman, Mrs. J. Lundin, Misses Kate Lee, Mattie Landrum, Bessie Lee, E. Latham, Mrs. Dr. Michaux, Misses Viola Minor, Annie Meyer, Ledie Martin, B. Martin, Sallie Montgomery, Bessie Nichols, Mrs. D. W. Pugh, Mrs. W. S. Quarles, Misses L. M. Quarles, E. Quarles, Ellie Pumphrey, Lizzie Pumphrey, Emma Palmer, C. W. Pulliam, H. G. Pulliam, Annie Perkins, Fannie Powers, Mabel Pusey, Annie Poole, Mrs A. H. Raynal, Mrs. M. B. Ramos, Mrs. D. S. Redford, Mrs. L. Ramstetter, Misses Mollie Redford, Ida Robinson, Bertha Robinson, Kate Richardson, Laura Richardson, Emma Roberts, Estelle Shackleford, Emma Staude, Janie Steel, Mrs. Dr. Taylor, Misses Lena Thilow, Hattie Tinsley, Lizzie Vanlew, Mrs. E. Leslie Watson, Mrs. W. M. Wren, Mrs. J. C. Williams, Mrs. L. Weil, Mrs. S. E. Woodfin, Mrs. N. S. Worth and Miss Alice Whitcomb.

Contraltos: Misses Lizzie Adams, Kate Beckwith, Jessie Bailey, Annie Bailey, Bigelow, Clara Bethel, Mrs. B. A. Clement, Misses A. B. Carrington, Annie Calder, Calder, Maria Connor, Mrs. H. W. Greener, Mr. A. S. Gwathmey, Misses May Greener, E. Goodwin, J. R. Henning, Mrs. O. E. Jones, Mrs. Lett, Mrs. S. G. Lett, Mrs. Dr. Marcy, Mrs. J. London, Misses London, A. Martin, Martins, Cora Martin, Minnie McMahon, Zelle Minor, Mrs. F. H. Plumacher, Misses A. Pumphrey, L. Phillips, Lula Powell, Odie Perkins, A. Robinson, Mrs. F. R. Stover, Misses Minnie Taylor, Mattie Traylor and Georgie C. West.

Tenors: J. M. Brereton, C. C. Chapin, Esau Cocker, Clinton R. Carter, Alexander Cruickshank, Alvin Davis, W. S. Danforth, Jack Fergusson, Conway H. Gordon, W. S. Henning, George R. Hovey, John R. Hooper, A. B. Jones, R. E. Jones, E. J. Kemplen, J. L. Lewis, Walter Mercer, F. C. Minor, W. F. Moesta, R. L. Moody, M. V. Moon, L. P. Poole, Jannie Pleasants, F. H. Plumacher, S. S. Perkins, H. L. Reese, H. L. Reese, Jr., S. J. Reisenstein, Frank Sewell, J. J. Spilling, E. H. Spott, C. J. Schumann, D. Wherry, Fred Wells, C. D. Wilks, J. C. Williams, Jr. and E. Leslie Watson.

Basses: Frank Anthony, E. Burnett, J. Harvie Blair, Luther Bethel, Thomas Bethel, Robert Bailey, B. O. Blenner, James Calder, W. F. Crump, C. C. Crump, W. R. Clements, E. Carter, B. F. Cosby, Albert Cleversoll, R. W. Cardwell, C. W. Cardwell, J. C. Drinard, Nathan Doll, Jno. J. Finnegan, H. W. Farmer, S. C. Flemming, Scott Gibbs, Geo. D. Gaines, P. F. Greenwood, Dr. T. N. Garnett, William J. Gilman, R. R. Harrison, A. C. Harding, James Harris, Charles W. Hunter, George O. Jones, F. S. Jones, A. C. Jones, C. O. Keeh, W. A. King, Mr. Lett, M. Leitch N. S. Morton, Dr. David McCaw, Frank Morrissey, B. W. Nunnally, Charles Pollard, S. T. Pulliam, H. E. Pusey, O. D Phillips, Frank Perkins, E. W. Powers, Phil. Powers, J. E. Quarles, W. S. Quarles, J. W. Quarles, A. H. Raynal, J. M. Ryan, George Richardson, Robert Gwathmey, F. R. Stover, J. Louis Sullivan, G. H. Tompkins, W. A. Twynam, William F. Tyree, August Vanderlehr, Shepherd Webb and S. J. Young.

Commercial Louisville, Ky.

Date 5/10

[illegible] corruption of the popular vote as that of Wednesday to go unwhipped.

TALK OF THE TOWN.

ARTHUR NIKISCH, Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has caused a flutter among the worshipers of the long-haired Walter Damrosch. Director Nikisch uses entirely different methods from Louisville's late ideal, and some musical people do not like his leading. A lady said during the concert: "Nikisch does not seem to have any enthusiasm in his make-up. I don't half appreciate the music with this sort of leading." Another musician said: "Nikisch really leads the orchestra; Damrosch merely made appropriate gestures as a sort of accompaniment to the music of the great orchestra, gotten together and trained by his father. Nikisch is a great leader, and controls his orchestra as if it were a single instrument in his hands."

Clipping from [illegible]

Date 5/7

THE THEATERS.

Tomorrow night the Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its second appearance to a Louisville audience, with Arthur Nikish as director. Mr. Nikisch has only been in this country a short time. He has, however, made an excellent impression wherever he has appeared as director of the orchestra. One remarkable thing in his conducting is that he uses no score or music stand—which is a most remarkable thing to do, as all the music performed by this organization is of the heaviest kind. It is evident from the large sale of seats that the public are anxious to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra. To say the least, it is without doubt the strongest orchestral organization in America. One reason of its perfect work is the number of years its members have been playing together. The only thing to be regretted is, there is only one concert given. However, the music-loving people can be contented that the great city of Chicago will have only one concert. Mr. James B. Camp, the business manager, earnestly desires the purchasers of tickets to be in their seats by 8:15, as no one will be allowed to go down the aisles during the playing of a number.

[139]

[140]

Clipping from Journal Minneapolis, MINN.

Date 5/9

JURNAL: FRIDAY EVI

NOW THE SYMPHONY

The Great Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert.

THE FULL PROGRAM OF THE EVENT

Other Doings in the Musical World—The Festival at St. Paul—Numerous Concerts.

But three days more and the greatest of American orchestras—the Boston Symphony—will make its initial appearance in Minneapolis at the University coliseum. Musically, there has never been such an organization in the Northwest before, and its coming, therefore, is a matter of unusual interest. In so far as having an essentially music-loving community, Minneapolis stands second to no other city on this continent, and it is safe to predict for the Boston ogranization a crowded house and a right royal Minneapolis welcome. The coming of the orchestra is in the nature of an experiment, and it remains for Minneapolis citizens to say, whether or no, from this out its annual visit shall be looked upon as an assured fact. New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Richmond and Cincinnati have all gone wild over the brilliant playing of the Boston orchestra, houses have been packed to the doors, and in many instances people turned away.

Herr Nikisch, the director, has carried all before him. He conducts without any score, which is in itself marvelous, and his methods of interpretation are so distinct that they convey all the meanings quite as well to the audience as to the orchestra.

Madame Steinbach-Jahns, the dramatic soprano from the Leipzig Opera House, who appears as soloist, has every where on the tour justified the praise that has preceded her. She has a fine, fresh, sympathetic and agreeable dramatic voice.

Everything is in readiness for the important event. The Coliseum, which has been in the hands of skilled workmen for several days past, never was in such excellent condition before, and the music will be heard to fine advantage. On the street, in the office, at the counting room, on the cars, every where, this concert is the one topic of conversation. Nothing has for a long time stirred society so much, and as large and fashionable and representative an audience as ever assembled in Minneapolis will grace the occasion and bid the great orchestra with Herr Nikisch and Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, welcome. The enthusiasm has spread outside of Minneapolis, for a train will come from Anoka with several hundred of her prominent citizens and return after the concert.

The orchestra leaves St. Louis tomorrow night directly after the concert by special train of four Pullman sleepers with three baggage cars, and arrives in Minneapolis Sunday evening at 7 o'clock. During their stay in town they will be quartered at the West hotel, where 74 rooms have been secured for them.

The program will be as follows.

Liszt.....Symphonic Poem, "Les Preludes"
Meyerbeer....Page's Aria from "Les Huguenots"
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Lalo.....Symphonic espagnole for violin and orchestra—Op. 21. (a) Allegro non troppo, (b.) Scherzando. (c.) Andante. (d.) Rondo.
Herr C. M. Loeffler.
Grieg.....Suite, "Peer Gynt"—Op. 46. "Day break," "The Death of Aase," "Anitra's Dance," "In the Halls of the King of the Dovre Mountains."
Songs, with piano.....(a.) Liszt—"O, Lieb." (b.) Schubert—"Du bist die Ruh." (c.) Grieg—"Hoffnung."
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Schumann.....Symphony No. 4, in D minor—Op. 120. Introduction (Adagio non troppo); Allegro; Romance (Adagio non troppo); Scherzo; Finale (Allegro).

Clipping from State Richmond Va

Date 5/22

opportunity of purchasing a cow on credit.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, composed of sixty picked men—every one of them a virtuoso—which furnishes the music for the May Festival at the Mozart Academy of Music, is the finest orchestral organisation in the United States, if not in the world to-day. The orchestra was formed in 1881 by a public-spirited citizen of Boston—Col. Higginson—with the intention of giving his native city good music at cheap prices. To his individual support alone is due the position which this band has been able to assume. Higginson was out of pocket several thousand dollars every year, but the orchestra is now self-sustaining, being in popular demand in the concert halls of New York and all the music centres of the United States. Gericke was the director for five years, but he was succeeded at the beginning of this season by Arthur Kikisch, the young Hungarian, who stood in the very front rank of conductors in Europe. He is a thoroughly educated man and his compositions have been very popular in Germany. He is a fine violin player, organist, and voice trainer.

Clipping from Leader Pittsburg - Pa

Date 5/7

MUSIC.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Coming.

Vidimar de Pachmann's Recital at Old City Hall—The Strauss Concert at the Exposition Building—Success of Pittsburg Vocalists in the East—Events of Interest to Musicians During the Coming Week.

The ninth season of the Boston Symphony orchestra's home concerts was ended last week, on which occasion Mr. Arthur Nikisch concluded his first Boston season as the director of the organization. When Mr. Nikisch took charge of the orchestra it was asserted by many people that he would not be able to maintain the position to which the orchestra had been brought by Mr. Gericke. It has also been stated that the orchestra has lost much of its wonderful precision during the last year. This statement has been fully disproved by the stamp of approval given by the music people of Boston. The attendance the past season has been larger than that of any preceding one, Mr. Arthur Nikisch has been pronounced a great conductor, and under his direction the orchestra has attained a position second to none in America, and one that will compare favorably with any similar organization in the world. During the past season of twenty-four concerts the total attendance at the regular performances was 135,454. It is entirely safe to say that no concert enterprise known in the country's musical history has ever equaled in all ways that of the ninth season of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Mr. Nikisch and his band of famous musicians are now making their annual southern and western tour and will be in Pittsburg at Old City hall for two nights, May 19 and 20. These being the date of the Mozart concerts, on Tuesday evening, the 20th, the Mozart club will sing Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," the accompaniment being rendered by the Symphony orchestra.

Clipping from Appeal Petersburg Va

Date 5/2

whatever. For ...

APPEAL.

RICHMOND MUS C FESTIVAL.

Two Magnificent Orchestral and Vocal Concerts Constitute the Attraction.

The first music festival which Richmond offers to her people, under the auspices of the Mozart Musical association, is in every respect worthy of consideration. A festival in which the Boston Symphony orchestra, a chorus of 300 voices and a noted prima donna like Mme. Steinbach-Jahns are the working forces at once takes its place in the front rank of such entertainments. It is gratifying to note, therefore, that the people of our sister city have testified their appreciating of this exceptional musical treat by an eager demand for seats, so that at the opening concert tonight the Mozart Academy promises to be crowded to its utmost limit. Petersburgers who desire to go—and no doubt there will be many—can return on the train leaving Richmond at 11:20 P. M. each night. It will be seen by reference to the advertisement that the Boston Symphony orchestra and Mme. Steinbach-Jahns monopolize the programme tonight, and that tomorrow night all the festival forces combine.

Dispatch, St. Louis, Mo.

Date 5/1

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its annual concerts at Exposition Music Hall on Friday and Saturday evenings of next week. Mr. Arthur Nikisch, whose choice as successor to Mr. Gericke has given so much satisfaction, is in charge of the orchestra. An attractive feature will be the solo artists, who will appear. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, who has not yet been heard in this country except in Boston, is a dramatic soprano who is said to possess a voice of rare beauty and great power. She comes from Leipzic, where as leading soprano of the opera, she is a supreme favorite with the public. The other soloists are Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, pianist; Mr. Franz Kneiser, violin, and Mr. Leo Schulz, violoncello.

Tickets for both concerts are now on sale at Balmer & Weber's, where programmes may be obtained.

Clipping from State Richmond - Va

Date 5/8

by Flournoy.

The matter will be before court Monday morning.

A MODEL AUDIENCE.

The People Listened and Kept Quiet Whether They Understood the Music or Not.

Whilst Richmond has as large a population of cultivated musicians and music lovers as most cities of 100,000, the Richmond audience as a whole has not always been noted for keeping quiet while classic music was being rendered. But the large and brilliant audience that attended the Festival concert at the Mozart last night was remarkably well behaved. When Arthur Nikisch rapped for his musicians to pay attention and then stood for a few moments for them to become composed the dropping of a pin could be heard. Every whisper in the audience had ceased and there was perfect quiet. And during the entire evening the audience paid the strictest attention. A member of the Music Committee of the Mozart, who was all over the house, said the perfect decorum of the audience was most gratifying. The director always knows when there is any whispering in the house, and Mr. Nikisch to-day spoke of the wrapt attention that was given to the music.

Nikisch is very quiet and dignified himself and the audience was no doubt interested in his excellent method of directing. Musicians in the audience were struck with the fact that the director conducted all the orchestral numbers with score. His ability to do this is a gift that few leaders either in this country or Europe possess.

The festival closes to night with a popular programme. The Richmond chorus and the Gesangverein will be heard; the concertmeister, Mr. Kneizel, will play a solo, Mme. Steinbach Jahns will sing, and the orchestra will give Tannhauser's overture, and other superb pieces, including "Peer Gynt," programmed, here for the first time. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is the largest band ever heard in the South.

Clipping from Journal Minneapolis, MI

Date 5/8

...sale keeping in the Hennepin county jail.

The Boston Symphony Concert.

Manager Miller having had so many inquiries in regard to the souvenir books of the Boston symphony festival concert, desires to state that they will be ready for distribution Thursday morning. The delay in issuing them was caused by not receiving certain matter from Boston. The sale of seats continues all this week, fully one-third of the monster auditorium being already sold. A telegram from Columbus last evening states that "the sale of tickets stopped at 5 o'clock, the entire house being sold at that time." The concert will begin at 8:15 sharp, and no one will be permitted to enter during the music.

nquirer, Philadelphia, Pa

Date 4/29

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Nikisch, will give its last concert for the season at the Academy of Music to-morrow evening, when a particularly attractive programme will be performed. It includes three instrumental numbers—Beethoven's Symphony No. 4, in B flat, two movements of Cowen's "Scandinavian Symphony" and the overture to "The Flying Dutchman." The vocal selections, to be sung by Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, of Leipsic, consist of the well-known soprano aria from "Der Freischutz," "Softly Sighs," with orchestra, and songs, with the piano, by Schubert, Liszt and Arthur Nikisch, the conductor of the orchestra, who will act as accompanist, an office which he is said to discharge extremely well. The Cowen Symphony, descriptive of Norwegian life and scenery, is new here and is said to be very interesting. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns is a German singer of distinction who has not yet been heard in Philadelphia.

Clipping from Herald Baltimore Md

Date 4/

...ome yesterday by an Eighty to ...

...ast Boston Symphony Concert.

Public interest in musical circles centres in the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra which takes place next Tuesday evening in the Lyceum Theatre. It is to be the last appearance of this fine orchestra. In addition to the attractions of a bright programme of sterling worth, will be the violin concerto of Mr. Adamowski and the debut of Madame Steinbach-Jahns, a German prima donna of exalted reputation in Leipsic, where she was associated with Mr. Nikisch.

Clipping from Appeal Petersburg Va

Date 5/

RICHMOND'S MUSIC FESTIVAL.

The Second and Closing Concert Given Before an Appreciative Audience.

RICHMOND, VA., May 3.—[Special.] Although the audience which attended the second and closing concert of the music festival tonight did not equal in numbers that of the preceding evening, it was yet of respectable proportions and gave ample evidence of its appreciation of the good things set before it. The respectful attention it gave every number on the programme is again to be commended.

Mr. Nikisch and his orchestra repeated their triumphs of the night before. The "Tannhæuser" overture was grandly given, especially in those parts in which the strings predominated. Beautiful was the Grieg suite "Peer Gynt" in the delicate, yet forceful treatment of all its phases. The third movement "Anitra's Dance" was a perfect gem. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns who sang the aria "O lovely halls" from "Tannhæuser" was in better voice than last night but the selection hardly gave her the same opportunities for the display of her vocal capacity as did the Weber aria in the first concert. None the less she sustained her reputation as an accomplished singer and evidently gratified the audience.

Mr. Kneisel, the violin soloist of the evening, proved himself an artist of high degree. He played a "Ballade et Polonaise" by Vieuxtemps, with great brilliancy and forcefulness.

The festival chorus, numbering about 225 voices, under the direction of Mr. Clarence A. Marshall, sang "Unfold ye portals," from "The Redemption," and "Hail, bright abode," from "Tannhæuser." Considering the lack of training, the awkward manner of their position on the stage, the absence of any contrivance that would act as a sounding board, and the fact that they were almost buried behind the orchestra, it must be conceded that they acquitted themselves creditably. The disadvantages named were so material that no positively correct judgment could be formed either as to the quantity or the quality of the forces brought into action. The "Gesangverein Virginia," conducted by Mr. Charles L. Siegel, rendered one of Abt's most ambitious compositions, "The Victory Song of the Germans," with sufficient volume and force to have gladdened the souls of the heroes in Walhalla.

It is to be hoped that the Mozart Musical Association will feel sufficiently encouraged by the artistic and financial results of this festival to repeat it next year, and more especially that it will try to keep the chorus together and in training for more effective work. The material is there, without a doubt.

Post

Clipping from Washington D

Date 1

advantage of by the Washington public. Usual prices and matinees.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra at Lincoln Hall.

THE closing concert in the series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place at Lincoln Music Hall on Wednesday evening, April 30. To the great numbers who have so much enjoyed what has been perhaps the finest series of concerts ever given in this city, the announcement of the last concert will be received with regret; while to those who have not heard Mr. Nikisch's accomplished players, it is a notice of the final opportunity to enjoy the best music, as it can be heard elsewhere only when given by the noted orchestras of Europe.

Mr. Nikisch's programme presents varied and worthy features. It will open with Schumann's B-flat symphony. Following this will be Saint-Saens' "Danse Macabre." For the closing number Mr. Nikisch has selected three movements from the brilliant and striking bal costume music by Rubinstein.

The interest of the occasion will largely center in the appearance of the principal soloist, who is to make her debut in this city. Frau Steinbach-Jahns comes to this country for the purpose of accompanying the Boston Orchestra on a trip to the West, which begins with this concert. As the distinguished and popular prima donna of the royal opera at Leipsic, Madame Jahns was associated professionally with Mr. Nikisch, and it is to his influence that her visit to this country is due.

After having appeared with the greatest success in the whole range of noted opera roles, Madame Jahn's marriage caused her definite withdrawal from the stage. She has occasionally been induced, however, to delight the Leipsic public by appearing at concerts given for the cause of benevolence. She will sing at this time an aria from Der Freischutz, and songs for piano with Mr. Nikisch's accompaniment, one of the songs being written by him. A second soloist is to be Mr. Leo Schultz, one of the talented 'cellists of the orchestra, who will play a concerto by Eckert.

The sale of tickets for this concert will begin Wednesday morning at [illegible]

[140]

Clipping from Journal Minneapolis, MINN.

Date 5/9

JURNAL: FRIDAY EVI

NOW THE SYMPHONY

The Great Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert.

THE FULL PROGRAM OF THE EVENT

Other Doings in the Musical World—The Festival at St. Paul—Numerous Concerts.

But three days more and the greatest of American orchestras—the Boston Symphony—will make its initial appearance in Minneapolis at the University coliseum. Musically, there has never been such an organization in the Northwest before, and its coming, therefore, is a matter of unusual interest. In so far as having an essentially music-loving community, Minneapolis stands second to no other city on this continent, and it is safe to predict for the Boston ogranization a crowded house and a right royal Minneapolis welcome. The coming of the orchestra is in the nature of an experiment, and it remains for Minneapolis citizens to say, whether or no, from this out its annual visit shall be looked upon as an assured fact. New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Richmond and Cincinnati have all gone wild over the brilliant playing of the Boston orchestra, houses have been packed to the doors, and in many instances people turned away.

Herr Nikisch, the director, has carried all before him. He conducts without any score, which is in itself marvelous, and his methods of interpretation are so distinct that they convey all the meanings quite as well to the audience as to the orchestra.

Madame Steinbach-Jahns, the dramatic soprano from the Leipzig Opera House, who appears as soloist, has every where on the tour justified the praise that has preceded her. She has a fine, fresh, sympathetic and agreeable dramatic voice.

Everything is in readiness for the important event. The Coliseum, which has been in the hands of skilled workmen for several days past, never was in such excellent condition before, and the music will be heard to fine advantage. On the street, in the office, at the counting room, on the cars, every where, this concert is the one topic of conversation. Nothing has for a long time stirred society so much, and as large and fashionable and representative an audience as ever assembled in Minneapolis will grace the occasion and bid the great orchestra, with Herr Nikisch and Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, welcome. The enthusiasm has spread outside of Minneapolis, for a train will come from Anoka with several hundred of her prominent citizens and return after the concert.

The orchestra leaves St. Louis tomorrow night directly after the concert by special train of four Pullman sleepers with three baggage cars, and arrives in Minneapolis Sunday evening at 7 o'clock. During their stay in town they will be quartered at the West hotel, where 74 rooms have been secured for them.

The program will be as follows.

Liszt.....Symphonic Poem, "Les Preludes"
Meyerbeer....Page's Aria from "Les Huguenots"
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Lalo.....Symphonic espagnole for violin and orchestra—Op. 21. (a) Allegro non troppo, (b.) Scherzando. (c.) Andante. (d.) Rondo.
Herr C. M. Loeffler.
Grieg.....Suite, "Peer Gynt" —Op. 46. "Day break," "The Death of Aase," "Anitra's Dance," "In the Halls of the King of the Dovre Mountains."
Songs, with piano.....(a.) Liszt—"O Lieb." (b.) Schubert—"Du bist die Ruh." (c.) Grieg—"Hoffnung."
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Schumann.....Symphony No. 4, in D minor—Op. 120. Introduction (Adagio non troppo); Allegro; Romance (Adagio non troppo); Scherzo; Finale (Allegro).

Clipping from State
Richmond Va
Date 4/22

opportunity of purchasing a cow on credit.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, composed of sixty picked men—every one of them a virtuoso—which furnishes the music for the May Festival at the Mozart Academy of Music, is the finest orchestral organisation in the United States, if not in the world to-day. The orchestra was formed in 1881 by a public-spirited citizen of Boston—Col. Higginson—with the intention of giving his native city good music at cheap prices. To his individual support alone is due the position which this band has been able to assume. Higginson was out of pocket several thousand dollars every year, but the orchestra is now self-sustaining, being in popular demand in the concert halls of New York and all the music centres of the United States. Gericke was the director for five years, but he was succeeded at the beginning of this season by Arthur Kikisch, the young Hungarian, who stood in the very front rank of conductors in Europe. He is a thoroughly educated man and his compositions have been very popular in Germany. He is a fine violin player, organist, and voice trainer.

Clipping from Leader
Pittsburg Pa
Date 5/14

MUSIC.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Coming.

Vidimar de Pachmann's Recital at Old City Hall—The Strauss Concert at the Exposition Building—Success of Pittsburg Vocalists in the East—Events of Interest to Musicians During the Coming Week.

The ninth season of the Boston Symphony orchestra's home concerts was ended last week, on which occasion Mr. Arthur Nikisch concluded his first Boston season as the director of the organization. When Mr. Nikisch took charge of the orchestra it was asserted by many people that he would not be able to maintain the position to which the orchestra had been brought by Mr. Geriske. It has also been stated that the orchestra has lost much of its wonderful precision during the last year. This statement has been fully disproved by the stamp of approval given by the music people of Boston. The attendance the past season has been larger than that of any preceding one, Mr. Arthur Nikisch has been pronounced a great conductor, and under his direction the orchestra has attained a position second to none in America, and one that will compare favorably with any similar organization in the world. During the past season of twenty-four concerts the total attendance at the regular performances was 135,454. It is entirely safe to say that no concert enterprise known in the country's musical history has ever equaled in all ways that of the ninth season of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Mr. Nikisch and his band of famous musicians are now making their annual southern and western tour and will be in Pittsburg at Old City hall for two nights, May 19 and 20. These being the date of the Mozart concerts, on Tuesday evening, the 20th, the Mozart club will sing Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," the accompaniment being rendered by the Symphony orchestra.

Clipping from Appeal
Petersburg Va
Date 5/12

whatever. For APPEAL.

RICHMOND MUS C FESTIVAL.

Two Magnificent Orchestral and Vocal Concerts Constitute the Attraction.

The first music festival which Richmond offers to her people, under the auspices of the Mozart Musical association, is in every respect worthy of consideration. A festival in which the Boston Symphony orchestra, a chorus of 225 voices and a noted prima donna like Mme. Steinbach-Jahns are the working forces at once takes its place in the front rank of such entertainments. It is gratifying to note, therefore, that the people of our sister city have testified their appreciating of this exceptional musical treat by an eager demand for seats, so that at the opening concert tonight the Mozart Academy promises to be crowded to its utmost limit. Petersburgers who desire to go—and no doubt there will be many—can return on the train leaving Richmond at 11:20 P. M. each night. It will be seen by reference to the advertisement that the Boston Symphony orchestra and Mme. Steinbach-Jahns monopolize the programme tonight, and that tomorrow night all the festival forces combine.

Dispatch, St. Louis, Mo.
Date 5/11

their previous high reputation.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its annual concerts at Exposition Music Hall on Friday and Saturday evenings of next week. Mr. Arthur Nikisch, whose choice as successor to Mr. Gericke has given so much satisfaction, is in charge of the orchestra. An attractive feature will be the solo artists, who will appear. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, who has not yet been heard in this country except in Boston, is a dramatic soprano who is said to possess a voice of rare beauty and great power. She comes from Leipzic, where as leading soprano of the opera, she is a supreme favorite with the public. The other soloists are Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, pianist; Mr. Franz Kneiser, violin, and Mr. Leo Schulz, violoncello.

Tickets for both concerts are now on sale at Balmer & Weber's, where programmes may be obtained.

Clipping from State
Richmond Va
Date 5/8

by Flournoy.

The matter will be before court Monday morning.

A MODEL AUDIENCE.

The People Listened and Kept Quiet Whether They Understood the Music or Not.

Whilst Richmond has as large a population of cultivated musicians and music lovers as most cities of 100,000, the Richmond audience as a whole has not always been noted for keeping quiet while classic music was being rendered. But the large and brilliant audience that attended the Festival concert at the Mozart last night was remarkably well behaved. When Arthur Nikisch rapped for his musicians to pay attention and then stood for a few moments for them to become composed the dropping of a pin could be heard. Every whisper in the audience had ceased and there was perfect quiet. And during the entire evening the audience paid the strictest attention. A member of the Music Committee of the Mozart, who was all over the house, said the perfect decorum of the audience was most gratifying. The director always knows when there is any whispering in the house, and Mr. Nikisch to-day spoke of the wrapt attention that was given to the music.

Nikisch is very quiet and dignified himself and the audience was no doubt interested in his excellent method of directing. Musicians in the audience were struck with the fact that the director conducted all the orchestral numbers with score. His ability to do this is a gift that few leaders either in this country or Europe possess.

The festival closes to night with a popular programme. The Richmond chorus and the Gesangverein will be heard; the concertmeister, Mr. Kneizel, will play a solo, Mme. Steinbach Jahns will sing, and the orchestra will give Tannhauser's overture, and other superb pieces, including "Peer Gynt," programmed, here for the first time. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is the largest band ever heard in the South.

Clipping from Journal Minneapolis, MI
Date 5/7

for safe keeping in the Hennepin county jail.

The Boston Symphony Concert.

Manager Miller having had so many inquiries in regard to the souvenir books of the Boston symphony festival concert, desires to state that they will be ready for distribution Thursday morning. The delay in issuing them was caused by not receiving certain matter from Boston. The sale of seats continues all this week, fully one-third of the monster auditorium being already sold. A telegram from Columbus last evening states that "the sale of tickets stopped at 5 o'clock, the entire house being sold at that time." The concert will begin at 8:15 sharp, and no one will be permitted to enter during the music.

Inquirer Philadelphia, Pa
Date 4/27

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Nikisch, will give its last concert for the season at the Academy of Music to-morrow evening, when a particularly attractive programme will be performed. It includes three instrumental numbers—Beethoven's Symphony No. 4, in B flat, two movements of Cowen's "Scandinavian Symphony" and the overture to "The Flying Dutchman." The vocal selections, to be sung by Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, of Leipsic, consist of the well-known soprano aria from "Der Freischutz," "Softly Sighs," with orchestra, and songs, with the piano, by Schubert, Liszt and Arthur Nikisch, the conductor of the orchestra, who will act as accompanist, an office which he is said to discharge extremely well. The Cowen Symphony, descriptive of Norwegian life and scenery, is new here and is said to be very interesting. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns is a German singer of distinction who has not yet been heard in Philadelphia.

Clipping from Herald
Baltimore Md
Date 4/21

Last Boston Symphony Concert.

Public interest in musical circles centres in the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra which takes place next Tuesday evening at the Lyceum Theatre. It is to be the last appearance of this fine orchestra. In addition to the attractions of a bright programme of sterling worth, will be the violin concerto of Mr. Adamowski and the debut of Madame Steinbach-Jahns, a German prima donna of exalted reputation in Leipsic, where she was associated with Mr. Nikisch.

Clipping from Appeal
Petersburg Va
Date 5/6

RICHMOND'S MUSIC FESTIVAL.

The Second and Closing Concert Given Before an Appreciative Audience.

RICHMOND, VA., May 8.—[Special.] Although the audience which attended the second and closing concert of the music festival tonight did not equal in numbers that of the preceding evening, it was yet of respectable proportions and gave ample evidence of its appreciation of the good things set before it. The respectful attention it gave every number on the programme is again to be commended.

Mr. Nikisch and his orchestra repeated their triumphs of the night before. The "Tannhæuser" overture was grandly given, especially in those parts in which the strings predominated. Beautiful was the Grieg suite "Peer Gynt" in the delicate, yet forceful treatment of all its phases. The third movement "Anitra's Dance" was a perfect gem. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns who sang the aria "O lovely halls" from "Tannhæuser" was in better voice than last night but the selection hardly gave her the same opportunities for the display of her vocal capacity as did the Weber aria in the first concert. None the less she sustained her reputation as an accomplished singer and evidently gratified the audience.

Mr. Kneisel, the violin soloist of the evening, proved himself an artist of high degree. He played a "Ballade et Polonaise" by Vieuxtemps, with great brilliancy and forcefulness.

The festival chorus, numbering about 225 voices, under the direction of Mr. Clarence A. Marshall, sang "Unfold ye portals," from "The Redemption," and "Hail, bright abode," from "Tannhæuser." Considering the lack of training, the awkward manner of their position on the stage, the absence of any contrivance that would act as a sounding board, and the fact that they were almost buried behind the orchestra, it must be conceded that they acquitted themselves creditably. The disadvantages named were so material that no positively correct judgment could be formed either as to the quantity or the quality of the forces brought into action. The "Gesangverein Virginia," conducted by Mr. Charles L. Siegel, rendered one of Abt's most ambitious compositions, "The Victory Song of the Germans," with sufficient volume and force to have gladdened the souls of the heroes in Walhalla.

It is to be hoped that the Mozart Musical Association will feel sufficiently encouraged by the artistic and financial results of this festival to repeat it next year, and more especially that it will try to keep the chorus together and in training for more effective work. The material is there, without a doubt.

Post
Clipping from Washington D C
Date 1

advantage of by the Washington public. Usual prices and matinees.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra at Lincoln Hall.

THE closing concert in the series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place at Lincoln Music Hall on Wednesday evening, April 30. To the great numbers who have so much enjoyed what has been perhaps the finest series of concerts ever given in this city, the announcement of the last concert will be received with regret; while to those who have not heard Mr. Nikisch's accomplished players, it is a notice of the final opportunity to enjoy the best music, as it can be heard elsewhere only when given by the noted orchestras of Europe.

Mr. Nikisch's programme presents varied and worthy features. It will open with Schumann's B-flat symphony. Following this will be Saint-Saens' "Danse Macabre." For the closing number Mr. Nikisch has selected three movements from the brilliant and striking bal costume music by Rubinstein.

The interest of the occasion will largely center in the appearance of the principal soloist, who is to make her debut in this city. Frau Steinbach-Jahns comes to this country for the purpose of accompanying the Boston Orchestra on a trip to the West, which begins with this concert. As the distinguished and popular prima donna of the royal opera at Leipsic, Madame Jahns was associated professionally with Mr. Nikisch, and it is to his influence that her visit to this country is due.

After having appeared with the greatest success in the whole range of noted opera roles, Madame Jahn's marriage caused her definite withdrawal from the stage. She has occasionally been induced, however, to delight the Leipsic public by appearing at concerts given for the cause of benevolence. She will sing at this time an aria from Der Freischutz, and songs for piano with Mr. Nikisch's accompaniment, one of the songs being written by him. A second soloist is to be Mr. Leo Schultz, one of the talented 'cellists of the orchestra, who will play a concerto by Eckert.

The sale of tickets for this concert will begin Wednesday morning at J. F. Ellis & Co's.

[141]

Clipping from State
Richmond Va
Date 5/

Virginia will have more fine music in May than usual. The two festival concerts at the Mozart this week will introduce us to the largest and best drilled orchestra in America, the Boston Symphony, and to Madame Steinbach-Jahns, the [illegible] matic soprano, just arrived from Europe. And beginning May 26th, Petersburg will have a week of splendid music. The Petersburg orchestra will be greatly improved this season. Forty performers instead of thirty-two as formerly, and a better class of musicians have been engaged. We have glanced over the programme of the Petersburg Festival, and it seems to be the most varied and brilliant yet presented. Richard Burmeister, of Baltimore, will be the piano soloist; Olive Mead will be the violinist, and Fred Lax, formerly the virtuoso of Gilmore's band, will be the flute soloist. There will be seven performances in all, winding up Friday night, May 30th, with Mendelssohn's oratorio, Elijah.

Clipping from
Call
Phil-Pa
Date 5/25

effect.

Last Symphony Concert.

Mr. Nikisch has prepared an excellent program for the last Symphony Concert, which will occur on Monday evening at the Academy of Music. The splendid orchestra will be heard in Beethoven's fourth sympathy, two movements from Cowen's Scandinavian symphony and the overture to Wagner's "The Flying Dutchman." Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, a prima donna from the Royal Opera, Leipsic, will sing an aria by Mozart and songs by Liszt, Schubert and Grieg.

Clipping from
Herald
Milwaukee Wis
Date 5/

war which the [illegible]

AMUSEMENTS

The well-known Boston Symphony orchestra will give a single concert, at the Academy, on Thursday, May 15. There are seventy performers in the organization with Mme. Steinbach-Jahns as soprano, and Arthur Nikish, conductor. It will be a notable musical event.

Clipping from Gazette, Cincinnati, Ohio
Date 5/26

Conductor Henry Froehlich, Librarian, Secretary

Boston Symphony Concert.—The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra takes place at the Odeon this evening, and that it will be a musical event of unusual musical interest is pretty well understood. The remarkable success of the organization wherever it has appeared this season should be a sufficient guarantee that Cincinnati will also generously incline her ear to the delightful strains of this thoroughly well-[illegible] orchestra.

Union, Manchester, N.H.
Date 5/28

Symphony Concert Season Closed.

The Symphony concert season closed last evening. It has proved highly successful, and already musical Boston is looking eagerly forward to the next, which will also be conducted by Mr. Nickish. At the close of the concert last evening that gentleman was enthusiastically applauded and presented with a laurel wreath. Mr. Nickish will pass the summer with his family in Germany, and will return to this city in the early fall, to prepare for the symphony season which begins in October.

Clipping from
Times-Star, Cincinnati, OHIO

"I think the Boston Symphony orchestra the best in America," said Lew. Ballenberg. "Thanks to the liberality of a Boston gentleman, they have been able to follow art for the sake of art."

Clipping from
Herald, Rutland, Vt.
Date 5/22

The Boston symphony orchestra of 7[illegible] performers will give a concert in Albany on Friday evening.

Clipping No.
Clipping from Courier
Buffalo N.Y.
Date 5/

—Mr. Ellis of the Boston Symphony Orchestra says that the concert to be given in Buffalo on Thursday, the 22d, will not fail to satisfy musicians and musical people.

Tribune, New York, City.
Date 5/26

CINCINNATI FESTIVAL ENDED.

THE MOST SUCCESSFUL FINANCIALLY IN YEARS.

SHORTCOMINGS OF THE CHOIR—POPULAR GOODWILL TOWARD MR. THOMAS—TWO CONCERTS ON THE CLOSING DAY.

[BY TELEGRAPH TO THE TRIBUNE.]

Cincinnati, May 24.—The ninth music festival came to an end last night. In many respects it has been all that was expected. First and foremost, it has proved the most successful meeting financially held for many years; and in this community such an outcome would cover a greater multitude of sins than the musical forces have had recorded against them. Secondly, it has been a most delightful and amiable affair from a social point of view. The cares of business have been forgotten, and the people of the city and adjacent towns have culled out a holiday and strewed flowers, metaphorically and literally, in the way of Mr. Thomas. They were also persuaded that great things have been done in artistic guise. And so there have; but if those who sit in the front seats of judgment here are ever called on to show wherein musical culture has been promoted by this week of music, it is to be feared that the real gain will be difficult to discover. Compared with some of the festivals of the past, the result will be a minus quantity. In these days of itinerant orchestras and peripatetic vocalists, it is the choir which gives a festival significance. Instrument artists and solo singers can be hired by any community that wishes to hire them. Indeed, they need not be hired; they will come on their own responsibility. The circumstance that an orchestra numbers 120 instead of seventy is nothing to the purpose. Other things being equal, the smaller band in the smaller hall will produce the better effect. Of course the peculiar susceptibility which springs from the pleasurable excitement of the occasion is to be set down on the credit side of the account-book; but even here there is also a debit when that enthusiasm runs out in indiscriminate laudation of everything good, bad and indifferent. Compared with her past achievements in the department of choral culture, Cincinnati has little or nothing to boast of in this instance.

The fault lies in several directions, but chiefly in the attitude of the directors and the newspapers toward the festival. The choir singers have done their best, but their best is not up to the standard of what has been, might be and ought to be. Yet the prestige of the Cincinnati festival demanded that that standard should be reached. If the festival directors had heard a Washington critic declare that the choir of the festival to be held in Petersburg, Va., was superior to the proud Cincinnati organization they would not have believed it, and the choristers under similar circumstances would have become incensed. Petersburg is a small Southern town and far away; but Indianapolis is near at hand, and a week ago all the directors might have heard a better choir there. Chicago has a better choir, Boston has a better choir, Providence has a better choir, Worcester has a better choir, New-York has a better choir, Philadelphia can organize a better choir on a few weeks' notice. One might think that if the directors and singers were indisposed to seek a standard of judgment for present work in their own past, they would not have far to go to find another.

The work of Mr. Thomas and his band has been splendid and inspiriting, and the list of works performed has shown unswerving devotion to the loftiest and most comprehensive ideal ever set in this country. But what boots all this in a choral festival unless the singing of the choir be on the same plane? Cincinnati has a glorious tradition to maintain, and though she has done better this year than she did two years ago, she has not maintained it. Shall the symbol of her supremacy pass into the hands of Petersburg or Worcester? It is within the reach of either. And all of Mr. Thomas's instrumental legions will not be able to keep it in the hands of the Queen City.

Two concerts were given yesterday. Miss DeVere sang brilliantly two of her most effective airs this afternoon, and Mr. Fischer sang the buffo air from "Don Giovanni," and the romance from "Tannhaeuser." The chief orchestral number was Schubert's great symphony in C. In the evening Verdi's "Requiem" was performed. Beethoven's Seventh Symphony was played. Mr. Lloyd (who was associated with Miss DeVere, Miss Winant and Mr. Fischer in the solo work of the "Requiem") sang Eleazar's air in "La Juive," and all came to an end with the Hallelujah from "The Messiah."

The receipts have been about $47,000; the expenditures in the neighborhood of $39,000. The receipts are nearly three times as large as those of the recent Handel and Haydn Festival in Boston, and the expenditures about two and a half. But Boston had its own orchestra, and gave only four concerts, while Cincinnati imported a hundred instrumentalists from New-York, and gave seven concerts. H. E.

Argus-Albany, N. Y.
Date 5/24

[illegible] siderable interest regarding the valedictorian, and salutatorian, will probably be announced next week.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

A Notable Musical Event at Harmanus Bleecker Hall.

An orchestra of sixty artists, trained to a standard of perfection such as has never before been attained in this country, moved by one impulse, breathing the same spirit, giving every phase of expression, every shade of instrumental color, every delicate effect that the most exacting could demand, marvellous in mighty climaxes, as well as in scarcely whispered pianissimi, responsive to the slightest indication of an exceptionally gifted conductor, and revealing in each work on the programme new and delightful traits of excellence—such was the musical treat enjoyed by a large audience in Harmanus Bleecker hall last night. The playing of this unequalled organization was a revelation. The quality as well as the admirable balance of tone, seemed to present the works in an entirely new light. The grand symphonic poem by Liszt, "Les Preludes," was endorsed with far more significant meaning than it was given by Thomas. The marvellous power, the warmth of tone, the unanimity of expression of the strings in the Allegro tempestuoso was something to be long remembered, while the declamatory passages for the basses, in the finale, were delivered with sonorous effect. Whatever charge may be brought against Liszt's other works, on the score of artificiality, it cannot hold against his superb setting of Lamartine's sublime passages. And such an interpretation as it received from the Boston Symphony orchestra brought out its beauties, its kaleidoscopic treatment of the two main themes, in the strongest relief.

The suite of Grieg, "Peer Gynt," which was the second orchestral number on the programme, was a specimen of pure Scandinavian music, as unlike the confusing and restless methods of the German and Russian schools of the present day as Ibsen's dramatic poem differs in spirit and treatment from those of other countries. Nothing could be more charming than the artless beauty of the opening movement; nothing more ingenious and effective than the diablerie and grotesqueness of the last. The folk music coloring of the north gave a distinctive character to every portion of the work. The funeral march in this suite was one that might be said in complete accord with the Ibsen description of the wanderer's mother. The pianissimi passages at the close were distinct, but so delicate that one might say there was nothing between them and silence. The mazurka was a dainty little gem, to which Titania, as well as the Sheik's daughter, might dance. The sparkling little themes given by the muted strings, the pizzicato accompaniment and the accented effect of the triangle, gave the mazurka a charm of its own. The grotesque march that concluded the suite was re-demanded by a vociferous encore. And well it might be, for it was a wonderful specimen of instrumental effect and it was played to perfection.

The immortal Fifth Symphony of Beethoven was a fitting conclusion of the programme. It served to exhibit new traits of artistic excellence in the orchestra. Mr. Arthur Nikisch, the conductor, has been severely censured in some quarters for what was called the unwarrantable liberties he took with the tempi in his work. Such censure is undeserved. There has been of late years a palpable departure on the part of representative conductors from strict traditions and conventional readings of classical works. They are inclined to give a broader scope to interpretation. As long as this does not degenerate into unbridled license, but possesses in every respect the spirit of the work, there can be no just censure. The beginning of the Scherzo, or third movement, was taken at a slower tempo than usual, and, as the movement proceeded, there seemed to be a gradual accelerando. The effect was very marked, and however it might be questioned by the stern guardians of tradition, it was by no means of a character to mar the symmetry of the work.

Mr. Nikisch is a model conductor, calm, dignified and devoid of the pantomimic mannerisms which frequently attract the attention of the audience to the wielder of the baton rather than to the band itself. He conducts without notes, and however sparing he may be of gesticulations, his eloquent countenance conveys all the necessary deviations to his men. Mr. T. Adamowski, the violinist, a member of the orchestra, played two movements from Saint Saens' concerto in B minor. The second, a brilliant polacca, was the most taking. It was given with exceeding dash and brilliancy. Mr. Adamowski's tone is small, but refined and clear, and he is a master of all the sensational effects of his school. The vocalist of the occasion was Madame Steinbach-Jahns, a soprano from Leipsic. Whatever her success in opera in the past may have been, it is very certain that her voice at present is not calculated to make her even tolerable in the concert hall. Her voice is hard, coarse and expressionless. In the three lieder, which she sang in the second part of the programme; there was more pleasure in listening to the exquisite piano accompaniment of Mr. Nikisch than to the singer. The audience would have been far better pleased had the orchestra been substituted for Madame Steinbach-Jahns on the programme. It is to be sincerely hoped that this magnificent organization will be heard more than once at Harmanus Bleecker hall next season. Albany now knows the artistic value of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and will always extend them a hearty welcome and the most liberal patronage.

Commercial, Buffalo, N.
Date 5/2[illegible]

THE BU[illegible]

HERR ARTHUR NIKISCH

nd his Orchestra Give a Brilliant Concert at Music Hall.

Buffalo's musical season is generally osed by the justly celebrated Boston ymphony Orchestra, when it makes a stop ere on its return to "The Hub" after its Western trip, and the pleasure of these conerts is anticipated a long time ahead, and he hopes, be they never so high, of a most njoyable and satisfactory evening, are always fully realized.

Heretofore the Symphony Orchestra has een heard under the baton of Mr. Gerricke, ut last fall he was succeeded by Mr. rthur Nikisch, who found the orchestra n such a finished state as to make it equal o any and superior to the majority of uropean orchestras. Under Georg Henchel the orchestra made an excellent beginning, he laying a magnificent foundation, Mr. Gerricke succeeding him, carried on the work of building a grand superstructure, and that Mr. Nikisch will maintain the high standard of excellence attained is made manifest by the perfect rendition of such a program as was listened to last evening. Mr. Nikisch is a musician through and through, conducts without the score before him, and one watching him closely feels as if the music was coming out of the end of his baton, but that is the "magic wand" that brings forth the lovely strains from a corps of seventy or more members of the orchestra, each one of whom is an artist of high standing, as none other will be accepted.

The concert opened with the Liszt Symphonic Poem "Les Preludes," which created great enthusiasm among the large and attentive audience present. In one of the passages of the beautiful composition the strings play in rapid tempo, and the effect is marvelously-like a veritable whirlwind. The superb D minor symphony by Schumann was the next number for orchestra alone, and the interpretation was grand; one is accustomed to pauses between the movements of a symphony, but not so with this, indeed could not be, as the connection between them is so close, as to make pauses an impossibility, and the effect is that of a single composition. The "Salauntala" overture by Goldmark was played with spirit and refinement. The whole performance led to the conclusion that an orchestra could not be more perfectly under the control of the conductor.

Mme. Steinbach-Jahns was the soprano soloist. She sang the aria from the "Freischuetz," in an artistic and pleasing manner receiving the just approval of the audience. Later on Mme. Steinbach-Jahns sang Rubenstein's "Es blinkt der Thau;" Nikisch's "Sehnsucht" and Goldmark's "Die Quelle," and responded to an encore with a Brahm song. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns has a pleasing voice and manner and her singing is satisfactory, and to the majority it was an agreeable surprise, as she is not well known in this country.

Mr. Anton Hekking's violoncello solo was a rare treat, the two movements from Saint-Saens concerto in A minor, being superbly rendered, and Mr. Hekking is undoubtedly one of the best 'cellists in the United States. The instrument used last evening had somewhat of a muffled sound, however, and many of the softer and most beautiful passages in the concerto could not be heard by those not more than 15 or 20 rows back from the stage. The orchestral accompaniment in this work, as well as in the aria from the "Freischutz," and alike Mr. Nikisch's piano accompaniment, are deserving of the highest praise.

[illegible]
Times Buffalo, N. Y.
Date 5/23

[illegible] nois will be headquarters and Association [illegible] all the place of meeting.

The Symphony Concert.

The greatest musical treat of the season was the concert given at Music hall last evening by the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first number on the programme, Liszt's symphonic poem "Les Preludes," was delightful, and one was borne away over fragrant fields with the humming of bees, birds and tropical life, through grassy glades and sylvan dells, and on over the blue ocean where the storm raged in all its fury, up the mountain, far up to the very top and then off again floating away to fields Elysian while below the thunder storm peals and flashes in all its majestic beauty. Conductor Arthur Nikisch had scarcely time to bow his acknowledgements to the applause which greeted this number when Mme Steinbach-Jahns, queenly in form and stage presence, came tripping before the footlights. Her first song won every heart and she was accorded three enthusiastic recalls. Her voice is correct in pitch, rich and pure in quality and tone and she sings with ease and fine expression. Mr. Hekking is undoubtedly the best 'cello player in this country and his number last evening proved one of the most delightful features of the programme. Mr. Nikisch is one of the most accomplished conductors of his time. He controls his orchestra like a general at the head of an army. Such discipline, precision, exactness in every detail is seldom seen in so large an organization. The orchestra left this morning for Albany where a final concert will be given and then the organization will go direct to

[141]

Clipping from State
Richmond Va
Date 5/

...singular interest.

Virginia will have more fine music in May than usual. The two festival concerts at the Mozart this week will introduce us to the largest and best drilled orchestra in America, the Boston Symphony, and to Madame Steinbach-Jahns, the ... matic soprano, just arrived from Europe. And beginning May 26th, Petersburg will have a week of splendid music. The Petersburg orchestra will be greatly improved this season. Forty performers in-instead of thirty-two as formerly, and a better class of musicians have been engaged. We have glanced over the programme of the Petersburg Festival, and it seems to be the most varied and brilliant yet presented. Richard Burmeister, of Baltimore, will be the piano soloist; Olive Mead will be the violinist, and Fred Lax, formerly the virtuoso of Gilmore's band, will be the flute soloist. There will be seven performances in all, winding up Friday night, May 30th, with Mendelssohn's oratorio, Elijah.

Clipping from Call
Chicago
Date 5/25

...effects.

Last Symphony Concert.

Mr. Nikisch has prepared an excellent program for the last Symphony Concert, which will occur on Monday evening at the Academy of Music. The splendid orchestra will be heard in Beethoven's fourth symphony, two movements from Cowen's Scandinavian symphony and the overture to Wagner's "The Flying Dutchman." Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, a prima donna from the Royal Opera, Leipsic, will sing an aria by Mozart and songs by Liszt, Schubert and Grieg.

Clipping from News
Milwaukee Wis
Date 5/24

...their they will regret having waged the war which they have.

AMUSEMENTS

The well-known Boston Symphony orchestra will give a single concert, at the Academy, on Thursday, May 15. There are seventy performers in the organization with Mme. Steinbach-Jahns as soprano, and Arthur Nikish, conductor. It will be a notable musical event.

Clipping from Gazette, Cincinnati, Ohio
Date 5/

...ond. Conductor, Henry Froehlich; Librarian, ...

Boston Symphony Concert.—The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra takes place at the Odeon this evening, and that it will be a musical event of unusual musical interest is pretty well understood. The remarkable success of the organization wherever it has appeared this season should be a sufficient guarantee that Cincinnati will also generously incline her ear to the delightful strains of this thoroughly well-... orchestra.

Union, Manchester, N.H.
Date 5/25

Symphony Concert Season Closed.

The Symphony concert season closed last evening. It has proved highly successful, and already musical Boston is looking eagerly forward to the next, which will also be conducted by Mr. Nickish. At the close of the concert last evening that gentleman was enthusiastically applauded and presented with a laurel wreath. Mr. Nickish will pass the summer with his family in Germany, and will return to this city in the early fall, to prepare for the symphony season which begins in October.

Clipping from
Times-Star, Cincinnati, OHIO

"I think the Boston Symphony orchestra the best in America," said Lew. Ballenberg. "Thanks to the liberality of a Boston gentleman, they have been able to follow art for the sake of art."

Clipping from
Herald, Rutland, Vt.
Date 5/22

The Boston symphony orchestra of 70 performers will give a concert in Albany on Friday evening.

Clipping No.
Clipping from Courier
Buffalo N.Y.
Date 5/

—Mr. Ellis of the Boston Symphony Orchestra says that the concert to be given in Buffalo on Thursday, the 22d, will not fail to satisfy musicians and musical people.

Tribune, New York City.
Date 5/26

CINCINNATI FESTIVAL ENDED.

THE MOST SUCCESSFUL FINANCIALLY IN YEARS.

SHORTCOMINGS OF THE CHOIR—POPULAR GOODWILL TOWARD MR. THOMAS—TWO CONCERTS ON THE CLOSING DAY.

[BY TELEGRAPH TO THE TRIBUNE.]

Cincinnati, May 24.—The ninth music festival came to an end last night. In many respects it has been all that was expected. First and foremost, it has proved the most successful meeting financially held for many years; and in this community such an outcome would cover a greater multitude of sins than the musical forces have had recorded against them. Secondly, it has been a most delightful and amiable affair from a social point of view. The cares of business have been forgotten, and the people of the city and adjacent towns have culled out a holiday and strewed flowers, metaphorically and literally, in the way of Mr. Thomas. They were also persuaded that great things have been done in artistic guise. And so there have; but if those who sit in the front seats of judgment here are ever called on to show wherein musical culture has been promoted by this week of music, it is to be feared that the real gain will be difficult to discover. Compared with some of the festivals of the past, the result will be a minus quantity. In these days of itinerant orchestras and peripatetic vocalists, it is the choir which gives a festival significance. Instrument artists and solo singers can be hired by any community that wishes to hire them. Indeed, they need not be hired; they will come on their own responsibility. The circumstance that an orchestra numbers 120 instead of seventy is nothing to the purpose. Other things being equal, the smaller band in the smaller hall will produce the better effect. Of course the peculiar susceptibility which springs from the pleasurable excitement of the occasion is to be set down on the credit side of the account-book; but even here there is also a debit when that enthusiasm runs out in indiscriminate laudation of everything good, bad and indifferent. Compared with her past achievements in the department of choral culture, Cincinnati has little or nothing to boast of in this instance.

The fault lies in several directions, but chiefly in the attitude of the directors and the newspapers toward the festival. The choir singers have done their best, but their best is not up to the standard of what has been, might be and ought to be. Yet the prestige of the Cincinnati festival demanded that that standard should be reached. If the festival directors had heard a Washington critic declare that the choir of the festival to be held in Petersburg, Va., was superior to the proud Cincinnati organization they would not have believed it, and the choristers under similar circumstances would have become incensed. Petersburg is a small Southern town and far away; but Indianapolis is near at hand, and a week ago all the directors might have heard a better choir there. Chicago has a better choir, Boston has a better choir, Providence has a better choir, Worcester has a better choir, New-York has a better choir, Philadelphia can organize a better choir on a few weeks' notice. One might think that if the directors and singers were indisposed to seek a standard of judgment for present work in their own past, they would not have far to go to find another.

The work of Mr. Thomas and his band has been splendid and inspiriting, and the list of works performed has shown unswerving devotion to the loftiest and most comprehensive ideal ever set in this country. But what boots all this in a choral festival unless the singing of the choir be on the same plane? Cincinnati has a glorious tradition to maintain, and though she has done better this year than she did two years ago, she has not maintained it. Shall the symbol of her supremacy pass into the hands of Petersburg or Worcester? It is within the reach of either. And all of Mr. Thomas's instrumental legions will not be able to keep it in the hands of the Queen City.

Two concerts were given yesterday. Miss DeVere sang brilliantly two of her most effective airs this afternoon, and Mr. Fischer sang the buffo air from "Don Giovanni," and the romance from "Tannhaeuser." The chief orchestral number was Schubert's great symphony in C. In the evening Verdi's "Requiem" was performed. Beethoven's Seventh Symphony was played. Mr. Lloyd (who was associated with Miss DeVere, Miss Winant and Mr. Fischer in the solo work of the "Requiem") sang Eleazar's air in "La Juive," and all came to an end with the Hallelujah from "The Messiah."

The receipts have been about $47,000; the expenditures in the neighborhood of $39,000. The receipts are nearly three times as large as those of the recent Handel and Haydn Festival in Boston, and the expenditures about two and a half. But Boston had its own orchestra, and gave only four concerts, while Cincinnati imported a hundred instrumentalists from New-York, and gave seven concerts. H. E.

Argus- Albany, N. Y.
Date 5/24

...siderable interest reg... valedictorian and ... probably be announced next week.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

A Notable Musical Event at Harmanus Bleecker Hall.

An orchestra of sixty artists, trained to a standard of perfection such as has never before been attained in this country, moved by one impulse, breathing the same spirit, giving every phase of expression, every shade of instrumental color, every delicate effect that the most exacting could demand, marvellous in mighty climaxes, as well as in scarcely whispered pianissimi, responsive to the slightest indication of an exceptionally gifted conductor, and revealing in each work on the programme new and delightful traits of excellence—such was the musical treat enjoyed by a large audience in Harmanus Bleecker hall last night. The playing of this unequalled organization was a revelation. The quality as well as the admirable balance of tone, seemed to present the works in an entirely new light. The grand symphonic poem by Liszt, "Les Preludes," was endorsed with far more significant meaning than it was given by Thomas. The marvellous power, the warmth of tone, the unanimity of expression of the strings in the Allegro tempestuoso was something to be long remembered, while the declamatory passages for the basses, in the finale, were delivered with sonorous effect. Whatever charge may be brought against Liszt's other works, on the score of artificiality, it cannot hold against his superb setting of Lamartine's sublime passages. And such an interpretation as it received from the Boston Symphony orchestra brought out its beauties, its kaleidoscopic treatment of the two main themes, in the strongest relief.

The suite of Grieg, "Peer Gynt," which was the second orchestral number on the programme, was a specimen of pure Scandinavian music, as unlike the confusing and restless methods of the German and Russian schools of the present day as Ibsen's dramatic poem differs in spirit and treatment from those of other countries. Nothing could be more charming than the artless beauty of the opening movement; nothing more ingenious and effective than the diablerie and grotesqueness of the last. The folk music coloring of the north gave a distinctive character to every portion of the work. The funeral march in this suite was one that might be said in complete accord with the Ibsen description of the wanderer's mother. The pianissimi passages at the close were distinct, but so delicate that one might say there was nothing between them and silence. The mazurka was a dainty little gem, to which Titania, as well as the Sheik's daughter, might dance. The sparkling little themes given by the muted strings, the pizzicato accompaniment and the accented effect of the triangle, gave the mazurka a charm of its own. The grotesque march that concluded the suite was re-demanded by a vociferous encore. And well it might be, for it was a wonderful specimen of instrumental effect and it was played to perfection.

The immortal Fifth Symphony of Beethoven was a fitting conclusion of the programme. It served to exhibit new traits of artistic excellence in the orchestra. Mr. Arthur Nikisch, the conductor, has been severely censured in some quarters for what was called the unwarrantable liberties he took with the tempi in his work. Such censure is undeserved. There has been of late years a palpable departure on the part of representative conductors from strict traditions and conventional readings of classical works. They are inclined to give a broader scope to interpretation. As long as this does not degenerate into unbridled license, but possesses in every respect the spirit of the work, there can be no just censure. The beginning of the Scherzo, or third movement, was taken at a slower tempo than usual, and, as the movement proceeded, there seemed to be a gradual accelerando. The effect was very marked, and however it might be questioned by the stern guardians of tradition, it was by no means of a character to mar the symmetry of the work.

Mr. Nikisch is a model conductor, calm, dignified and devoid of the pantomimic mannerisms which frequently attract the attention of the audience to the wielder of the baton rather than to the band itself. He conducts without notes, and however sparing he may be of gesticulations, his eloquent countenance conveys all the necessary deviations to his men. Mr. T. Adamowski, the violinist, a member of the orchestra, played two movements from Saint Saens' concerto in B minor. The second, a brilliant polacca, was the most taking. It was given with exceeding dash and brilliancy. Mr. Adamowski's tone is small, but refined and clear, and he is a master of all the sensational effects of his school. The vocalist of the occasion was Madame Steinbach-Jahns, a soprano from Leipsic. Whatever her success in opera in the past may have been, it is very certain that her voice at present is not calculated to make her even tolerable in the concert hall. Her voice is hard, coarse and expressionless. In the three lieder, which she sang in the second part of the programme, there was more pleasure in listening to the exquisite piano accompaniment of Mr. Nikisch than to the singer. The audience would have been far better pleased had the orchestra been substituted for Madame Steinbach-Jahns on the programme. It is to be sincerely hoped that this magnificent organization will be heard more than once at Harmanus Bleecker hall next season. Albany now knows the artistic value of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and will always extend them a hearty welcome and the most liberal patronage.

Commercial, Buffalo, N.
Date 5/2

THE BU

HERR ARTHUR NIKISCH

nd his Orchestra Give a Brilliant Concert at Music Hall.

Buffalo's musical season is generally osed by the justly celebrated Boston ymphony Orchestra, when it makes a stop ere on its return to "The Hub" after its Western trip, and the pleasure of these conerts is anticipated a long time ahead, and he hopes, be they never so high, of a most njoyable and satisfactory evening, are always fully realized.

Heretofore the Symphony Orchestra has een heard under the baton of Mr. Gerricke, ut last fall he was succeeded by Mr. rthur Nikisch, who found the orchestra n such a finished state as to make it equal o any and superior to the majority of uropean orchestras. Under Georg Henchel the orchestra made an excellent beginning, he laying a magnificent foundation, Mr. Gerricke succeeding him, carried on the work of building a grand superstructure, and that Mr. Nikisch will maintain the high standard of excellence attained is made manifest by the perfect rendition of such a program as was listened to last evening. Mr. Nikisch is a musician through and through, conducts without the score before him, and one watching him closely feels as if the music was coming out of the end of his baton, but that is the "magic wand" that brings forth the lovely strains from a corps of seventy or more members of the orchestra, each one of whom is an artist of high standing, as none other will be accepted.

The concert opened with the Liszt Symphonic Poem "Les Preludes," which created great enthusiasm among the large and attentive audience present. In one of the passages of the beautiful composition the strings play in rapid tempo, and the effect is marvelously-like a veritable whirlwind. The superb D minor symphony by Schumann was the next number for orchestra alone, and the interpretation was grand; one is accustomed to pauses between the movements of a symphony, but not so with this, indeed could not be, as the connection between them is so close, as to make pauses an impossibility, and the effect is that of a single composition. The "Sakuntala" overture by Goldmark was played with spirit and refinement. The whole performance led to the conclusion that an orchestra could not be more perfectly under the control of the conductor.

Mme. Steinbach-Jahns was the soprano soloist. She sang the aria from the "Freischuetz," in an artistic and pleasing manner receiving the just approval of the audience. Later on Mme. Steinbach-Jahns sang Rubenstein's "Es blinkt der Thau;" Nikisch's "Sehnsucht" and Goldmark's "Die Quelle," and responded to an encore with a Brahm song. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns has a pleasing voice and manner and her singing is satisfactory, and to the majority it was an agreeable surprise, as she is not well known in this country.

Mr. Anton Hekking's violoncello solo was a rare treat, the two movements from Saint-Saens concerto in A minor, being superbly rendered, and Mr. Hekking is undoubtedly one of the best 'cellists in the United States. The instrument used last evening had somewhat of a muffled sound, however, and many of the softer and most beautiful passages in the concerto could not be heard by those not more than 15 or 20 rows back from the stage. The orchestral accompaniment in this work, as well as in the aria from the "Freischutz," and alike Mr. Nikisch's piano accompaniment, are deserving of the highest praise.

Times Buffalo, N. Y.
Date 5/23

...nois will be headquarters and Association ...all the place of meeting.

The Symphony Concert.

The greatest musical treat of the season was the concert given at Music hall last evening by the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first number on the programme, Liszt's symphonic poem "Les Preludes," was delightful, and one was borne away over fragrant fields with the humming of bees, birds and tropical life, through grassy glades and sylvan dells, and on over the blue ocean where the storm raged in all its fury, up the mountain, far up to the very top and then off again floating away to fields Elysian while below the thunder storm peals and flashes in all its majestic beauty. Conductor Arthur Nikisch had scarcely time to bow his acknowledgements to the applause which greeted this number when Mme Steinbach-Jahns, queenly in form and stage presence, came tripping before the footlights. Her first song won every heart and she was accorded three enthusiastic recalls. Her voice is correct in pitch, rich and pure in quality and tone and she sings with ease and fine expression. Mr. Hekking is undoubtedly the best 'cello player in this country and his number last evening proved one of the most delightful features of the programme. Mr. Nikisch is one of the most accomplished conductors of his time. He controls his orchestra like a general at the head of an army. Such discipline, precision, exactness in every detail is seldom seen in so large an organization. The orchestra left this morning for Albany where a final concert will be given and then the organization will go direct to Boston.

TORN PAGE

VOLUME XI.—N 41. MINNEAPOLIS, SATURDAY, MAY 3, 1890.—TWELVE PAGES.

COLISEUM CONCERT.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra in Minneapolis.

The Famous Organization and its Great Conductor, Nikisch.

ONE week from next Monday evening will occur at the University Coliseum one of the most notable musical events ever know in the Northwest, being a concert by the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra of seventy members, under the direction of the great conductor, Arthur Nikisch. From sale of seats, the receipts already amount to several thousand dollars, and upon the occasion of the concert the great Coliseum, seating 4,000 to 5,000 people, promises to be filled to its utmost capacity. The local management of the concert is by Mr. Louis Miller.

The great organization, which now makes its initial appearance in Minneapolis, was founded nine years ago, and has been growing in excellence until it is now acknowledged to be the finest orchestra in this country, and the equal, with perhaps a single exception, of any in the world. Its Boston season opens usually about October 15 and closes late in April. Twenty-four Friday afternoon public rehearsals and twenty-four Saturday evening concerts are given in the famous Music Hall, which seats 2,400. Season tickets are placed at $7.50 and $12, but the $12 seats are usually sold at auction at an average of $20 each, and every reserved seat is generally sold a month before the first concert, purchasers sometimes standing in line for five days and nights before the commencement of the sale. The program is arranged to last and hour and a half, and usually comprises an overture, a solo, an orchestral selection of a light order, another solo, and as a closing selection some standard symphony.

In each winter month, a week is devoted to a trip to New Haven, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. These concerts have this season been a great triumph. The orchestra started on its four weeks western tour a week ago. It will appear at Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Richmond, Columbus, O., Louisville, St. Louis, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Chicago, Milwaukee, Ann Arbor, Detroit, Cleveland, Pittsburg, Buffalo and Albany.

The liberal policy of Mr. Henry L. Higginson the founder, and the exacting requirements of the Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and his predecessors have resulted in the assembling of a body of artists of unusual ability, well fitted to sustain the high standard of the organization. Originally made up of the best available players of Boston and New York, each year the Orchestra has been strengthened by the acquisition of superior performers wherever they could be found, until it is now everywhere conceded that no such company has before been brought together in America.

In its ranks may be found representatives from the leading orchestras of Vienna, Leipzig, Paris and London. At the head of the violins as concertmeister is Herr Franz Knisel, who is ably supported by Mr. C. M. Loeffler, Mr. T. Adamowski, and a corps of players, every member of which is a solo artist. At the first desk of the celli sit Herr Anton Hekking and Herr Leo Schulz, new comers of whom flattering accounts are heard. Patrons of the concert will notice with pleasure the brilliant playing on flute and obeo of Messrs Molé and Sautet, who came two years ago from the Opéra Comique, Paris. Other prominent players among the wind instruments are Herr Xaver Reiter, first horn, Mr. Pierre Muller, first trumpet, late of the Lamoureux Orchestra, Paris, and Herr Goldschmidt, first clarinet.

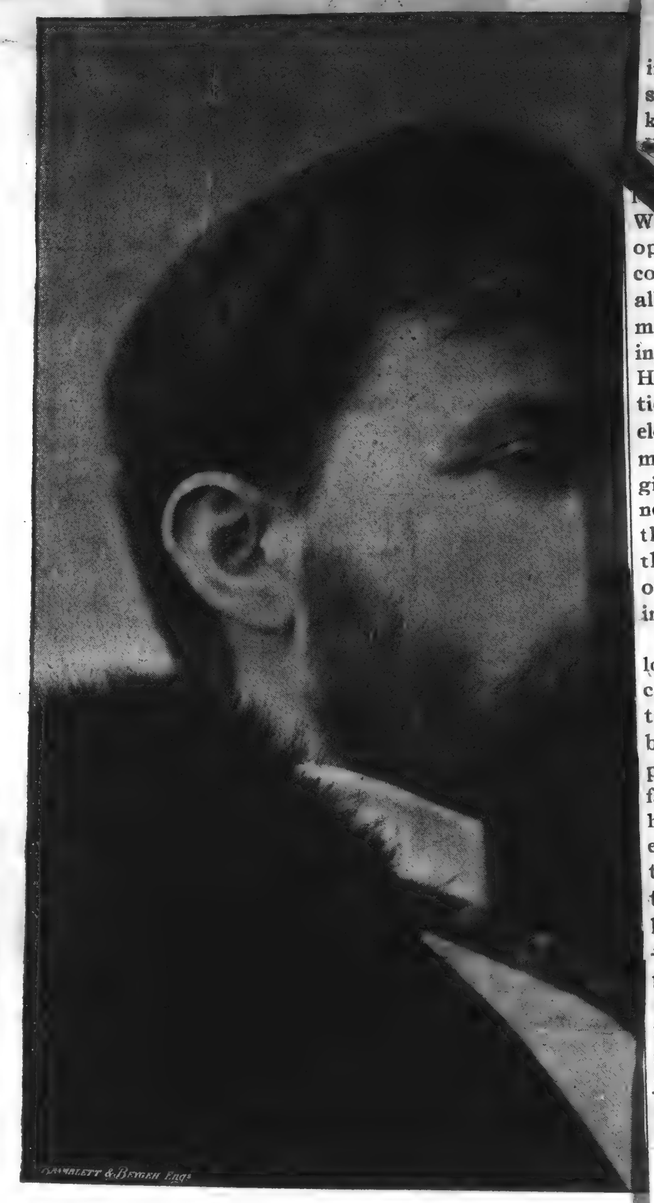
An extensive library collection during the past nine months, containing the orchestral compositions of the old masters and all worthy modern works, enables Mr. Nikisch to present an infinite variety of programs, including the most interesting, instructive and attractive selections. To give permanent value to the concert and add to the enjoyment of those who attend, an analytical program will be issued in book form, similar to those which have been received

Arthur Nikisch, came from Leipzig last September. He was born Oct. 12, 1855, in Lichtenstein. In earliest childhood the boy showed such extraordinary talent that his parents determined to educate him as a musician. He began his studies with the violin, and he mastered this instrument with such ease and so completely that, at the age of eight, he appeared in public with most extraordinary success, —in fact, the young prodigy received a genuine ovation. His first studies in harmony and organ-playing were under the direction of the organist Prochazka, in the neighboring town of Buschtowitz; and in all branches the lad made such remarkable progress as to enable him to enter the Royal Conservatory in Vienna at the unusually early age of eleven. He remained at the conservatory for eight years, during which time he won many more prizes for his compositions, as well as the first prize and silver medal for violin playing.

He applied for a desk among the first violinists at the Royal Opera; and obtaining this honorable position without the least difficulty, he occupied it during four years, receiving in this way the best possible practical instruction in conducting. During this time, he played through an enormous repertoire of operatic and concert music, and had constantly before him the splendid example of such magnificent conductors as Richter and Jahn. At the end of his experiences as a member of the orchestra (1878), he went with the celebrated manager, Angelo Neumann, to Leipzig, and was installed as assistant conductor in the Old Opera House. He remained in this position for a year, drilling the chorus and soloists, and conducting the smaller operas and operettas; but Neumann's experience had shown him that he had found a real musical wonder, and at the end of the year he was transferred to the New Opera House as head conductor, where he remained until he left for Boston. He made his debut in this position with one of the most magnificent performances of "Tannhauser" ever heard in Leipzig, and from that moment he was universally acknowledged as one of the most gifted and important conductors in Europe. It is no exaggeration to say that he has done more for music in Leipzig than any other individual can justly claim. Under his care and direction, the Leipzig Theatre orchestra has gained a European fame, which entitles it to an equal or even superior place to the Gewandhaus orchestra.

Nikisch has also, during these years in Leipzig, distinguished himself quite as much as a concert [illegible] concerts of the Listz Society. With them, he achieved a success which caused all the noted German critics to acknowledge that Arthur Nikisch is one of the most brilliant and talented living conductors, both in the theatre and on the concert stage.

A fitting conclusion of this sketch will be a portion of a letter received by the



SATURDAY EVENING SPECTATOR

ARTHUR NIKISCH, CONDUCTOR BOSTON SYMPHONY O[illegible]

COLISEUM CONCERT.

(Continued from first page.)

in its fascination. What a fury seems to seize the double basses in the trio as a kind of premonition of what is to follow! But the transition to the finale must be trusted to instruments less inclined to [illegible] their feelings run away with them. Wh[illegible] the violins and drums held their oppos[illegible] chords in sweet mysterious conflict, [illegible] the decided rhythm of the allegro ha[illegible] ppeared, the victorious march began [illegible] an effect truely thrilling. Mr. Nikisch [illegible] s simply magnificent. He is a small man [illegible] such a great emotion, and from head [illegible] foot he seemed electrified with the truc[illegible] it of a great master. Even after the fa[illegible] style had given place to the lofty di[illegible] which never forskaes Beethoven onc[illegible] t the thrill of triumph. I could only t[illegible] of the ideas the ancients had of the po[illegible] of their gods; it was like seeing Phoebu[illegible] in his chariot dash across the noon-day.

"The tempest of applause which followed the last note shook the house—I could feel the vibration. The conductor turned to acknowledge it. The spell was broken, and I saw only 'a man of like passions as we are;' the pale, thoughtful face, deep-set, expressive eyes and dark hair; the white hands, the graceful deference to an enthusiastic public—Mr Arthur Nikisch. But I came away feeling that something greater than he—perhaps the spirit from that silent statue —had led the finale of the Fifth Symphony.

"That night I dreamed a strange thing. I seemed to be on a ship in mid-ocean. There had been a storm just before sunset, and in the east I saw a wonderful rainbow. There was crimson, as the rich, full tone of a horn; there was violet, as the soaring of the violins, and between the crimson and the violet was a harmonious blending of colors, each perfect in itself, yet a part of the whole, as the separate instruments in the orchestra unite in the symphony; and, as I looked, the glory of my rainbow seemed to cover the sky; there were twelve rainbows mounting one above another. I looked about the silent vessel and out over the ocean, which had no voice for me, and realized that in all the world I was alone but for the beauty of my rainbow. The sun sank in the west, and my dream was lost in the shadows."

That slight, gentle-swaying figure fascinates with its wonderful magnetism. The baton is raised high, still there is silence. Gradually every bow is made ready for action, every eye is fixed upon that lifted hand; an instant of suspense, then a sudden sweep of the white hands, and as though it were a mighty harp the great orchestra responds. During the Haydn symphony I almost forgot the score before me as I read its interpretation in the conductor. Directness and simplicity in the first movement, a quaint merriment in the last—surely, if spirits do come back, 'Papa Haydn' must have been pleased as he heard his symphony.

"The orchestra seemed inspired with true feeling of Mozart's great work, showing as it does the highest soaring of the artist soul, yet touching our most human sympathies by its plaintive sweetness and unrest. There were hearts beneath the violins as well as skillful hands upon the bows, the first movement was so full of new and exquisite beauty in its slow tempo, but over all was the perfect control and self-control of the master mind. At times the baton seemed almost unnecessary, his unconsciously graceful gesture expressed so much. What could better call forth the singing voices of the strings than the gentle undulating motion of those white hands? What summon a tone of organ quality like their strong, downward pressure? Yet when the nature of the music required it, with what splendid precision, with what fire and energy he led his men! The power of his enthusiasm and their artistic and technical excellence must produce wonderful climaxes.

"Berlioz says that in the fifth symphony more than in any of its predecessors, we see the real life of Beethoven. Without doubt it is the most famous of the nine, appealing as it does alike to artist and amateur. The first movement throbbing with hopeless dispair, now breaking forth in a wild cry, now sinking back in utter exhaustion, speaks the tempest-tossed human heart, and brings the man of immortal fame nearer to us who suffer, strive and fail to-day, to be forgotten to-morrow.

"No one who watched Mr. Nikisch's conducting of this work could fail to see that in his mind there was no doubts as to its true conception. He had translated every bar to his own satisfaction and read much between the lines. The absence of score gave [illegible] feeling of confidence in him; he h[illegible] ade Beethoven's symphony his ow[illegible]. The familiar andante, with its recurring phrase, at once so simple and so sad, can never

MME. STEINBACH JAHNS, VOCAL SOLOIST, BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTA CONCERT.

[142]

TORN PAGE

INCOMPLETE

VOLUME XI.—N 41. MINNEAPOLIS, SATURDAY [illegible] PAGES.

COLISEUM CONCERT.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra in Minneapolis.

The Famous Organization and its Great Conductor, Nikisch.

ONE week from next Monday evening will occur at the University Coliseum one of the most notable musical events ever know in the Northwest, being a concert by the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra of seventy members, under the direction of the great conductor, Arthur Nikisch. From sale of seats, the receipts already amount to several thousand dollars, and upon the occasion of the concert the great Coliseum, seating 4,000 to 5,000 people, promises to be filled to its utmost capacity. The local management of the concert is by Mr. Louis Miller.

The great organization, which now makes its initial appearance in Minneapolis, was founded nine years ago, and has been growing in excellence until it is now acknowledged to be the finest orchestra in this country, and the equal, with perhaps a single exception, of any in the world. Its Boston season opens usually about October 15 and closes late in April. Twenty-four Friday afternoon public rehearsals and twenty-four Saturday evening concerts are given in the famous Music Hall, which seats 2,400. Season tickets are placed at $7.50 and $12, but the $12 seats are usually sold at auction at an average of $20 each, and every reserved seat is generally sold a month before the first concert, purchasers sometimes standing in line for five days and nights before the commencement of the sale. The program is arranged to last and hour and a half, and usually comprises an overture, a solo, an orchestral selection of a light order, another solo, and as a closing selection some standard symphony.

In each winter month, a week is devoted to a trip to New Haven, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. These concerts have this season been a great triumph. The orchestra started on its four weeks western tour a week ago. It will appear at Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Richmond, Columbus, O., Louisville, St. Louis, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Chicago, Milwaukee, Ann Arbor, Detroit, Cleveland, Pittsburg, Buffalo and Albany.

The liberal policy of Mr. Henry L. Higginson the founder, and the exacting requirements of the Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and his predecessors have resulted in the assembling of a body of artists of unusual ability, well fitted to sustain the high standard of the organization. Originally made up of the best available players of Boston and New York, each year the Orchestra has been strengthened by the acquisition of superior performers wherever they could be found, until it is now everywhere conceded that no such company has before been brought together in America.

In its ranks may be found representatives from the leading orchestras of Vienna, Leipzig, Paris and London. At the head of the violins as concertmeister is Herr Franz Knisel, who is ably supported by Mr. C. M. Loeffler, Mr. T. Adamowski, and a corps of players, every member of which is a solo artist. At the first desk of the celli sit Herr Anton Hekking and Herr Leo Schulz, new comers of whom flattering accounts are heard. Patrons of the concert will notice with pleasure the brilliant playing on flute and obeo of Messrs Molé and Sautet, who came two years ago from the Opéra Comique, Paris. Other prominent players among the wind instruments are Herr Xaver Reiter, first horn, Mr. Pierre Muller, first trumpet, late of the Lamoureux Orchestra, Paris, and Herr Goldschmidt, first clarinet.

An extensive library collection during the past nine months, containing the orchestral compositions of the old masters and all worthy modern works, enables Mr. Nikisch to present an infinite variety of programs, including the most interesting, instructive and attractive selections. To give permanent value to the concert and add to the enjoyment of those who attend, an analytical program will be issued in book form, similar to those which have been received

Arthur Nikisch, came from Leipzig last September. He was born Oct. 12, 1855, in Lichtenstein. In earliest childhood the boy showed such extraordinary talent markably successful concerts with own theatre orchestra. More especia noteworthy, however, is the manner which he conducted the recent mons that his parents determined to educate him as a musician. He began his studies with the violin, and he mastered this instrument with such ease and so completely that, at the age of eight, he appeared in public with most extraordinary success,—in fact, the young prodigy received a genuine ovation. His first studies in harmony and organ-playing were under the direction of the organist Prochazka, in the neighboring town of Buschtowitz; and in all branches the lad made such remarkable progress as to enable him to enter the Royal Conservatory in Vienna at the unusually early age of eleven. He remained at the conservatory for eight years, during which time he won many more prizes for his compositions, as well as the first prize and silver medal for violin playing.

SATURDAY EVENING SPECTATOR

ARTHUR NIKISCH, CONDUCTOR BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

He applied for a desk among the first violinists at the Royal Opera; and obtaining this honorable position without the least difficulty, he occupied it during four years, receiving in this way the best possible practical instruction in conducting. During this time, he played through an enormous repertoire of operatic and concert music, and had constantly before him the splendid example of such magnificent conductors as Richter and Jahn. At the end of his experiences as a member of the orchestra (1878), he went with the celebrated manager, Angelo Neumann, to Leipzig, and was installed as assistant conductor in the Old Opera House. He remained in this position for a year, drilling the chorus and soloists, and conducting the smaller operas and operettas; but Neumann's experience had shown him that he had found a real musical wonder, and at the end of the year he was transferred to the New Opera House as head conductor, where he remained until he left for Boston. He made his debut in this position with one of the most magnificent performances of "Tannhauser" ever heard in Leipzig, and from that moment he was universally acknowledged as one of the most gifted and important conductors in Europe. It is no exaggeration to say that he has done more for music in Leipzig than any other individual can justly claim. Under his care and direction, the Leipzig Theatre orchestra has gained a European fame, which entitles it to an equal or even superior place to the Gewandhaus orchestra.

Nikisch has also, during these years in Leipzig, distinguished himself quite as much as a concerts of the Listz Society. With them, he achieved a success which caused all the noted German critics to acknowledge that Arthur Nikisch is one of the most brilliant and talented living conductors, both in the theatre and on the concert stage.

A fitting conclusion of this sketch will be a portion of a letter received by the interest naturally centered in the new conductor. Ruskin says that the two essential qualities of a great artist are sympathy and imagination; and as soon as Mr. Nikisch came before the audience that night I saw that he possessed the first of these; his subsequent work revealed the second. His graceful self-possession wins at once, but when he at slight, gentle-swaying figure fascinates with its wonderful magnetism. The baton is raised high, still there is silence. Gradually every bow is made ready for action, every eye is fixed upon that lifted hand; an instant of suspense, then a sudden sweep of the white hands, and as though it were a mighty harp the great orchestra responds. During the Haydn symphony I almost forgot the score before me as I read its interpretation in the conductor. Directness and simplicity in the first movement, a quaint merriment in the last—surely, if spirits do come back, 'Papa Haydn' must have been pleased as he heard his symphony.

"The orchestra seemed inspired with true feeling of Mozart's great work, showing as it does the highest soaring of the artist soul, yet touching our most human sympathies by its plaintive sweetness and unrest. There were hearts beneath the violins as well as skillful hands upon the bows, the first movement was so full of new and exquisite beauty in its slow tempo, but over all was the perfect control and self-control of the master mind. At times the baton seemed almost unnecessary, his unconsciously graceful gesture expressed so much. What could better call forth the singing voices of the strings than the gentle undulating motion of those white hands? What summon a tone of organ quality like their strong, downward pressure? Yet when the nature of the music required it, with what splendid precision, with what fire and energy he led his men! The power of his enthusiasm and their artistic and technical excellence must produce wonderful climaxes.

"Berlioz says that in the fifth symphony more than in any of its predecessors, we see the real life of Beethoven. Without doubt it is the most famous of the nine, appealing as it does alike to artist and amateur. The first movement throbbing with hopeless dispair, now breaking forth in a wild cry, now sinking back in utter exhaustion, speaks the tempest-tossed human heart, and brings the man of immortal fame nearer to us who suffer, strive and fail to-day, to be forgotten to-morrow.

"No one who watched Mr. Nikisch's conducting of this work could fail to see that in his mind there was no doubts as to its true conception. He had translated every bar to his own satisfaction and read much between the lines. The absence of score gave [illegible] feeling of confidence in him; he h[illegible]ade Beethoven's symphony his own. The familiar andante, with its recurring phrase, at once so simple and so sad, can never

MME. STEINBACH JAHNS, VOCAL SOLOIST, BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTA CONCERT.

[142]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, PHILADELPHIA.

Monday Evening, April 28, at 8.

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager Boston Symphony Orchestra.

BURDITT & NORTH, Managers of Philadelphia Concerts.

LINCOLN MUSIC HALL, - - WASHINGTON.

Wednesday Evening, April 30, at 8.

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Washington Concerts are under the management of BURDITT & NORTH.

Lyceum Theatre, - - Baltimore,

Tuesday Evening, April 29, at 8.

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Baltimore Concerts are under the management of BURDITT & NORTH.

Academy of Music, Richmond.

Friday Evening, May 2.

UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE MOZART ASSOCIATION.

FOURTH TOUR.

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

Academy of Music, Richmond.

Saturday Evening, May 3.

UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE MOZART ASSOCIATION.

FOURTH TOUR.

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

THE ODEON, - CINCINNATI,

Tuesday Evening, May 6, at 8.

Wednesday Evening, May 7, at 8.

[144]

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

Tickets at the John Church Company's Music Store.

Metropolitan Opera House, Columbus.

MONDAY EVENING, MAY 5.

UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE ORPHEUS CLUB.

FOURTH TOUR.

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

For Particulars as to the Sale of Tickets see Daily Papers.

THE ODEON, - CINCINNATI,

Wednesday Evening, May 7, at 8.

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

Amphitheatre Auditorium, - - Louisville, Ky.

THURSDAY EVENING, MAY 8, 1890.

FOURTH TOUR.

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

Grand Music Hall, St. Louis.

Friday Evening, May 9.

FOURTH TOUR.

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

Grand Music Hall, St. Louis.

Saturday Evening, May 10.

FOURTH TOUR.

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

University Coliseum, - Minneapolis.

Monday Evening, May 12.

Under the management of Mr. Louis Miller.

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

PEOPLE'S CHURCH, - - ST. PAUL,

Tuesday Evening, May 13, 1890.

GRAND * FESTIVAL * CONCERT

SUPPLEMENTARY TO THE STAR COURSE, E. C. MURDOCK, Manager,

BY THE

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

Third * Concert

Thirteenth Season

ARION * MUSICAL CLUB

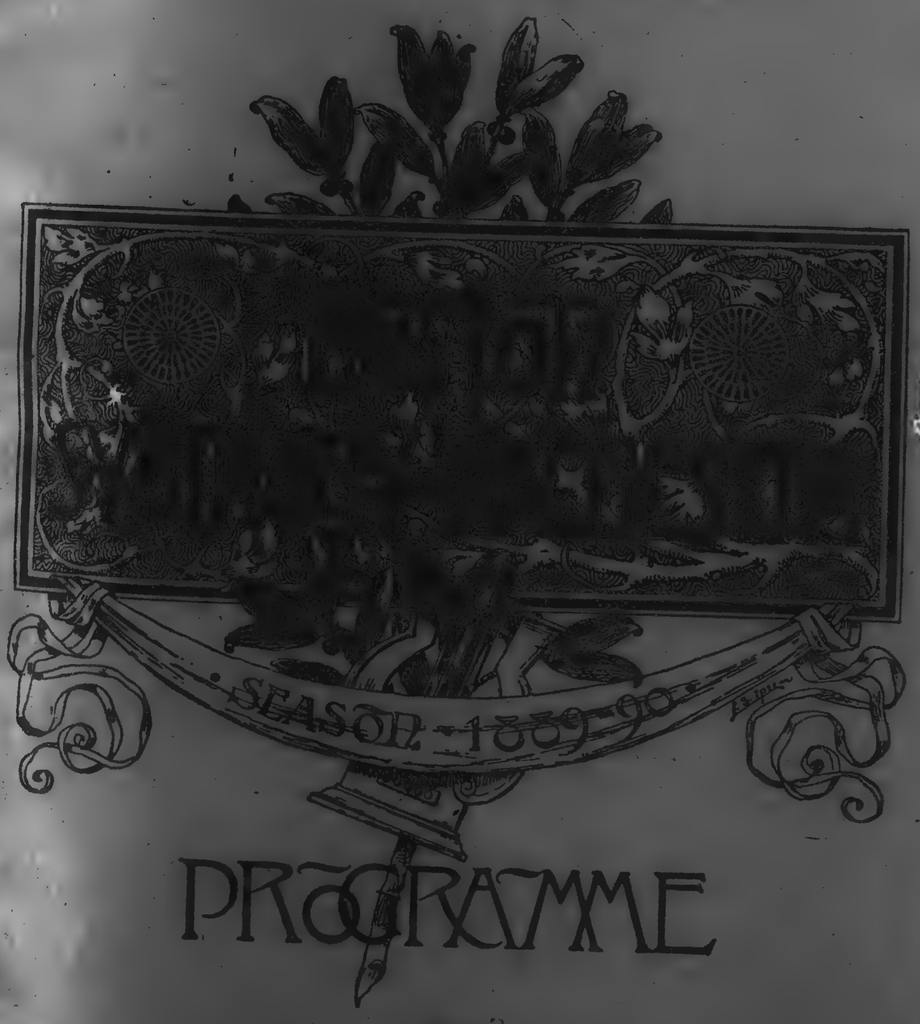
1889
1890

Boston Symphony Orchestra

NEW ACADEMY, THURSDAY, MAY 15, 1890

Central Music Hall, - - Chicago.

Wednesday Evening, May 14.



PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

Tickets on Sale at Central Music Hall, on and after Saturday, May 10.

UNIVERSITY HALL, ANN ARBOR, MICH.

FRIDAY, MAY 16th, 1890,

UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE University Musical Society.

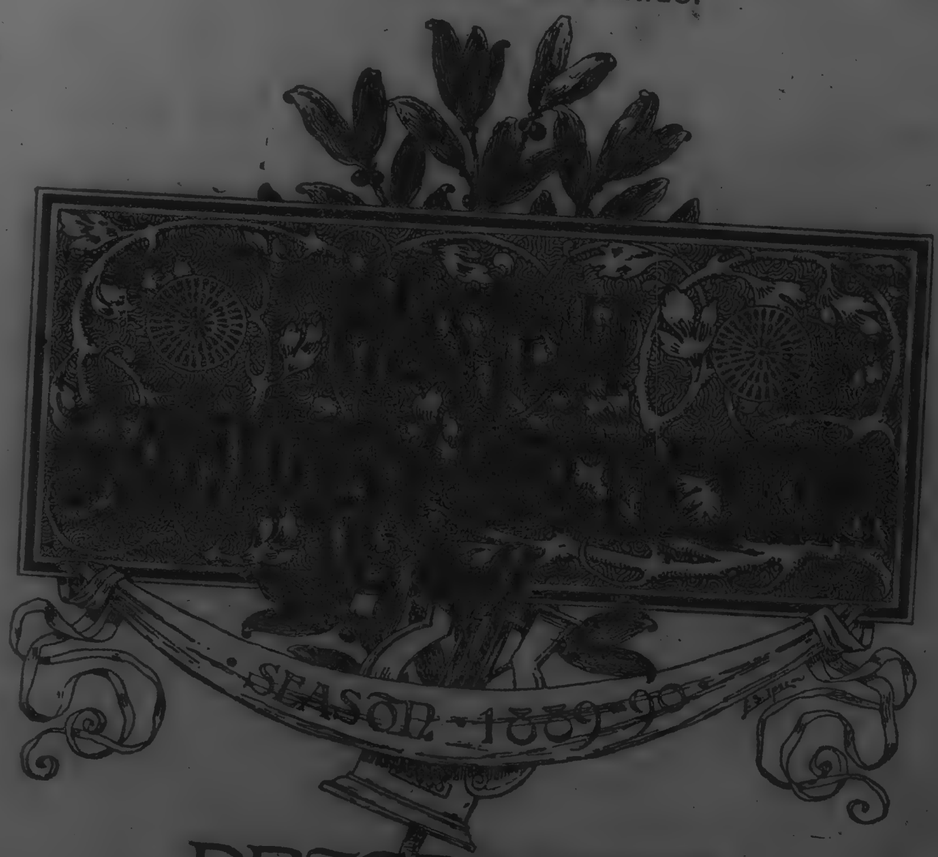
CHORAL UNION SERIES.



PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

[146]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

PEOPLE'S CHURCH, - - ST. PAUL,

Tuesday Evening, May 13, 1890.

GRAND • FESTIVAL • CONCERT

SUPPLEMENTARY TO THE STAR COURSE, E. C. MURDOCK, Manager,

BY THE

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

Third Concert

Thirteenth Season

ARION MUSICAL CLUB

1889
1890

Boston Symphony Orchestra

NEW ACADEMY, THURSDAY, MAY 15, 1890

Central Music Hall, - - Chicago.

Wednesday Evening, May 14.

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

Tickets on Sale at Central Music Hall, on and after Saturday, May 10.

UNIVERSITY HALL, ANN ARBOR, MICH.

FRIDAY, MAY 16th, 1890,

UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE

University Musical Society.

CHORAL UNION SERIES.

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

Arion Musical Club.

Board of Management.

C. E. MONROE, Vice-President. W. W. WALLIS.
A. G. WRIGHT, Secretary. W. H. STARKWEATHER.
GEO. L. RICHARDS, Treasurer. W. E. FURLONG.

Music Committee.

A. G. BODDEN. R. THOMAS. GEO. L. RICHARDS.
W. H. POMMER, ex-officio.

Social Committee.

C. E. SAMMOND, First Tenor. CHAS. F. FURLONG, First Bass.
S. W. CHIDESTER, Second Tenor. G. A. LEMMENES, Second Bass.

DR. C. L. BABCOCK, Librarian.

W. H. POMMER, ... Director.

Cecilian Choir.

MRS. W. E. HASKIN, Pres. MRS. J. G. PATTERSON, V.-Pres.
MISS LILLIAN READ, Sec. MRS. H. O. WOOD, Treas.

Music Committee.

MISS J. M. MALLORY, 1st Soprano. MISS LILLIAN M. WAY, 1st Alto.
MRS. J. M. ROMADKA, 2d Soprano. MISS J. G. PARKES, 2d Alto.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

Central Music Hall, - - Chicago.

Wednesday Evening, May 14.

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

Tickets on Sale at Central Music Hall, on and after Saturday, May 10.

1889 1890

THIRTEENTH SEASON

THIRD CONCERT

Arion : Musical : Club

ASSISTED BY THE

CECILIAN CHOIR

AND

Mme. STEINBACH-JAHNS, Soprano

AND THE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor

Mr. WILLIAM H. POMMER, Director

New Academy, Thursday Evening, May 15, 1890

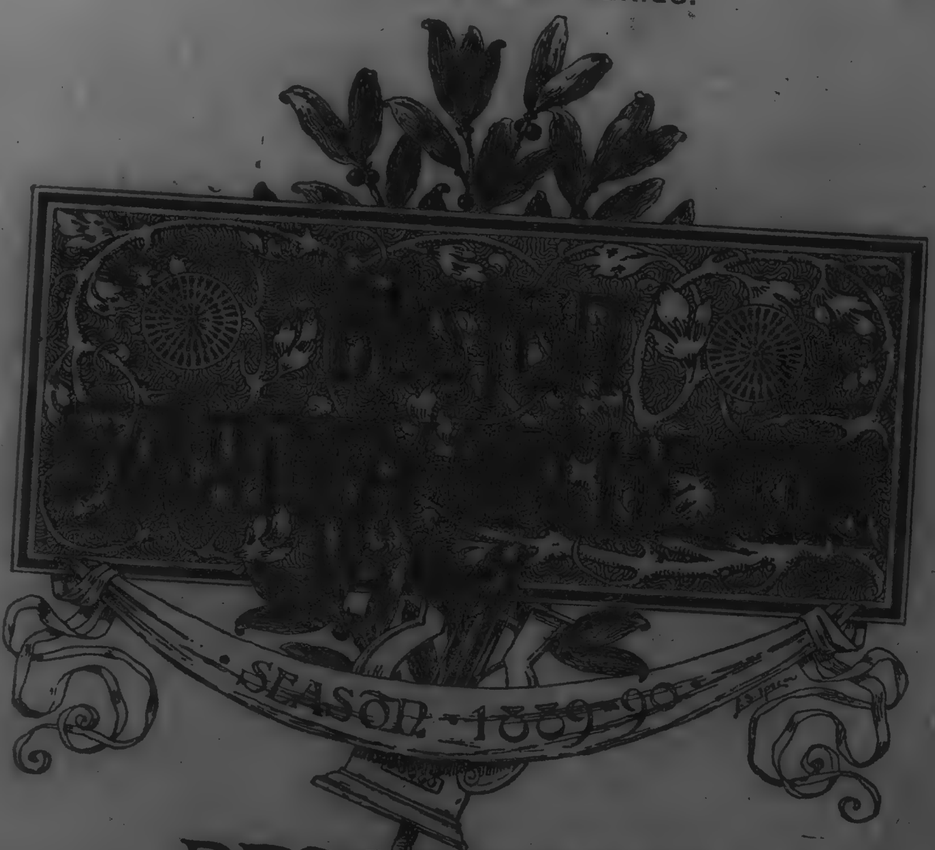
UNIVERSITY HALL, ANN ARBOR, MICH.

FRIDAY, MAY 16th, 1890,

UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE

University Musical Society.

CHORAL UNION SERIES.



PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

[146]

STEINWAY PIANOS USED AT ARION CONCERTS ARE KINDLY FURNISHED BY WM. ROHLFING & SONS.

BURDICK, ARMITAGE & ALLEN, PRINTERS, MILWAUKEE.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

Central Music Hall, - - Chicago.

Wednesday Evening, May 14.

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

Tickets on Sale at Central Music Hall, on and after Saturday, May 10.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.

Mr. W. H. POMMER, Director.

MENDELSSOHN, - - XLII PSALM.

ARION CLUB AND CECILIAN CHOIR.

MME. STEINBACH-JAHNS.

Mr. ALEX. J. JOHNSTON. Mr. C. F. FURLONG.
Mr. A F. HINNERS. Mr. W. H. STARKWEATHER

1. "As the Heart Pants," - - Chorus.

   As the heart panteth after the water brooks,
   So panteth my soul after thee, O God.

2. "My Soul Thirsteth for God"—Aria, - Soprano.

   My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God;
   When shall I come and appear before God?

3. "My Tears have been my Meat," Recit., Air, Chorus.

   My tears have been my meat day and night,
   While they continually say unto me,
   Where is thy God?
   These things I remember, and pour out my soul within me,
   How I went with the throng and led them to the house of God,
   With the voice of joy and praise, a multitude keeping holiday.

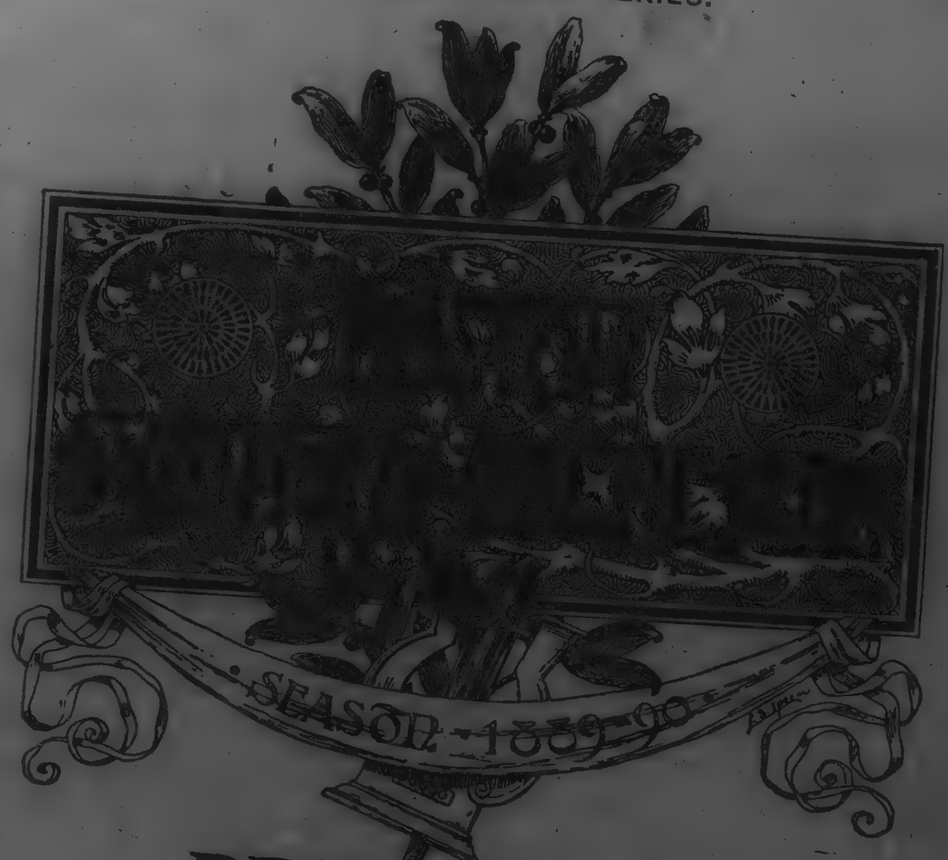
UNIVERSITY HALL, ANN ARBOR, MICH.

FRIDAY, MAY 16th, 1890,

UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE

University Musical Society.

CHORAL UNION SERIES.



PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

[146]

4. "Why, my Soul, art Thou so Vexed?" - Chorus.

Why art thou cast down, O my soul?
And why art thou disquieted within me?
Hope thou in God; for I shall yet praise him
For the health of his countenance.

5. "My Soul is Cast Down," - Recit., Soprano.

O my God, my soul is cast down within me:
Therefore do I remember Thee from the land of Jordan,
Deep calleth unto deep at the noise of thy water-spouts;
All thy waves and thy billows are gone over me.

6. "The Lord hath Commanded," - Quintet.

The Lord will command his loving-kindness in the day time,
And in the night his song shall be with me,
Even a prayer unto the God of my life.

7. "Why, my Soul, art Thou so Vexed?" - Chorus.

Why, my soul, art thou so vexed, and why art thou cast down in me?
Trust thou in God, for I will yet give him great thanks
For the help of his good countenance.
Praised be the Lord, the God of Israel, from henceforth and forever more.

PROGRAMME.

PART II.

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Director.

LISZT, - - Symphonic Poem, "Les Preludes."

This work, the third of Liszt's "Symphonic Poems," was begun at Marseilles in 1845, and finished at Weimar, five years later. Its first performance took place also at Weimar in 1854. As their generic name implies, all Liszt's compositions of the present class have an avowed poetic basis. That of the work now to be played is found in a passage from Lamartine's "Méditations Poétiques," placed by the composer himself at the head of his score. The passage in question may be rendered into English thus:—

"What is our life but a series of Preludes to that unknown song of which Death intones the first solemn note? Love constitutes the enchanting dawn of all existence; but where is an experience in which the first sensations of happiness are not disturbed by some storm, the deadly breath of which dispels its fond illusions, while blasting lightning burns up its altar? What cruelly wounded soul, when one of these tempests has passed away, does not seek to lull its memories in the sweet calm of country life? Nevertheless, man cannot long resign himself to the beneficent insipidity which at first charmed him in the bosom of nature; and, 'when the trumpet gives the signal of alarm,' he runs to the post of peril, whatever be the war that calls him to the ranks, so that he may recover in combat full consciousness of himself and entire possession of

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

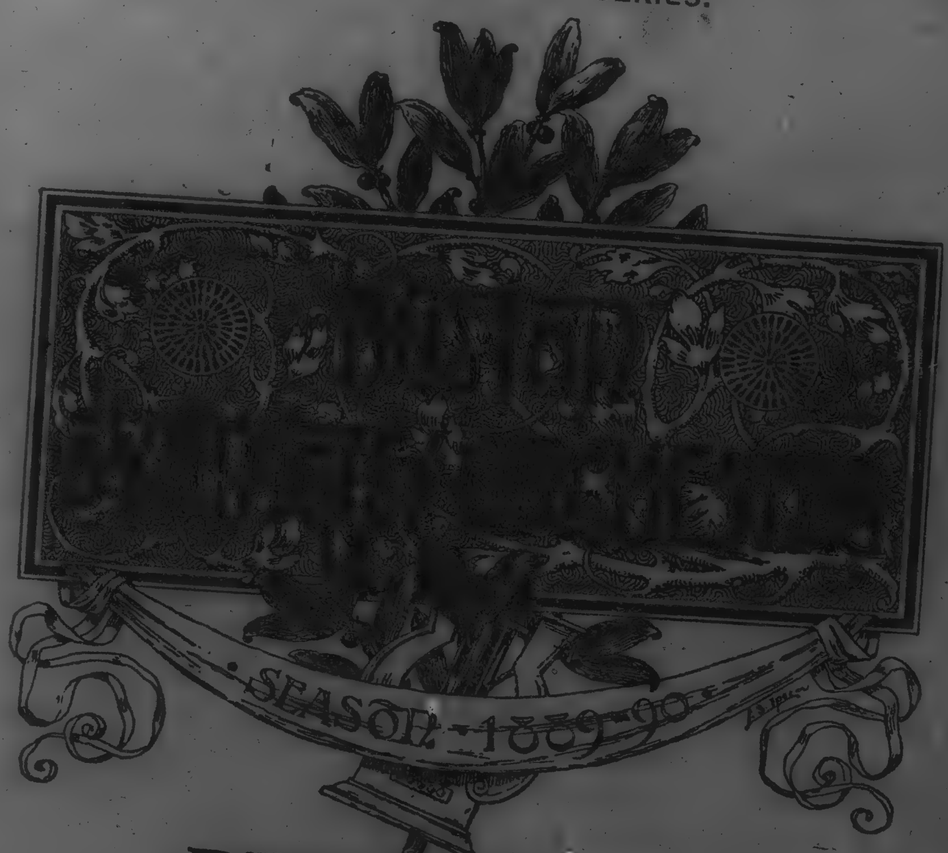
Central Music Hall, - - Chicago.
Wednesday Evening, May 14.

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

Tickets on Sale at Central Music Hall, on and after Saturday, May 10.

UNIVERSITY HALL, ANN ARBOR, MICH.
FRIDAY, MAY 16th, 1890,
UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE
University Musical Society.
CHORAL UNION SERIES.



PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

[146]

his powers." "Les Préludes" may, taking the composer's indications of tempo as a guide, be divided into six sections: —

Andante (strings, then flutes).
Andante maestoso (trombones and basses).
Allegro ma non troppo (violins and 'celli).
Allegro tempestuoso (violins and horns).
Allegretto pastorale (harp, then horns).
Allegro marziale animato, (violins, then trumpets).

These, however, are not "movements" in the sense of the word as it is used in connection with older forms of art. According to Mr. C. A. Barry, who is entitled to speak as an authority, they are "qualifications of the constituents of a complete organism, comprised within the space of a single movement." Symphonies proper are works in several movements. Symphonic poems, of the Liszt order, are works in one movement, containing several constituents variously qualified.

With regard to the themes of "Les Préludes" and their treatment, it must suffice to state that the principal subject to be metamorphosed appears in the opening andante. This is developed in the andante maestoso, which also contains the second subject. The remaining sections deal variously with the themes thus set forth, ringing upon them ingenious changes which will sufficiently exercise the hearer's powers of attention.

SONGS WITH PIANO.

LISZT, - - - - - "O Lieb."
GOLDMARK, - - - "Die Quelle."
GRIEG, - - - - "Hoffnung."

Mme. STEINBACH-JAHNS.

GRIEG, - - Suite, "Peer Gynt," Op. 46.

"Daybreak."
"The Death of Aase."
"Anitra's Dance."
"In the Halls of the King of the Dovre Mountains."
(The imps are chasing Peer Gynt.)

The dramatic poem of "Peer Gynt" was written by Ibsen in 1867,—a midway period in the career of one who is now occupying a share of the cultivated world's attention. This synopsis of the poem, or allegory, is presented: "The character of Peer Gynt is taken from one of the Norwegian folk-legends. He is a Norwegian Faust, whose superabundance of imagination will bring him to destruction if he is not saved by a woman. Peer Gynt is a peasant lad, whose parents were once well-to-do people; but the father is now dead and the mother and son are living in great poverty. The lad is full of great ideas, and has many wonderful plans for the future. These he confides to his mother, who, notwithstanding his wild ways and fantastic ideas, believes in him. His youthful arrogance knows no bounds. He goes to a wedding and carries off the bride to the mountains, where he afterwards deserts her. During the night, he wanders about and meets with some frolicsome dairy-maids. He harbors at last in the hall of the King of the Dovre Mountains, where he falls in love with the king's daughter, but is finally turned out of doors. He returns home, where he finds his mother, Aase, on her death-bed. After her death, he sails for foreign climes, and lands, after the lapse of many years, a rich man, on the coast of Morocco. In one of the Arabian deserts, he meets Anitra, the daughter of a Bedouin chief. She only succeeds in captivating him temporarily, and leaves him. Peer Gynt dreams about Solvejg, the love of his youth, who has faithfully been waiting for him, and to whose arms he at last returns, old and gray."

The suite is a reduction of the voluminous music Grieg composed for the production of the drama on the stage. The first movement, Daybreak, allegretto pastorale, is scored for small orchestra. The second, andante doloroso, consisting of four measured periods for muted strings,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

Central Music Hall, - - Chicago.

Wednesday Evening, May 14.

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass'T Manager.

Tickets on Sale at Central Music Hall, on and after Saturday, May 10.

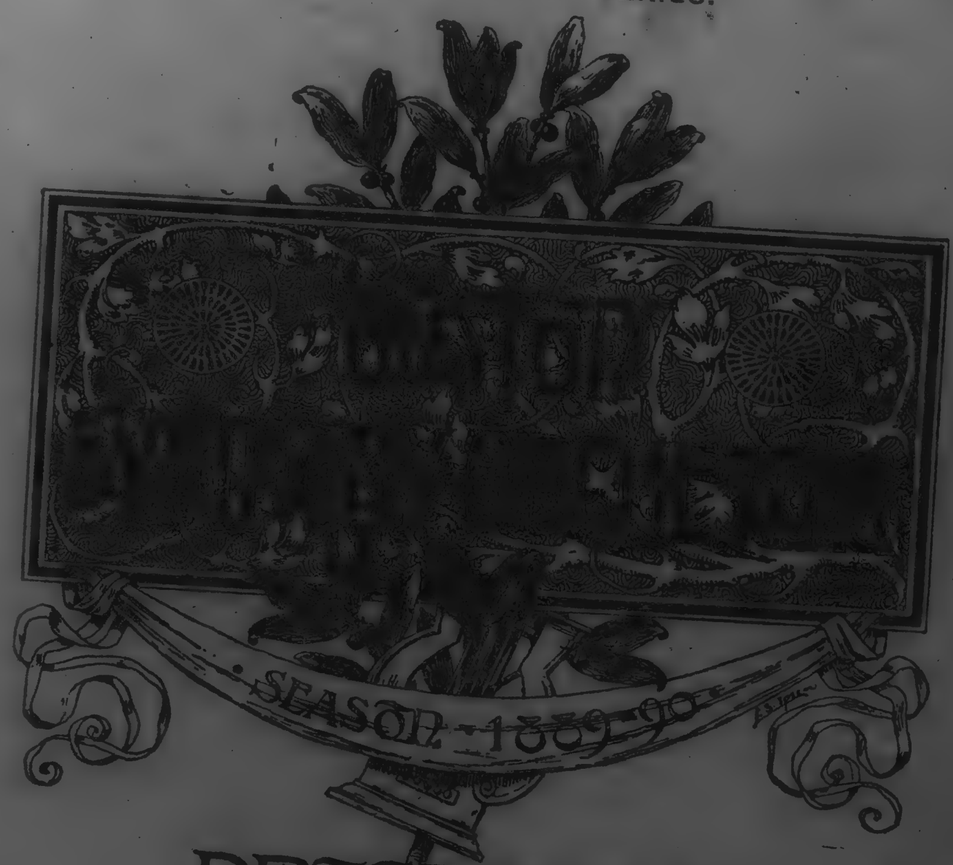
UNIVERSITY HALL, ANN ARBOR, MICH.

FRIDAY, MAY 16th, 1890,

UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE

University Musical Society.

CHORAL UNION SERIES.



PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

[146]

is a funeral march. The third, tempi di mazurka, is written for divided strings and triangle. The fourth, alla marcia e molto marcato, a somewhat grotesque march, is scored for full modern orchestra, and pictures the imps tormenting Peer Gynt.

WAGNER, - - - Vorspiel, "Die Meistersinger."

[Analytical notes abridged from Mr. G. H. WILSON, Boston.]

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

Central Music Hall, - - Chicago.

Wednesday Evening, May 14.

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

Tickets on Sale at Central Music Hall, on and after Saturday, May 10.

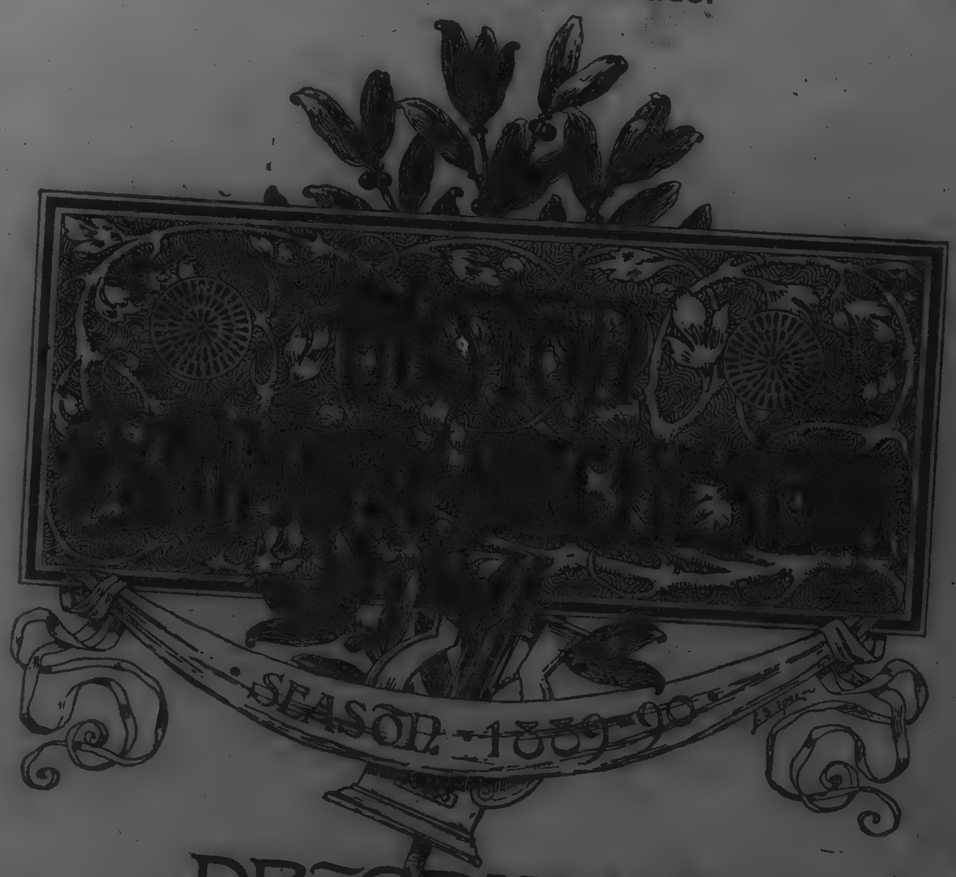
UNIVERSITY HALL, ANN ARBOR, MICH.

FRIDAY, MAY 16th, 1890,

UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE

University Musical Society.

CHORAL UNION SERIES.



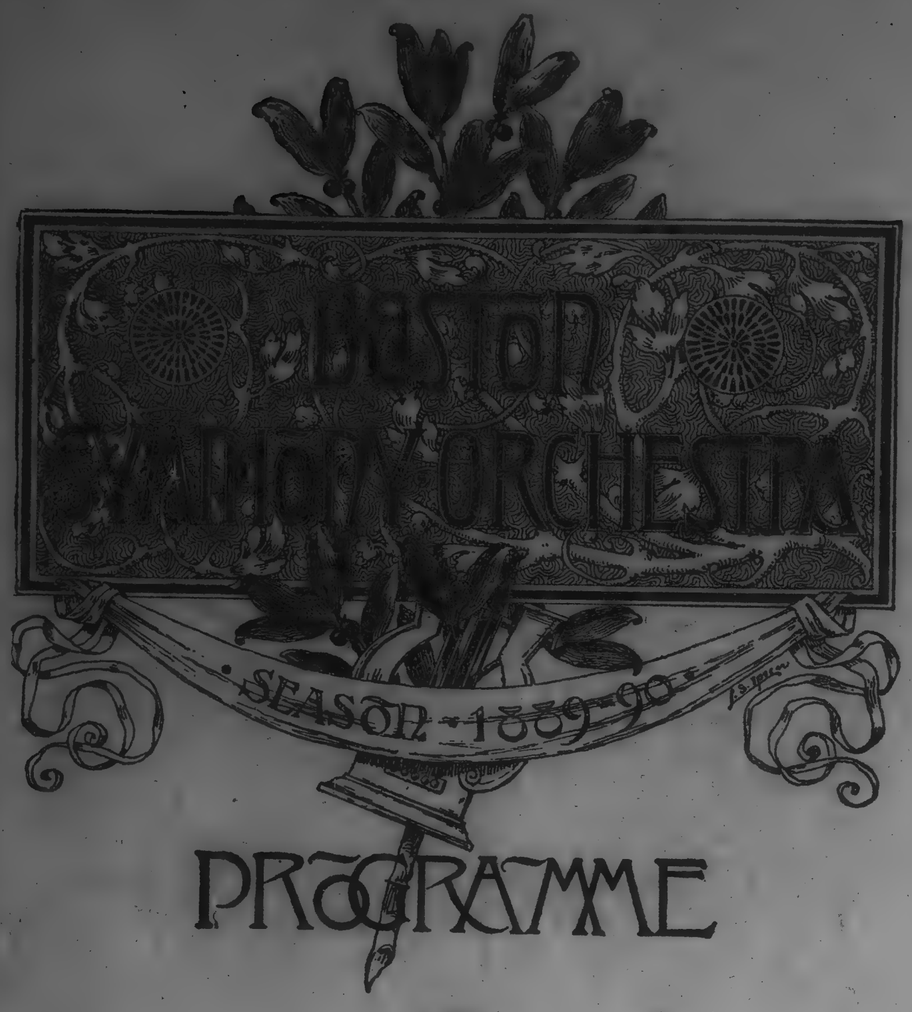
PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

Miner's Grand Theatre, - Detroit.

Saturday Evening, May 17.

FOURTH TOUR.



PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

—All the Music performed by the—

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,

THE

MOZART CLUB

OF PITTSBURGH, PA.

Mr. J. P. McCOLLUM, - - - - Conductor.

Founded, A. D. 1878. Incorporated, Dec. 22, A. D. 1886.

AND THE

BOSTON

Symphony Orchestra,

(60 PERFORMERS.)

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

Twelfth Season. Fourth and Fifth Concerts.

▲▲ OLD CITY HALL, ▲▲

Monday and Tuesday Evenings, May 19 and 20, 1890,

8.15 O'CLOCK.

PRESS OF WM. G. JOHNSTON & CO., PENN AVE. AND NINTH ST.

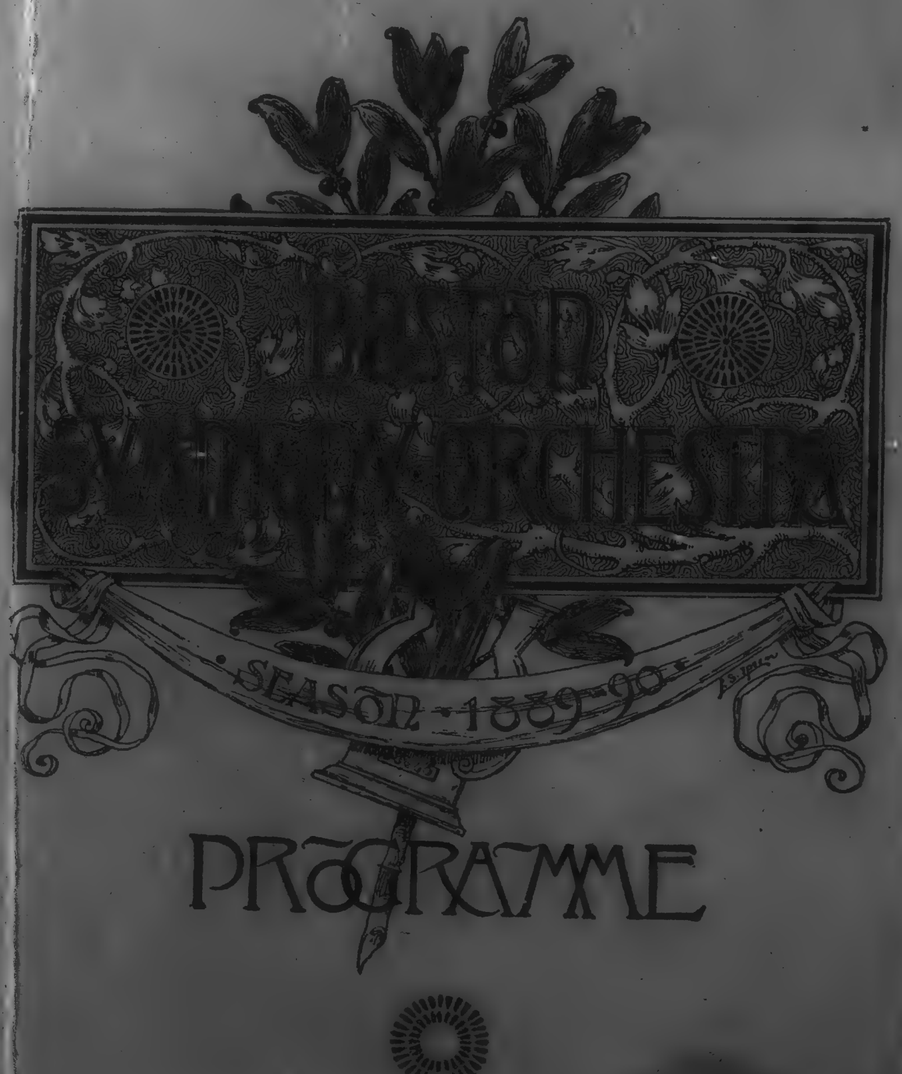
STAR COURSE

SEASON 1889-90.

MUSIC HALL, - - BUFFALO.

Thursday Evening, May 22.

FOURTH TOUR.



PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

Miner's Grand Theatre, - Detroit.

Saturday Evening, May 17.

FOURTH TOUR.

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

—All the Music performed by the—
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,

STAR COURSE

SEASON 1889-90.

THE

MOZART CLUB

OF PITTSBURGH, PA.

Mr. J. P. McCOLLUM, - - - - - Conductor.

Founded, A. D. 1878. Incorporated, Dec. 22, A. D. 1886.

AND THE

BOSTON
Symphony Orchestra,

(60 PERFORMERS.)

Mr. ARTHUR NIKISCH, Conductor.

Twelfth Season. Fourth and Fifth Concerts.

▲▲ OLD CITY HALL, ▲▲

Monday and Tuesday Evenings, May 19 and 20, 1890,

8.15 O'CLOCK.

PRESS OF WM. G. JOHNSTON & CO., PENN AVE. AND NINTH ST.

MUSIC HALL, - - BUFFALO.

Thursday Evening, May 22.

FOURTH TOUR.

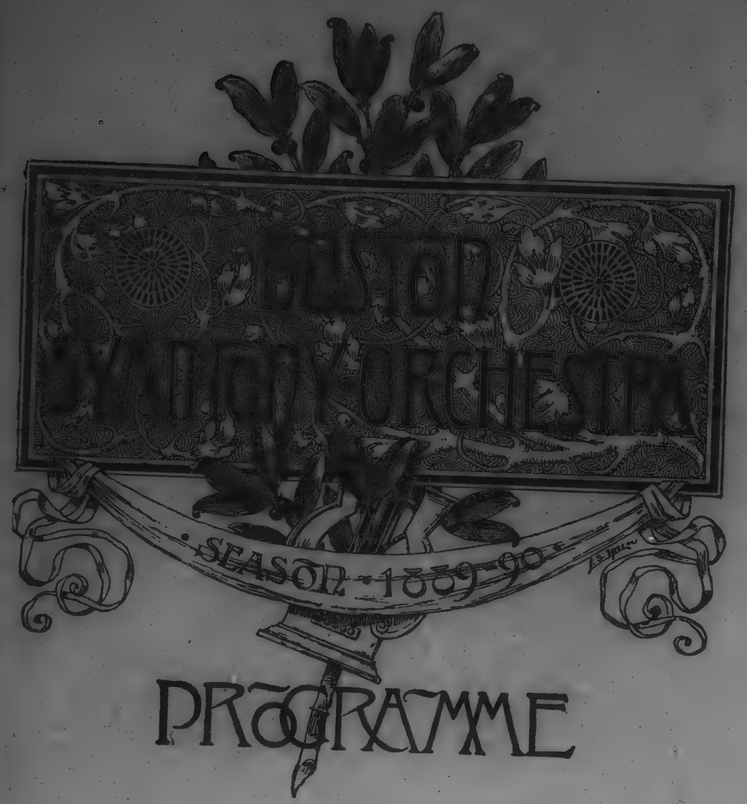
PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

Miner's Grand Theatre, - Detroit.

Saturday Evening, May 17.

FOURTH TOUR.



PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

—All the Music performed by the—

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,

The Mozart Club.

Officers.

THOS. C. LAZEAR,
President.

E. H. DERMITT,
First Vice President.

W. I. MUSTIN,
Second Vice President.

J. BOYD DUFF,
Secretary.

WM. H. CORLE,
Treasurer.

A. H. BROCKETT,
Librarian of Chorus.

W. J. McELROY,
Librarian of Orchestra.

Executive Committee.

D. M. BULLOCK,
A. H. BROCKETT,
WM. H. CORLE,
E. H. DERMITT,
J. BOYD DUFF,
THOS. C. LAZEAR,
W. C. LYNE,
THOS. NEELY,
A. S. SIMPSON.
W. J. McELROY,
W. M. LEATHERMAN,
E. S. MORROW,
W. I. MUSTIN,

Music Committee.

C. C. MELLOR,
E. H. DERMITT,
J. BOYD DUFF,
W. B. EDWARDS,
PAUL ZIMMERMAN.

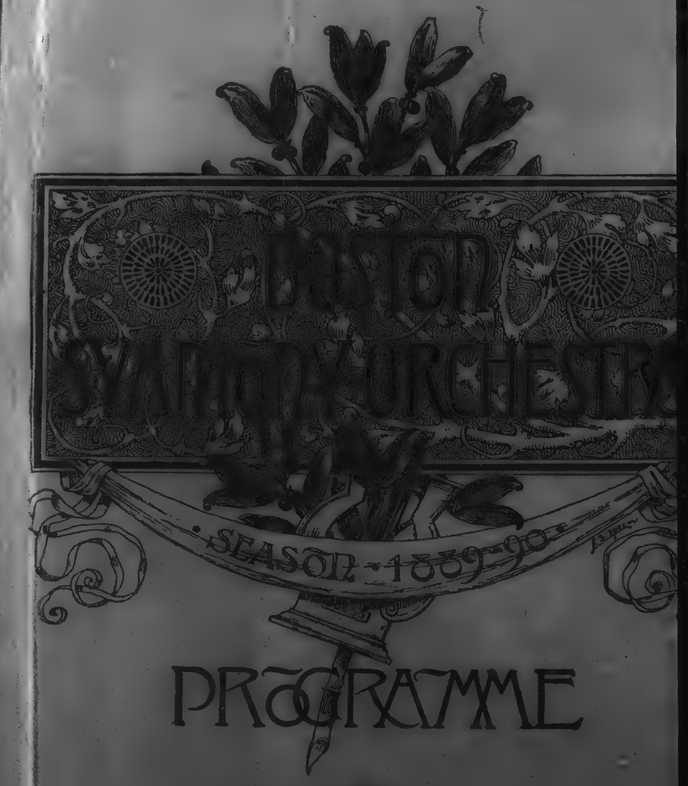
CONDUCTOR,
JAS. P. McCOLLUM.

PIANIST,
JOHN PRICHARD.

MUSIC HALL, - - BUFFA

Thursday Evening, May 22.

FOURTH TOUR.



PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

Miner's Grand Theatre, - Detroit.

Saturday Evening, May 17.

FOURTH TOUR.

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

—All the Music performed by the—

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,

Active Members.

CHORUS.

SOPRANOS.

Acheson, Miss Aggie
Alter, Miss Edna
Angell, Miss Carrie M.
Ashe, Miss Blanche
Ashe, Miss Luella
Bailey, Miss Eliza M.
Barbour, Miss Kate
Bergman, Miss Maggie
Brodie, Miss Laura E.
Carey, Mrs. J.
Chalinor, Mrs. Amy
Chase, Miss Annie H.
Corey, Miss Lizzie A.
Cowell, Miss Orina
Daugherty, Miss Cora
Duff, Miss Ella J.
Evans, Miss Jennie A.
Freeland, Miss A. B.
Freidel, Miss Rosa
Fricke, Mrs. F. G.
Getty, Miss Mary
Gillespie, Miss Lulu
Gray, Miss Jennie
Hallett, Miss Fannie
Harding, Miss J. M.
Hein, Mrs. M.
Heyl, Mrs. Lou
Henkler, Mrs. Mathilde
Hinkley, Mrs. C. M.
Holmes, Miss Mary G.
Horne, Miss Birdie
Horner, Miss Sadie
Kiefer, Mrs. F. W.
Langenheim, Miss Kate
Leonard, Miss Sibbie C.
Loomis, Miss Louise
Lyle, Miss Lizzie C.
McDonald, Mrs. J. S.
McGinness, Mrs. Mary
McGinness, Miss Belle
McGonnigle, Mrs. R. D.
Miller, Miss Grace
Neeld, Miss Jean
Neeld, Miss Ora
Orr, Miss Jennie M.
Pennington, Miss May
Reed, Miss Emma
Reed, Miss Lizzie
Reed, Miss Mattie
Reed, Miss Sadie
Reichard, Mrs. A. L.
Reilly, Mrs. P. J.
Sample, Miss Irene
Sawyer, Miss Mamie
Scandrett, Miss Adah
Singer, Miss M. K.
Stewart, Miss M. S.
Tate, Miss Cora
Taylor, Miss Ellen
Thomas, Mrs. Ada S.
Ward, Miss Kate
Weber, Miss Rosa
Westervelt, Mrs. Isa
Werner, Miss Bertha
Werner, Miss Emma Wolfe, Mrs. Emma Youngson, Miss Ella

CONTRALTOS.

Beane, Mrs. Dr.
Bohanan, Miss Bertha
Breese, Mrs. Edw.
Cartwright, Miss Sadie
Creighton, Miss Hattie
Cruikshank, Miss Lizzie
Cunningham, Miss M.
Davis, Miss Charlotte
Davis, Miss Jennie
Duff, Miss Bella F.
Eyth, Mrs. J. E.
Fraser, Miss Maggie P.
Fox, Mrs. Edward
Harris, Miss Edith Holman, Miss Emma
Hunter, Miss Blanche
Jackson, Miss Lou
Keller, Miss Helen
King, Miss C. H. M.
Kretschmar, Miss H.
Lang, Miss Emma
Laubie, Miss Nannie
Lazear, Miss Isa
Leonard, Miss Minnie
Little, Miss Kittie
McElwain, Miss Lizzie
Negley, Miss Jennie
O'Neil, Miss Elsie
Owens, Miss Levey
Ripley, Miss Abbie
Semple, Miss Ella
Smeck, Miss Etta
Swope, Mrs. O. F.
Thomas, Miss Ada
Westervelt, Miss M.
Wright, Mrs. Lida
Wurzell, Mrs. E.

TENORS.

Anderson, A. C.
Ablett, Job
Brockett, H. B.
Brown, Geo.
Cannon, Richard
Chalmers, Jas. Jr.
Corle, W. H.
Duff, J. Boyd
Davis, W. A.
Donaldson, A. R.
Donaldson, John A.
Edstrom, Ed.
Ellis, C. F.
Flannigan, W. W.
Horne, J. H.
Irwin, Fred. J.
Mustin, W. I.
McCausland, W. C.
McDonald, A. F.
McMillan, J. B.
Ramsey, W. W.
Rhinehart, C. C.
Rhinehart, E. E., Jr.
Smith, R. R.
Vogel, Jos. A.
Ward, P. A.

BASS.

Amberson, S. S.
Armor, W. G.
Bearl, F. W.
Botsford, Jas.
Breese, Edward
Brockett, A. H.
Bullock, D. M.
Campbell, R. D.
Crum, Robt. P.
Dermitt, E. H.
Fox, W. J.
Fraser, A. C.
Fuller, Edward D.
Gernert, C. W.
Gillespie, Geo.
Gross, H. B.
Guillan, Robert J.
Harris, C. F.
Hetzel, Geo.
Hibbard, J. A.
Holman, Harry
Horner, John
Kiefer, Fred. W.
Leatherman, W. M.
Lightbody, Watson
Maxwell, Harry C.
Miles, David
Neely, Thomas
Perkins, Chas. L.
Prugh, E. N.
Repp, R. M.
Ritchie, Frank W.
Rorah, C. M.
Strouss, John A.
Simpson, A. S.
Swope, O. F.
Wagner, George F.
Wigman, W. H., Jr.
Westervelt, H.
Wright, E. P. S.

HONORARY MEMBER—Dr. W. T. English.

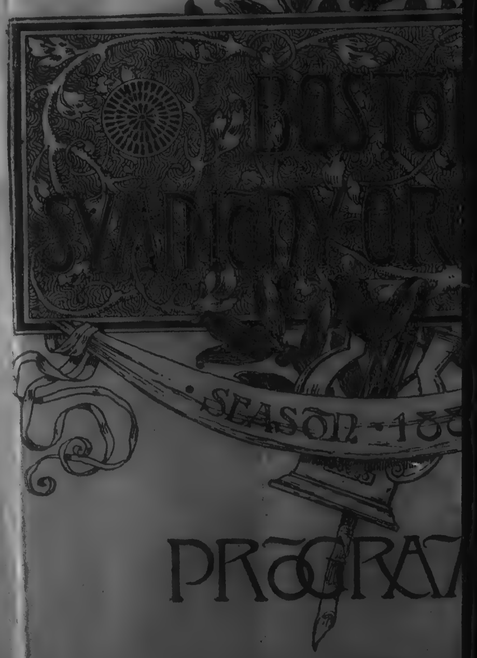
Associate Members.

Ablett, J.
Addy, John M.
Adolph, Jacob
Aiken, E. M.
Aland, J. J.
Armstrong, Frank
Arnold, J. S.
Baer, Chas. C.
Bailey, Mrs. H. J.
Baley, Howard
Barbour, Joseph
Bickel, Charles
Bindley, John
Black, John W.
Blackburn, W. W.
Blair, Geo.
Boggs, Wm. M.
Boggs & Buhl
Bonar, James
Bole, John C.
Bope, H. P.
Borntraeger, H. W.
Briggs, Chas. C.
Broadberry & Eyth
Brockett, Mrs. H. B., Jr.
Brown, Robt. B.
Buchanan, Douglass
Buchanan, J. I.
Burchfield, A. P.
Burgess, Andrew
Caldwell, John
Callow, Alex.
Campbell, Jas. J.
Carnegie, Andrew 50*
Carpenter, J. McF.
Chalfant, Geo. N.
Chambers, Jas. A. 2
Clark, Robt. P.
Clifton, D. L.
Clowes, C. A.
Coblenz, Isadore
Cowan, W. A.
Crabbe, Prof. W. R.
Cromlish, George
Cummins, A.
Dalzell, John H.
Davidson, J. N.
Davison, C. W.
Davis, Edward
Davis, R. M.
Dean, C. F.
Dean, Dr. E. W.
DeArmitt, W. P.
Dermitt, W. V.
Dick, Peter
Dickson, John N.
Dimling, John
Dinkey, A. C.
Donaldson, A. R.
Dravo, A. C.
Dripps, Thos. M.
Dunn, Wm. T.
Duncan, S. A.
Eames, A. H.
East, Fred. A.
Edeburn, W. A.
Edmundson, J. M.
Edmundson, Eli, Jr.
Edwards, W. B.
Elphinstone, Geo.
Elwood, R. D.
Ewart, F. C.
Ewart, S.
Evans, D. J.
Evans, T. D.
Faber, Wm. M., Jr.
Fass, H. C.
Faucet, Jos.
Fenderich, C. R.
Fickeinger, P. K.
Flowers, J. W.
Foerster, Ad. M.
Ford, H. P.
Ford, Wm. R.
Foringer, W. S.
Foster, Morrison
Francis, D. E.
Franks, R. A.
Fraser, R. B.
Fraser, C. D.
Freid, W. R.
Frick, H. C. 5
Frost, B.
Garner, J. L.
Geist, F. L.
Gerdes, F. W.
Getty, Jas., Jr.
Gill, S. E.
Gittings, Jos. H.
Gordon, G. B.
Goshorn, Miss V. M.
Goshorn, Miss S. A.
Graff, E. A.
Grove, John W.
Hagan, W. C.
Haines, John E.
Hallock, Dr. Wm. E.
Hamilton, S.
Hardy & Hayes
Harrison, J. H.
Hartje, Augustus
Harton, J. A.
Hawkins, James
Haworth, Jehu
Hayes, J. H.
Hays, E. G.
Heckel, C. C.
Helmold, C. W.
Hemphill, Jas.
Heineman, Otto E.
Hersh, W. M.
Hibbard, H. D.
Hill, Geo. B.
Hill, J. N.
Himmelrich, Louis
Hixon, F. M.
Hoffmann, J. M. & Co.
Holmes, A. V.
Holmes, John G.
Holdship, H. 2
Horne, Joseph 3
Horner, Dr. J. R.
Hukill, E. M. Jr.,
Hutchinson, Thos. B.
Hyndman, N. P.
Irwin, I. L.
Irwin, J. C.
Israel, Isadore
Jackson, J. R.
Jackson, E. T.
Jahn, C. F.
Jeffries, H. E.
Jenkins, Robt., Jr.
Jenkinson, Alec.
Johnston, W. G. & Co.
Johnston, Alfred
Jones, Nathan
Kaufman, Morris
Keech, W. H.
Kelly, W. M.
Kenold, Geo. T.
Kessler, John
King, Wm. D.
Kirkpatrick, W. R.
Kitzmiller, E. A.
Kleber & Bro.
Kochendorfer, John
Kuhn, W. S.
Lane, F. C.
Latimer, A. C.
Latimer, R. S.
Laubie, James
Laughlin, Jas., Jr.
Lazear, Thomas C.
Lechner & Schoenb'rger
Lepper, Wm.
Levi, Edward E.
Lewis, J. L.
Lincoln, Wm. E.
Lindsay, H. J.
Lloyd, T. H.
Lockhart, Jas. H.
Loeffler, Wm.
Long, H. M.
Long, Albert M.
Lovejoy, F. T. F.
Lowrie, W. C.
Luty, Adolphus E.
Lyne, W. C.
Lytle, J. Warren
Mackintosh, Miss M.
Marshall, Geo. F.
Marshall, J. L.
Marshall, Thomas
Marthens, Allen
Martin, Jas.
Marvin, S. S.
Mayer, Rhinehart
McCance, R. L.
McClurg, John
McCrea, John P.
McCreery, John H.
McCullough, Wm.
McDowell, Heber
McElroy, Robt. N.
McInnes, Alex.
McKee, Fred. W.
McKillips, C. E.
McNulty, W. A.
Mead, Morris W.
Megrew, George
Mellon, R. B. 2
Mellon, Andrew
Mellor, C. C.
Metzgar, Henry
Miles, Geo. K.
Miller, J. M.
Miller, Wilson
Miller, J. J.
Milligan, Rev. J. R. J.
Milnor, Chas. G.
Mitchell, W. S.
Moffatt, Sam'l J.
Montooth, C. C.
Moore, S. E.
Moore, Frank E.
Moore, L. S.
Moore, Frank
Moreland, Mrs. W. C.
Moreland, A. M.
Morgan, Edward C.
Morrow, John
Morrow, E. S.
Naughton, J. P.
Nicholson, J. D.
Neereamer, Chas. C.
Nobbs, J. B.
Oehmler, R. C.
Oliver, Geo. T.
Oliver, H. W.
Oliver, G. B.
Orr, Chas. P.
Orr, Robt. A.
Paden, Geo. M.
Paine, Chas.
Painter, Joseph
Painter, Mrs. A. E. W.
Parkin, Chas.
Paul, H. S.
Peacock, A. R.
Petty, R. B.
Pew, J. N.
Phillips, Bakewell
Phipps, L. C.
Pinkerton, S. S.
Pitcairn, Robt.
Pitcairn, Miss A. L.
Porter, H. K.
Possiel, Julius
Prager, G. H.
Pressly, Miss M. L.
Queen, Emmett
Rafferty, Gilbert
Rainey, R. T.
Ramsey, W. W.
Ramsey, C. C.
Reed, Chas. H.
Reed, Jas. H.
Reese, A. B.
Retter, Carl
Rese, Geo.
Richards, R. M.
Ringwalt, H. L.
Roberts, E. P. & Sons.
Robinson, J. F.
Rose, Hanson W.
Rosenbaum, Max
Rossiter, Annie G.
Rowand, Mrs. A. T.
Rowand, A. T.
Sailor, A. L.
Samson, H.
Sawers, Walter O.
Scaife, O. P. 2
Scaife, Marvin
Scandrett, R. B.
Schmertz, W. E., Jr.
Schmertz, E. A.
Schoeneck, P. C., Jr.
Schoonmaker, Col J. M.
Schoonmaker, F. L.
Schoyer, S.
Schroeder, M.
Scott, Wm.
Scott, R. J.
Scott, John A.
Shaw, John I.

MUSIC HALL, - -

Thursday Evening,

FOURTH TOUR



PROGRAM

C. A. ELLIS, Man

F. R. COMEE, Ass't M

Shea, C. B.	Stewart, F. E.	Van Osten, G. W.	White, J. H.
Sheafer, James	Stewart, James	Walker, J. W.	White, Elmer L.
Simeral, John A.	Steifel, Chas. F.	Wallace, W. T.	Whitehead, Bishop Courtlandt
Slagle, Hon. J. F.	Stitt, John R.	Wallace, Daniel	Willard, Dr. L. H.
Slagle, John S. 2	Stone, Wm. A.	Walters, Dr. J. S.	Witherspoon, Rev. J.W.
Sloan, J. A.	Stoney, R. J., Jr.	Ward, M. R.	Wolfe, W. B.
Smith, Percy F.	Stoughton, W. R.	Watson, Mrs. E. M.	Wood, Capt. John A.
Smith, H. P.	Straub, C. L.	Webster, Beveridge	Wood, B. L. Jr.
Soule, R. H.	Sutmeyer, Henry W.	Webster, L. C.	Wood, Dr. E. A.
Speer, Chas. E.	Swearingen, C. H.	Weeks, Jos. D.	Wurzell, G. W.
Speer, J. Howard	Taylor, Daniel	Weinberg, Jas. H.	Young, Peter
Sproul, Theo.	Thaw, Benjamin	Weixel, F. J.	Zahm, James B.
Stahl, W. G.	Thomas, Dr. J. D.	Wells, A. E.	Zimmerman, Paul
Stamm, Henry	Thompson, Jas C.	Westinghouse, Geo. Jr.
Stevenson, Jas. E.	Thompson, Wm. R.	Westinghouse, Mrs. Jr.
Stevenson, R. A.	Thorne, A. M.	Westinghouse, H. H.
Stewart, Pierpont & Co.	Turner, A. M.	Weyman, B. Frank

* The figures indicate the number of memberships.

Associate membership $10 per year. The year is from June to June. Associate members are entitled to two seats for each of the FIVE REGULAR CONCERTS of the season.

ADDRESS,

THE MOZART CLUB,

703 SMITHFIELD STREET,

PITTSBURGH, PA.

Miner's Grand Theatre, - Detroit.

Saturday Evening, May 17.

FOURTH TOUR.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

SEASON 1889-90

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

—All the Music performed by the—

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,

FIRST CONCERT.

MONDAY EVENING, MAY 19th.

PART I.

✓ LISZT, - - - - - Symphonic Poem, "Les Preludes."

✓ WEBER, - - - - - - Aria from "Freischuetz."

MME. STEINBACH-JAHNS.

✓ GRIEG, - - - - - - Suite, "Peer Gynt," Op. 46.

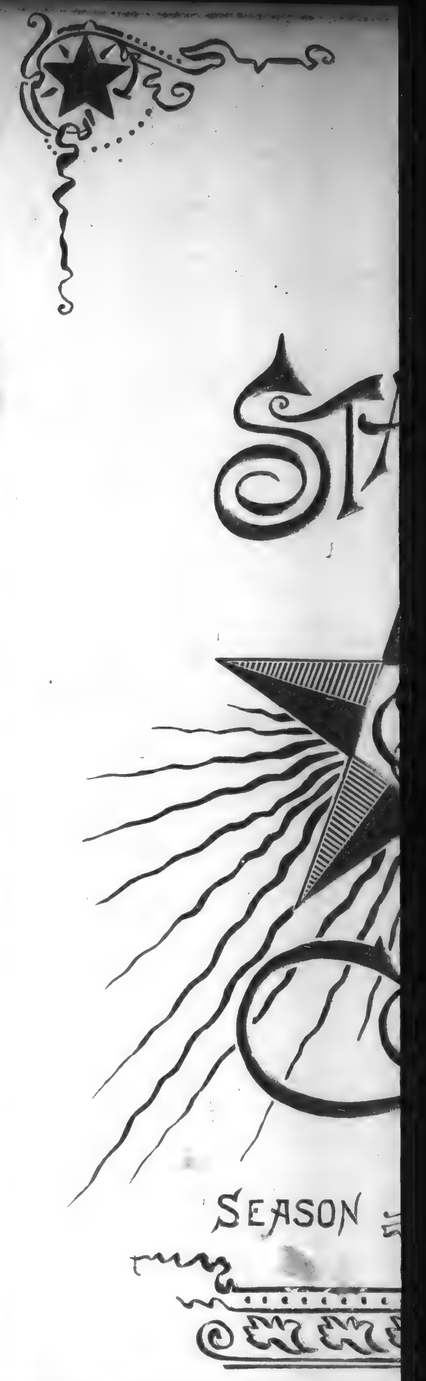
"Daybreak."
"The Death of Aase."
"Anitra's Dance."
"In the Halls of the King of the Dovre Mountains."
(The imps are chasing Peer Gynt.)

PART II.

MENDELSSOHN'S "HYMN OF PRAISE."

Mrs. M. Henkler, Miss Adah Scandrett, Mr. H. B. Brockett, Chorus and

Boston Symphony Orchestra.



MUSIC HALL, -

Thursday Evening,

FOURTH TOU

Miner's Grand Theatre, - Detroit.

Saturday Evening, May 17.

FOURTH TOUR.

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

—All the Music performed by the—

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,

A Hymn of Praise.

(Mendelssohn.)

FIRST SOPRANO, - - - - - MRS. M. HENKLER.
SECOND SOPRANO, - - - - MISS ADAH SCANDRETT.
TENOR, - - - - - - - MR. H. B. BROCKETT.

No. 1. SYMPHONY.

Maestoso con Moto—Allegro—Allegretto Agitato—Adagio religioso.

No. 2. CHORUS.

Praise ye! all things that live and breathe, praise ye the Lord. Hallelujah. Praise the Lord with lute and harp, with | glad songs let us praise Him and let all flesh praise His holy name forever.

No. 2½. SOLO (SOPRANO) AND SEMI-CHORUS.

Praise, oh my soul, thy Creator! all that is in me praise His name, ever holy! | Praise, oh my soul, thy Creator! and forget thou not the loving kindness He hath shown.

No. 3. RECITATIVE—TENOR.

Sing ye then, who thro' the Lord have been redeem'd! Whom He hath preserved in time of need, from sore affliction, from persecution, ye who did cry in the night of | bondage, all ye whom He hath helped in your trouble, sing ye then thanks to Him and glorify His goodness.

No. 4. AIR—TENOR.

Our tears He counteth in the hour of need, He sendeth in our sorrow His healing | Word: Sing ye then thanks to Him and glorify His goodness.

No. 4. CHORUS.

Sing ye then who have been redeem'd by the Lord from sore affliction, our tears He | counteth in the hour of need.

No. 5. DUETT (SOPRANI) AND CHORUS.

I waited for the Lord who inclined His ear to me and heeded my cry! Oh, well for those | whose hope is set in the Lord.

No. 6. AIR—TENOR.

The sorrows of death had compassed and closed o'er us; hell's tribulations had upon us fallen; we wandered as in the darkness of | night: then spake the Lord, awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and I will give thee light.

RECITATIVE—TENOR.

We cried from out the depths of the gloom, "Watchman, is the night far spent?" The watchman spake but this, "When the morn- | ing shall come, the night soon will follow." "If ye will ask, then return ye and enquire ye further."

No. 7. SOLO (SOPRANO) AND CHORUS.

The night, it departeth, the day cometh quickly. Then let us cast from us the | works of darkness and put on the armor of light.

No. 8. CHORAL.

To God the Lord of all
Be thanks and praise forever,
Who, when in need we call,
Denieth comfort never.
Ere infant feet can stand
His wondrous love He shows;
He holds us in his hand,
And ev'ry good bestows.

To God the Father, Son
And Holy Ghost be given,
Praise, honor, glory, power.
In highest realms of heaven,
To God Triune be praise.
Now flees the gloomy night
From light and morning rays
And hymns shall sing His might.

No. 9. DUETT—SOPRANO AND TENOR.

Now therefore, my song shall be telling ever Thy praise, Thou living God, and grace for all the loving kindness Thou unto me hast shown. | I wander in night and deepest darkness, and my foes gather around, lo! they increase. Then call I upon the name of the Lord, and He preserveth me of His great mercy.

No. 10. CHORUS.

Ye people, bring unto the Lord worship and might,
Ye rulers, bring unto the Lord worship and might.
Ye heavens, bring unto the Lord worship and might.

All earth, too, bring unto the Lord worship and might.
Praise ye, thank ye the Lord, Praise ye the Lord and worship His Holy Name forevermore. Praise ye the Lord and magnify His name. Amen.

SECOND CONCERT.

TUESDAY EVENING, MAY 20th.

PROGRAMME.

GOLDMARK, - - - - - - Overture, "Sakuntala."

SERVAIS, - - "Fantasie Characteristique," for Violoncello.

MR. ANTON HEKKING.

ROSSINI, - - - - - - - Aria, "Cujus Animam."

MR. PAUL ZIMMERMAN.

Cujus Animam gementem
Contristantem et dolentem,
Pertransivit gladius!
O! quam tristis et afflicta,
Fiut illa benedicta
Mater unigeniti,
Quae moerebat, et dolebat,
Et tremebat, cum videbat
Nati poenas inclyti.

Through His bleeding side retreating,
See the Holy Spirit fleeting
Winged for mercy to the skies!
Oh! how sadly broken hearted,
As her only son's departed,
Must her mother's feeling be,
As she sees with tearful wonder,
Cruel death part them asunder,
Though it sets all mankind free.

SCHUMANN, - - - Symphony No. 4 in D Minor, Op. 120.

Introduction (Adagio non troppo.)
Allegro.
Romance (Adagio non troppo.)
Scherzo.
Finale (Allegro.)

SONGS WITH PIANO.

(a) ROBERT FRANZ—"Widmung."
(b) RUBINSTEIN—"Es blinkt der Thau."
(c) SCHUMANN—"Auftraege."
(d) GOLDMARK—"Die Quelle."

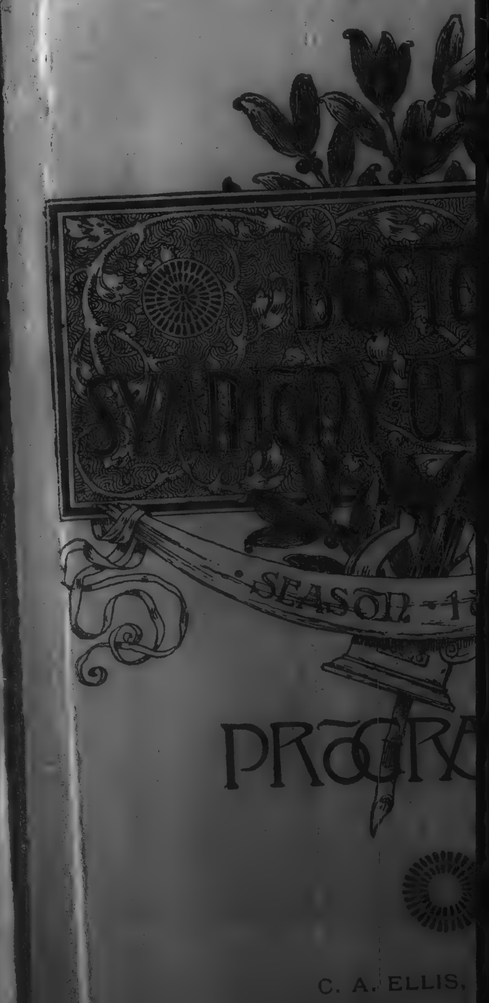
MME. STEINBACH-JAHNS.

WAGNER, - - - - - Overture, "Tannhaeuser."

MUSIC HALL, -

Thursday Evening

FOURTH TOU



Miner's Grand Theatre, - Detroit.

Saturday Evening, May 17.

FOURTH TOUR.

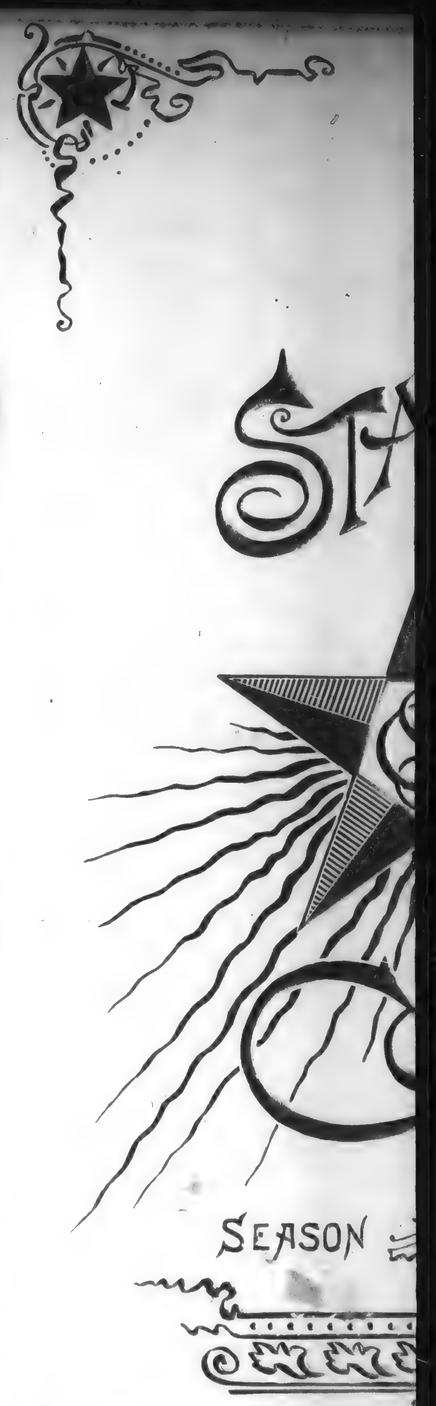
PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

—All the Music performed by the—

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,



MUSIC HALL, -

Thursday Evening,

FOURTH TOU

C. A. ELLIS, M

F. R. COMEE, Ass't

❋ Programme. ❋

HYMN OP. 36, (In Constant Order,) - - Weber.

For Solo Voices, Chorus and Orchestra.

MRS. WM. B. WOLFE, Soprano, MR. PAUL ZIMMERMAN, Tenor,
MISS MAGGIE FRASER, Contralto, MR. JOHN A. STROUSS, Bass.

SOLI AND CHORUS—("In Constant Order Works the Lord.")

In constant order works the Lord;
His several wonders all, by rule and in their times
Appear, when called by His eternal power.
Can things create urge onward their Creator?
When he commands can they delay Him?

Tenor:
The morn awakes,
The noonday glows,
The light declines;
Then follows restful ev'ning.

Bass:
The winter yields,
The spring returns,
The autumn comes,
The fruitage swells and ripens.

Soprano:
The maiden blooms,
A spring is hers.
Her bloom decays;
Transformed is life thereafter.

Chorus:
Can things create urge onward their Creator?

Tenor and Bass:
At day break assemble the menacing clouds
To master the sun as he rises.

Soprano and Contralto:
The buds shrivel up with the chill of the rime;
The maiden of roughness and strength is afraid.

Bass:
Yet stands His appointment.

Quartett:
The day has its course,
The rime dissolves and love prevails.

Chorus:
When He commandeth who can stay Him?
In constant order works the Lord.

RECITATIVE—(The Gloominess of Night.)

Bass:
The gloominess of night will hang on the soul and hide the light of God.
Distress will weigh on tender spirits, and weaken pious trust in God:
So terror will seize on a people, and break their growing manhood down.
The pure and good, the true and just, with evil must to battle go; yet shall in battle conquer and endure.

CHORAL—("Then Let me Learn to Trust Thee.")

Then let me learn to trust Thee,
On Thee in faith to wait,
To fear not, and to sin not,
How sore soe'er my strait.
Not now, and not to-morrow,
But when it pleases Thee,
O Father, comes salvation
To all men, yea to me.

SOLI AND CHORUS—("All Praise to God.")

All praise to God,
Whose wondrous power,
His children guides in danger's hour,
Whose work though men to mar it strive,
In ageless glory shall survive.
Uplift the heart, the spirit raise,
To Him whom light and darkness praise.

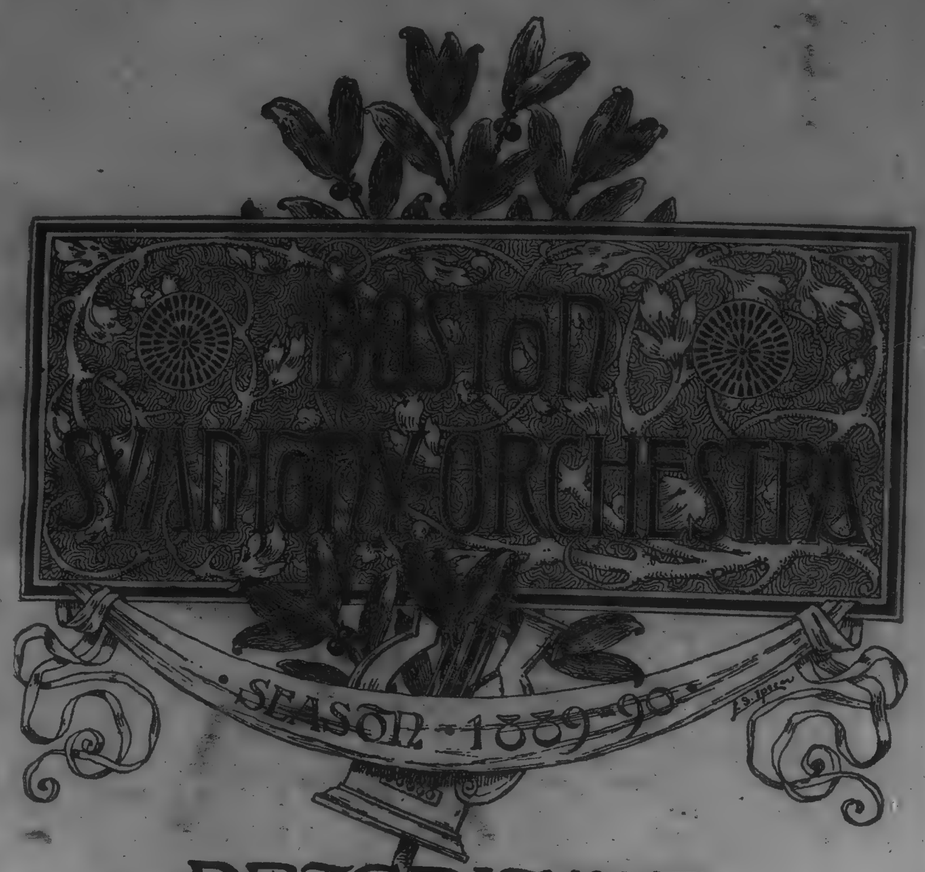
FUGUE—(When Storms are Loud.)

When storms are loud, when waves are strong,
Then thank Him as in festal song;
Thy joyful thanks to Him belong.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

BLEECKER HALL, - ALBANY.

Friday, May 23, 1890.



PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

The MOZART CLUB,

MR. J. P. McCOLLUM, CONDUCTOR.

AND THE

BOSTON
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, CONDUCTOR.

TUESDAY EVENING, MAY 20TH.

PROGRAMME.

GOLDMARK.—Overture, "Sakuntala."

SERVAIS.—"Fantasie Characteristique" for Violoncello.

MR. ANTON HEKKING.

MOZART.—Aria from the Opera "Entfuehrung aus dem Serail"

MADAM STEINBACH-JAHNS.

SCHUMANN.—Symphony No. 4 in D Minor, Op. 120.

Introduction (adagio non troppo).
Allegro.
Romance (adagio non troppo).
Scherzo.
Finale (allegro).

DEMERSSEMAN.—Fantasie for Flute.

MONSIEUR CHARLES MOLÈ.

WAGNER.—Overture "Tannhaeuser."

WEBER.—Hymn, "In Constant Order" Op. 36.

MRS. W. B. WOLFE, SOPRANO.
MISS MAGGIE P. FRASER, CONTRALTO.
MR. JOS. A. VOGEL, TENOR.
MR. JNO. A. STROUSS, BASSO.

CHORUS AND BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

See Libretto for words and other interesting matter.

Chicago Tribune

Boston Sunday Globe.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGES.

SUNDAY, JUNE 8, 1890.

There are to be no summer "popular" concerts this year in Music Hall, much to the regret of many who have enoyed these timely musical offerings in seasons past. In deciding adversely to the petition for their continuance, the commissioners recognized, of course, the high character of the entertainments so successfully directed by C. A. Ellis, as well as the exceptionally first-class patrons, but it was thought to be unfair to accord special privileges for a few months, while denying numerous requests for similar licenses for a year's term. "All the same," the discontinuance of these concerts will be cause for great regret to a multitude of people.

Gazette

SUNDAY MORNING EDITION

The public are to be deprived, this year, of the promenade concerts that have been such a pleasant feature in Music Hall for the past five seasons, to the stay-at-homes in Boston. A license has been refused by the Commissioners, chiefly on the ground that the Music Hall people have had a license for five years, and that the number of licenses being limited, it should go this year to somebody else. The probability is that this particular license has gone to some low, disreputable rum-shop. The result is, not only are the public deprived of a rational and harmless entertainment, but that a large number of musicians and others are thrown out of employment. If there were any possible objection to be made against these concerts, there would be some excuse for refusing the license, but as none is made except that given above, the course of the authorities is an outrage on common sense, and a thick-headed misuse of power.

— Mr. Ellis, the gentlemanly and handsome advance agent for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, made many friends during his brief stay in Buffalo. If one-half the companies which visit this city would see to it that their agents are what they should be, their shows would often receive better attention from the press and the public. Now and then I meet an advance agent of Mr. Ellis's calibre, and that is one who knows his business and does not try to impress you with his own importance. Advance agents, like a good many others, are born, not cut for their business. Whenever Mr. Ellis deigns to visit Buffalo, he will be a welcome guest. The Boston Symphony is to be congratulated in having so enterprising and faithful a worker.—Buffalo Times.

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, JUNE 8, 1890.

MUSICAL MATTERS.

The Promenades at Music Hall Finally Abandoned.

The annual season of promenade concerts at Music Hall has finally been abandoned, and the stay-at-homes, who have found so much pleasure in these summer night enterments, will be deprived of one of the most rational amusement enterprises known in local annals. The cause of the discontinuance of these concerts, after five successively prosperous seasons, lies in the refusal of the board of police commissioners to issue the license by which the concerts could be conducted as in former years, and no action of the board could have caused more surprise or regret to the patrons of the promenades than this. No change has taken place in the membership of the board, and no objection was put forward against the conduct of the concerts, so that Manager Ellis, who has conducted the promenades ever since they became a feature of the summer amusements of the city, was amply justified in assuming that the concerts would again be permitted this season. The action of the board is undoubtedly based upon a careful consideration of the relative rights of individuals, but the discontinuance of these concerts will have an effect upon this city as a musical centre which can hardly be overestimated. The "Music Hall Promenades" have come to be known all over the country as ideal summer night entertainments, and the fact that such concerts could be maintained here with perfect propriety, and be attended by the best classes of amusement patrons, has had much to do with the efforts in other cities to sustain similar concerts during the summer months. The commissioners have in former seasons expressed their entire satisfaction with the management of the promenades, and Manager Ellis has been the recipient of many compliments from those familiar with the amusement resorts of both continents upon the uniform success which has attended all departments of these concerts. By the action of the commissioners a half-hundred of the best orchestral players of Boston have been compelled to seek employment elsewhere during the summer season, and thousands of Boston residents are deprived of a rational and pleasing summer evening resort. All the plans made for the season and the orchestral novelties secured for the promenade programmes are rendered valueless, and Boston is again made an admirable subject for the criticisms which have so frequently been made upon the ultra conservative characteristics of its citizens.

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, JUNE 10.

NO "POPS" THIS SUMMER.

The action of the licensing commissioners in refusing to give a license to Music Hall for the popular summer concert season is the subject of general and earnest complaint. It is nothing short of a popular grievance to deprive Boston of its summer "pops." Only a percentage of the people can get away from the city during the heated term, and to the scores of thousands who remain here all summer long the excellent entertainments provided by these performances of the best class of music at low prices, with a chance to promenade and enjoy light refreshments, were a boon indeed. The police commissioners have incurred a heavy burden of popular disfavor by withholding the necessary license to enable the Music Hall "pops" to be resumed this season. Boston will lay it up against them more than anything else they have done or left undone. It is a serious thing to interfere with the favorite amusements of this big city. We advise the police commissioners in all friendliness to think it over, and reconsider their action in this matter. They cannot afford to offend the great mass of Bostonians—to say nothing of the suburbans—by suppressing their Music Hall "pops."

All Boston is annoyed at the prospect of having no Music Hall "pops" this summer.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A very large audience attended the only concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Central Music Hall Wednesday evening. Mr. Arthur Nikisch conducted and words of greatest praise must be freely awarded him. He has, in a marked degree, the varied qualifications that go to make up the accomplished director—appreciation, feeling and a wonderful memory. He conducted the intricate orchestral score entirely without notes and in his piano accompaniments to the vocalist also played without notes. The benefits of such a memory in a conductor can readily be understood. The programme was as follows:

Symphonic Poem, "Les Preludes".....Liszt
Aria from "Freischuetz".....Weber
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Concerto for Pianoforte, F minor.....Chopin
Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler.
Suite, "Peer Gynt," Op. 46.....Grieg
"Daybreak."
"The Death of Aase"
"Anitra's Dance."
"In the Halls of the King of the Dovre Mountains."
(The imps are chasing Peer Gynt.)
a, "Auftraege".....Schumann
b, "Sehnsucht".....Nikisch
c, "Die Quelle".....Goldmark
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Symphony No. 4, in D minor, Op. 120.....Schumann

The orchestra throughout did magnificent work. The volume of tone was glorious and not too brassy and the shading was as beautifully done as though by one artist. Mr. Nikisch's reading of the score in the ever-popular "symphonic poem" was a trifle different from what we have been accustomed to, and was an improvement. The orchestra did great work and Mr. Nikisch stands pre-eminent as a conductor. The audience appreciated and very liberally applauded the fine playing.

Mme. Steinbach-Jahns is not a great singer. She has a large voice that has the peculiarity of apparently being "off the key" even while it is not. She has expression, but a Chicago artist who didn't do better work than she did would receive a severe scoring at the hands of the critics.

Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, the pianiste, played a Chopin number.

[148]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

BLEECKER HALL, - ALBANY.

Friday, May 23, 1890.

PROGRAMME

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

The MOZART CLUB,

MR. J. P. McCOLLUM, CONDUCTOR.

AND THE

BOSTON
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH, CONDUCTOR.

TUESDAY EVENING, MAY 20TH.

PROGRAMME.

GOLDMARK.—Overture. "Sakuntala."

SERVAIS.—"Fantasie Characteristique" for Violoncello.
MR. ANTON HEKKING.

MOZART.—Aria from the Opera "Entfuehrung aus dem Serail"
MADAM STEINBACH-JAHNS.

SCHUMANN.—Symphony No. 4 in D Minor, Op. 120.
Introduction (adagio non troppo).
Allegro.
Romance (adagio non troppo).
Scherzo.
Finale (allegro).

DEMERSSEMAN.—Fantasie for Flute.
MONSIEUR CHARLES MOLÈ.

WAGNER.—Overture "Tannhaeuser."

WEBER.—Hymn, "In Constant Order" Op. 36.
MRS. W. B. WOLFE, SOPRANO.
MISS MAGGIE P. FRASER, CONTRALTO.
MR. JOS. A. VOGEL, TENOR.
MR. JNO. A. STROUSS, BASSO.
CHORUS AND BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

See Libretto for words and other interesting matter.

Boston Sunday Globe.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGES.

SUNDAY, JUNE 8, 1890.

There are to be no summer "popular" concerts this year in Music Hall, much to the regret of many who have enjoyed these timely musical offerings in seasons past. In deciding adversely to the petition for their continuance, the commissioners recognized, of course, the high character of the entertainments so successfully directed by C. A. Ellis, as well as the exceptionally first-class patrons, but it was thought to be unfair to accord special privileges for a few months, while denying numerous requests for similar licenses for a year's term. "All the same," the discontinuance of these concerts will be cause for great regret to a multitude of people.

Gazette

SUNDAY MORNING EDITION

The public are to be deprived, this year, of the promenade concerts that have been such a pleasant feature in Music Hall for the past five seasons, to the stay-at-homes in Boston. A license has been refused by the Commissioners, chiefly on the ground that the Music Hall people have had a license for five years, and that the number of licenses being limited, it should go this year to somebody else. The probability is that this particular license has gone to some low, disreputable rum-shop. The result is, not only are the public deprived of a rational and harmless entertainment, but that a large number of musicians and others are thrown out of employment. If there were any possible objection to be made against these concerts, there would be some excuse for refusing the license, but as none is made except that given above, the course of the authorities is an outrage on common sense, and a thick-headed misuse of power.

— Mr. Ellis, the gentlemanly and handsome advance agent for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, made many friends during his brief stay in Buffalo. If one-half the companies which visit this city would see to it that their agents are what they should be, their shows would often receive better attention from the press and the public. Now and then I meet an advance agent of Mr. Ellis's calibre, and that is one who knows his business and does not try to impress you with his own importance. Advance agents, like a good many others, are born, not cut for their business. Whenever Mr. Ellis deigns to visit Buffalo, he will be a welcome guest. The Boston Symphony is to be congratulated in having so enterprising and faithful a worker.—Buffalo Times.

SUNDAY HERALD.

BOSTON, JUNE 8, 1890.

MUSICAL MATTERS.

The Promenades at Music Hall Finally Abandoned.

The annual season of promenade concerts at Music Hall has finally been abandoned, and the stay-at-homes, who have found so much pleasure in these summer night entertainments, will be deprived of one of the most rational amusement enterprises known in local annals. The cause of the discontinuance of these concerts, after five successively prosperous seasons, lies in the refusal of the board of police commissioners to issue the license by which the concerts could be conducted as in former years, and no action of the board could have caused more surprise or regret to the patrons of the promenades than this. No change has taken place in the membership of the board, and no objection was put forward against the conduct of the concerts, so that Manager Ellis, who has conducted the promenades ever since they became a feature of the summer amusements of the city, was amply justified in assuming that the concerts would again be permitted this season. The action of the board is undoubtedly based upon a careful consideration of the relative rights of individuals, but the discontinuance of these concerts will have an effect upon this city as a musical centre which can hardly be overestimated. The "Music Hall Promenades" have come to be known all over the country as ideal summer night entertainments, and the fact that such concerts could be maintained here with perfect propriety, and be attended by the best classes of amusement patrons, has had much to do with the efforts in other cities to sustain similar concerts during the summer months. The commissioners have in former seasons expressed their entire satisfaction with the management of the promenades, and Manager Ellis has been the recipient of many compliments from those familiar with the amusement resorts of both continents upon the uniform success which has attended all departments of these concerts. By the action of the commissioners a half-hundred of the best orchestral players of Boston have been compelled to seek employment elsewhere during the summer season, and thousands of Boston residents are deprived of a rational and pleasing summer evening resort. All the plans made for the season and the orchestral novelties secured for the promenade programmes are rendered valueless, and Boston is again made an admirable subject for the criticisms which have so frequently been made upon the ultra conservative characteristics of its citizens.

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, JUNE 10.

NO "POPS" THIS SUMMER.

The action of the licensing commissioners in refusing to give a license to Music Hall for the popular summer concert season is the subject of general and earnest complaint. It is nothing short of a popular grievance to deprive Boston of its summer "pops." Only a percentage of the people can get away from the city during the heated term, and to the scores of thousands who remain here all summer long the excellent entertainments provided by these performances of the best class of music at low prices, with a chance to promenade and enjoy light refreshments, were a boon indeed. The police commissioners have incurred a heavy burden of popular disfavor by withholding the necessary license to enable the Music Hall "pops" to be resumed this season. Boston will lay it up against them more than anything else they have done or left undone. It is a serious thing to interfere with the favorite amusements of this big city. We advise the police commissioners in all friendliness to think it over, and reconsider their action in this matter. They cannot afford to offend the great mass of Bostonians—to say nothing of the suburbans—by suppressing their Music Hall "pops."

All Boston is annoyed at the prospect of having no Music Hall "pops" this summer.

Chicago Inter-Ocean

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A very large audience attended the only concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Central Music Hall Wednesday evening. Mr. Arthur Nikisch conducted and words of greatest praise must be freely awarded him. He has, in a marked degree, the varied qualifications that go to make up the accomplished director—appreciation, feeling and a wonderful memory. He conducted the intricate orchestral score entirely without notes and in his piano accompaniments to the vocalist also played without notes. The benefits of such a memory in a conductor can readily be understood. The programme was as follows:

Symphonic Poem, "Les Preludes".....Liszt
Aria from "Freischuetz".....Weber
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Concerto for Pianoforte, F minor.....Chopin
Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler.
Suite, "Peer Gynt," Op. 46.....Grieg
"Daybreak."
"The Death of Aase"
"Anitra's Dance."
"In the Halls of the King of the Dovre Mountains."
(The imps are chasing Peer Gynt.)
a, "Auftraege".....Schumann
b, "Sehnsucht".....Nikisch
c, "Die Quelle".....Goldmark
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Symphony No. 4, in D minor, Op. 120.....Schumann

The orchestra throughout did magnificent work. The volume of tone was glorious and not too brassy and the shading was as beautifully done as though by one artist. Mr. Nikisch's reading of the score in the ever-popular "symphonic poem" was a trifle different from what we have been accustomed to, and was an improvement. The orchestra did great work and Mr. Nikisch stands pre-eminent as a conductor. The audience appreciated and very liberally applauded the fine playing.

Mme. Steinbach-Jahns is not a great singer. She has a large voice that has the peculiarity of apparently being "off the key" even while it is not. She has expression, but a Chicago artist who didn't do better work than she did would receive a severe scoring at the hands of the critics.

Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, the pianiste, played a Chopin number.

[148]

Times-Albany, N. Y.

Date 5/24.

S. E. 12 T

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Boston's Great Orchestra at Harmanus Bleecker Hall.

For once Albany has been given an idea of what is approved by the high musical culture of Boston—a concert by the Boston symphony orchestra. Symphony concerts are as common in Boston as are base ball matches in Albany. Years ago the subscription concerts of the Harvard Musical association, in Music hall, which holds 3,000 persons, filled that great building every afternoon on which they were given. The Bostonese are brought up on symphonies, and any such organization to obtain patronage there, must be of an exceptionally high order. Even Thomas's orchestra is accepted with some distrust. But the symphony orchestra is one of Boston's pet institutions, and since it has come under the leadership of Arthur Nikisch, it has risen to higher favor than ever. It is unquestionably a magnificent combination, one which for its object has no equal in this country.

The concert last evening was one of the most enjoyable, so far as the instrumental portion was concerned, ever given in Albany. The vocalist, Madame Steinbach-Jahns, although her execution is good, does not possess a very pleasing voice, and did not make a good impression. The orchestra, however, was beyond all praise. Mr. Nikisch, a pale, scholarly looking man, is one of the most modest of conductors, controlling with fewer motions than any of the great leaders who are well known to the public, but the band obey his baton perfectly and no player ever manipulated an organ with quicker response or more delicate shades of expression. The program, although not long was very choice material. "Les Preludes" by Liszt is familiar through Thomas, but never was it given here with such exquisite expression as it was last evening. The Greig music, descriptive of the career of Peer Gynt of whom Ibsen wrote, was a delightful novelty in the way of Scandinavian music, by turns eloquent, pathetic, weird and fantastical. The feature of the evening was, of course, Beethoven's famous Fifth symphony in C minor, performed by an orchestra in perfect sympathy with the music of the great master. It was something with which ordinary musical critics can have very little to do except to express admiration and delight. To most people in the audience it was a revelation and they went away feeling that there were depths in orchestral effects of which before they had lived in ignorance.

Mr. Adamowski, one of the orchestra, played on the violin two movements by Saint-Saens with much skill and no little feeling.

The programs were little pamphlets, descriptive of the music, the composers, and the performers—useful, convenient, interesting and instructive.

The audience was fair, the hall being perhaps two-thirds full, many coming from Troy, where the orchestra, under another leader, played early in the season. The tour of the orchestra closed here, and the band returned to Boston. It is the desire of Manager Oliver to arrange for next season a series of concerts by this orchestra to be given at intervals of a month or so, by subscription. Nothing more desirable in the art of music could be projected.

Times Buffalo, N. Y.

Date 5/16

for the season just opening.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The great Boston Symphony Orchestra, the finest musical organization in the country, Arthur Nikisch, director, will give a concert in Music hall Thursday evening under the direction of the Buffalo Vocal society. The orchestra will be assisted by Mme. Steinbach-Johns, a noted dramatic soprano from the Liepsic Stadt theater, and Mr. Anton Hekking, the leading cellist of the orchestra.

Clipping from Commercial Buffalo NY

Date 5/15

Samuel Gillmore vs. Conrad Wolf and o... Judgment of foreclosure and sale ordered.

The Symphony Concert.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra—seventy performers—under direction of its new conductor, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, will visit Buffalo for a single concert at Music Hall on Thursday evening of next week. The excellence of this organization is well known here through previous performances, and it is unnecessary to say that the concert will be one of the leading events of the musical year. The sale of seats opens next Monday at Denton & Cottier's.

Clipping from Buffalo [illegible]

Date 5

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Lovers of music will welcome the announcement of the coming visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to give a single performance at Music Hall. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is now in its ninth year, and is the only similar organization in this country which enjoys the advantages of a permanent membership, the musicians being under contract and playing constantly together under one conductor during ten months of every year. That these exceptionally favorable conditions have been availed of in the fullest degree is shown by the unanimous judgment of the highest critical authorities, who rank the organization with the foremost orchestras of Vienna, Berlin, Leipzic and Paris. The coming engagement will introduce to the Buffalo public Mr. Arthur Nikisch, who was chosen to succeed Mr. Gericke as conductor. Mr. Nikisch, who is 35 years of age, came to Boston from Leipzic with the highest endorsement of European critics. The orchestra numbers seventy performers, and the soloists to appear are Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, dramatic soprano, late of the Leipzic Stadt Theatre, who visits America under special engagement to accompany the orchestra on its tour, and Mr. Anton Hekking, the eminent 'cellist. The concert will be given on Thursday evening, May 23d. The sale of seats opens at Denton & Cottier's on Monday, May 19th.

Clipping from Press Boston Herald

Date 5/11

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra—Tony Pastor at Whitney's.

The most important amusement event of the week will be the concert by the celebrated Boston Symphony Orchestra at Miner's Saturday evening, the 17th instant. The musicians belonging to this organization number about seventy and they are under the direction of Mr. Arthur Nikisch. It is conceded that this orchestra has established a standard of excellence never before known in this country. Mr. Nikisch, who recently succeeded Mr. Gericke as director, brought from Leipsic the warmest indorsements of the critics the public and his professional associates. So much has been written of the achievements of this famous young conductor, both in Europe and America, that his appearance will be awaited with the liveliest interest. Mr. Nikisch is a Hungarian by birth and is 35 years of age. His success during the season now drawing to a close seems to have justified the flattering accounts which preceded his arrival. He conducts without score or music stand, and his knowledge of his work seems absolute.

With the orchestra, as soloist, will appear Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, the leading lyric soprano from the Leipsic Stadt Theater, and who came to America under special engagement to accompany the orchestra on the western tour. Mme. Jahns is a woman of fine stage presence and is said to possess a voice of great beauty and remarkable compass.

Clipping from Herald, Chicago, Ill.

Date 5/11

...with a strong ... an event of unusual interest.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

In the matter of orchestral music Boston certainly stands first among the cities of this country. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which numbers seventy-five performers, is now in its ninth year and constant improvement has brought it to a standard of excellence that has given it a worldwide reputation. The coming concert by this famous orchestra, which will be given at Central Music Hall next Wednesday evening, will be looked forward to with pleasure by a host of admirers and the only opportunity of hearing it in this city should not be lost by any lover of music. An interesting feature of the concert will be the first appearance in this city of Arthur Nikisch, the gifted young Hungarian conductor, whose selection as the successor of Mr. Gericke has given so great satisfaction in Boston and other eastern cities where a series of concerts by this fine organization has become a regular feature of each musical season. The orchestra under Mr. Gericke was famed for the perfection of the strings, and if any criticism could justly be made on the methods of that splendid conductor it was the undue repression of the wind instruments. Under Mr. Nikisch, it is said that the organization has become better balanced, and while losing none of its wonderful precision, has gained much in power and effect. With the orchestra on Wednesday will appear as soloists Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, a noted Leipzic soprano, and Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, the well-known pianiste of this city.

Register, New Haven Conn.

Date 5/12

his mind is affected.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra in Peril.

ST. PAUL, Minn., May 12.—The special train on the Burlington and Northern road, bearing the Boston Symphony orchestra, was wrecked at Prescott, Wis., yesterday afternoon, and a terrible accident narrowly averted. A mile above Hastings the train ran into a handcar loaded with section hands, both going at top speed. The handcar was thrown thirty feet to one side, and three men, names unknown, instantly killed, and two others severely wounded. The special was derailed and the engine badly crippled. The passengers were roughly knocked about and more or less bruised, but none seriously injured.

Star, Washington, D. C.

Date 5/12

Stanley will be the first to stir up people against me."

MUSIC SPILLED.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra in Collision—Three Laborers Killed.

ST. PAUL, MINN., May 12.—The special train on the Burlington and Northern road, bearing the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was wrecked at Prescott, Wis., yesterday afternoon and a terrible accident narrowly averted. A mile above Hastings the train ran into a hand car loaded with section hands, both going at top speed. The hand car was thrown 30 feet to one side and three men, names unknown, instantly killed, and two others severely wounded. The special was derailed and the engine crippled. The passengers were roughly knocked about and more or less bruised, but none seriously injured. A delay of four hours occurred, and an engine sent from here brought in the train. The killed and wounded were cared for at Prescott.

Clipping from News St. Paul Dispatch

Date 5/13

Minn.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

At the People's Church on Tuesday, the 13th Inst.

The approaching concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra promises to be an immense success. Its coming has been the theme of conversation among the musicians and musical amateurs of the city for a month past. The subscription sale started off with a boom on last Thursday, boys standing in line all the day before and all Wednesday night to secure tickets for the subscribers. The advance sale for the general public begins on Monday morning at 9 o'clock at Dyer's. The programme for St. Paul has been very happily chosen. It is "popular" in character and yet contains some of the grandest of orchestral compositions. The overture to Tannhauser, the opening number, is one of Wagner's best known works and never fails to delight an audience. What must it be when played by seventy of the greatest artists of the country? The Peer Gynt Suite by Grieg is one of the most popular numbers in the repertoire of the orchestra. It was played three times in the Boston series this winter and will be played in almost every concert of the Western tour. The Mendelssohn Symphony is very showy and brilliant and forms a grand closing number.

The soloists, Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, the prima donna of the Leipsig Opera, and Mr. Timothee Adamowski, one of Boston's best violinists, are meeting with most enthusiastic receptions in Philadelphia and Baltimore, in the former city amounting to an ovation. Mme. Steinbach has a very powerful, flexible voice of wide range, and excels in operatic parts. She sings the great aria O Lovely Halls, from Tannhauser, at the St. Paul concert.

Special notice is given that the concert begins promptly at 8 o'clock, and it is earnestly requested that all be seated by that hour, as no one will be allowed to enter the church during the music.

Journal

Date 5/12

THE EVENT OF YEARS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Performance Will Be a Great Success.

CHAT WITH HERR ARTHUR NIKISCH

The Program Will Be Popular as Well as Pleasing—An Addition to the Previously Published Numbers.

The financial success of the Boston Symphony Orchestra performance at the coliseum tonight is assured. The social element in the affair is such that it is bound to be one of the most fashionable events in the history of the city, and the musical portion of the occasion is of such a splendid quality that it promises to be an unqualified success in all particulars.

The orchestra with Herr Arthur Nikisch, the leader, and Mme. Steinback-Jahns, arrived in Minneapolis last night, and the West hotel now has one of the most distinguished musical parties that it ever entertained. Herr Nikisch, in an interview, spoke in most flattering terms of the appreciation of music by the people of the United States, East and West. He found the people of this country even keener and more intelligent in their appreciation of classical music than he had expected. He pronounces Boston as the leading city in America in the higher orchestral music. He does not find anything of commanding importance among the works of the present younger German composers. Brahms he considers the greatest living symphonic composer, while he places Wagner alone in his magnificent and sublime operatic conceptions.

"There are many of the pleasing composers whose works are important," said he, "but the classic compositions, the works that grow on you with every hearing, are very scarce. The lighter forms are catchy at first but soon lose their charm, whereas the genuine classics, from even being repellant in some cases, grow more and more into the heart and give it some of the strength of the character whose genius inspired its creation."

Regarding his work in orchestra, he said whenever he undertook to conduct a work he studied it till he knew it as if it was his own composition and then he directed from memory, when every one in the orchestra was thoroughly imbued with his artistic conception. "And when they play with fire and zeal there is no lagging," he added.

The program tonight, while being made up from the works of the great composers, is by no means one which will not be enjoyed by those who have no special knowledge of music. It is a program that none but a deaf man could fail to enjoy. For those who desire and are able to follow the intricacies of the highest types of classical music there is ample scope, and those who are most in love with simpler but none the less classical selections will be gratified. In short, it is a program for the people of all grades of musical knowledge. Assistant Manager Comme says of the program:

"One of the greatest troubles that we have where we are not known is that the people are apt to get frightened at a symphony concert program. They see 'Les Preludes, Liszt,' on the program and they get an idea that it is heavy. They are mistaken. Now, in the program this evening 'Les Preludes' of Liszt is one of the sublimest bits of harmony ever written, ranking among the best of this composer's works; it is a superb opening number, as, at the outset, it will show the capabilities of the orchestra. The vocal selection from the Huguenots, is a more pleasing number than would be some heavy selection, and one that will meet with the approval of the audience. The next number will be a solo for violin, with orchestral accompaniment, and will introduce Herr Loeffler, the most romantic and poetic performer among the first violins of the orchestra. The solo is lovely, full of Spanish melodies, and will be within the grasp of everybody. Then follows the 'Peer Gynt,' composed by Grieg, the greatest composer that Norway ever produced. This will be the most taking number with the average audience, the music being bright, brilliant and what is called popular. Madame Steinbach-Jahn's three songs with piano accompaniments by Herr Nikisch will add a pleasant variety to the program. A symphony concert without a symphony would be like Hamlet without the melancholy Dane, so the closing number will be the famous D minor of Schumann."

In addition, Herr Nikisch has decided to introduce Demersseman's concert fantasie for flute and orchestra from the opera of "Oberon," to be played by Mons Mole, late first flute of the Grand Opera House, Paris, and one of the greatest flute soloists in the country.

...ipping from Times-Albany, N. Y.

...h. AMUSEMENTS

The concerts of the Boston Symphon... orchestra have long been looked upon ... events of the highest musical enjoyme... and the services of this superb organiza... tion are always in demand in the large... cities. The lack of a suitable hall has pre... vented until this season, the appearanc... of the orchestra in this city, and it is... matter of congratulation that our music... public are about to enjoy a concert by th... remarkably fine organization, where th... best possible opportunity is offered for th... display of the qualities which have mad... it famous. Under the direction of M... Arthur Nikisch, its gifted conductor, th... Boston orchestra, numbering seventy pe... formers, will give a single concert in Ha... manus Bleecker hall next Friday eve... ing. With a view of bringing this n... table musical event within the reach of al... particularly of ... cially low ... ced. The sale of ... begins Monday ... at the usual places.

[149]

Times- Albany, N. Y.

Date 5/24.

S. E. 12

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Boston's Great Orchestra at Harmanus Bleecker Hall.

For once Albany has been given an idea of what is approved by the high musical culture of Boston—a concert by the Boston symphony orchestra. Symphony concerts are as common in Boston as are base ball matches in Albany. Years ago the subscription concerts of the Harvard Musical association, in Music hall, which holds 3,000 persons, filled that great building every afternoon on which they were given. The Bostonese are brought up on symphonies, and any such organization, to obtain patronage there, must be of an exceptionally high order. Even Thomas's orchestra is accepted with some distrust. But the symphony orchestra is one of Boston's pet institutions, and since it has come under the leadership of Arthur Nikisch, it has risen to higher favor than ever. It is unquestionably a magnificent combination, one which for its object has no equal in this country.

The concert last evening was one of the most enjoyable, so far as the instrumental portion was concerned, ever given in Albany. The vocalist, Madame Steinbach-Jahns, although her execution is good, does not possess a very pleasing voice, and did not make a good impression. The orchestra, however, was beyond all praise. Mr. Nikisch, a pale, scholarly looking man, is one of the most modest of conductors, controlling with fewer motions than any of the great leaders who are well known to the public, but the band obey his baton perfectly and no player ever manipulated an organ with quicker response or more delicate shades of expression. The program, although not long was very choice material. "Les Preludes" by Liszt is familiar through Thomas, but never was it given here with such exquisite expression as it was last evening. The Greig music, descriptive of the career of Peer Gynt of whom Ibsen wrote, was a delightful novelty in the way of Scandinavian music, by turns eloquent, pathetic, weird and fantastical. The feature of the evening was, of course, Beethoven's famous Fifth symphony in C minor, performed by an orchestra in perfect sympathy with the music of the great master. It was something with which ordinary musical critics can have very little to do except to express admiration and delight. To most people in the audience it was a revelation and they went away feeling that there were depths in orchestral effects of which before they had lived in ignorance.

Mr. Adamowski, one of the orchestra, played on the violin two movements by Saint-Saens with much skill and no little feeling.

The programs were little pamphlets, descriptive of the music, the composers, and the performers—useful, convenient, interesting and instructive.

The audience was fair, the hall being perhaps two-thirds full, many coming from Troy, where the orchestra, under another leader, played early in the season. The tour of the orchestra closed here, and the band returned to Boston. It is the desire of Manager Oliver to arrange for next season a series of concerts by this orchestra to be given at intervals of a month or so, by subscription. Nothing more desirable in the art of music could be projected.

Clipping from Commercial Buffalo N.Y.

Date 5

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Lovers of music will welcome the announcement of the coming visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to give a single performance at Music Hall. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is now in its ninth year, and is the only similar organization in this country which enjoys the advantages of a permanent membership, the musicians being under contract and playing constantly together under one conductor during ten months of every year. That these exceptionally favorable conditions have been availed of in the fullest degree is shown by the unanimous judgment of the highest critical authorities, who rank the organization with the foremost orchestras of Vienna, Berlin, Leipzic and Paris. The coming engagement will introduce to the Buffalo public Mr. Arthur Nikisch, who was chosen to succeed Mr. Gericke as conductor. Mr. Nikisch, who is 35 years of age, came to Boston from Leipzic with the highest endorsement of European critics. The orchestra numbers seventy performers, and the soloists to appear are Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, dramatic soprano, late of the Leipzic Stadt Theatre, who visits America under special engagement to accompany the orchestra on its tour, and Mr. Anton Hekking, the eminent 'cellist. The concert will be given on Thursday evening, May 23d. The sale of seats opens at Denton & Cottier's on Monday, May 19th.

Clipping from Press Detroit Mich.

Date 5 11

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra—Tony Pastor at Whitney's.

The most important amusement event of the week will be the concert by the celebrated Boston Symphony Orchestra at Miner's Saturday evening, the 17th instant. The musicians belonging to this organization number about seventy and they are under the direction of Mr. Arthur Nikisch. It is conceded that this orchestra has established a standard of excellence never before known in this country. Mr. Nikisch, who recently succeeded Mr. Gericke as director, brought from Leipsic the warmest indorsements of the critics the public and his professional associates. So much has been written of the achievements of this famous young conductor, both in Europe and America, that his appearance will be awaited with the liveliest interest. Mr. Nikisch is a Hungarian by birth and is 35 years of age. His success during the season now drawing to a close seems to have justified the flattering accounts which preceded his arrival. He conducts without score or music stand, and his knowledge of his work seems absolute.

With the orchestra, as soloist, will appear Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, the leading lyric soprano from the Leipsic Stadt Theater, and who came to America under special engagement to accompany the orchestra on the western tour. Mme. Jahns is a woman of fine stage presence and is said to possess a voice of great beauty and remarkable compass.

Times Buffalo N. Y.

Date 5/16

for the season just opening.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The great Boston Symphony Orchestra, the finest musical organization in the country, Arthur Nikisch, director, will give a concert in Music hall Thursday evening under the direction of the Buffalo Vocal society. The orchestra will be assisted by Mme. Steinbach-Johns, a noted dramatic soprano from the Liepsic Stadt theater, and Mr. Anton Hekking, the leading cellist of the orchestra.

Clipping from Commercial Buffalo N.Y.

Date 5/15

...cil to compute.

Samuel Gillmore vs. Conrad Wolf and others. Judgment of foreclosure and sale ordered.

The Symphony Concert.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra—seventy performers—under direction of its new conductor, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, will visit Buffalo for a single concert at Music Hall on Thursday evening of next week. The excellence of this organization is well known here through previous performances, and it is unnecessary to say that the concert will be one of the leading events of the musical year. The sale of seats opens next Monday at Denton & Cottier's.

Clipping from Herald, Chicago, Ill.

Date 5/11

...ew with a strong cast will be ... an event of unusual interest.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

In the matter of orchestral music Boston certainly stands first among the cities of this country. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which numbers seventy-five performers, is now in its ninth year and constant improvement has brought it to a standard of excellence that has given it a worldwide reputation. The coming concert by this famous orchestra, which will be given at Central Music Hall next Wednesday evening, will be looked forward to with pleasure by a host of admirers and the only opportunity of hearing it in this city should not be lost by any lover of music. An interesting feature of the concert will be the first appearance in this city of Arthur Nikisch, the gifted young Hungarian conductor, whose selection as the successor of Mr. Gericke has given so great satisfaction in Boston and other eastern cities where a series of concerts by this fine organization has become a regular feature of each musical season. The orchestra under Mr. Gericke was famed for the perfection of the strings, and if any criticism could justly be made on the methods of that splendid conductor it was the undue repression of the wind instruments. Under Mr. Nikisch, it is said that the organization has become better balanced, and while losing none of its wonderful precision, has gained much in power and effect. With the orchestra on Wednesday will appear as soloists Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, a noted Leipzic soprano, and Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, the well-known pianiste of this city.

Register, New Haven Conn.

Date 5/12

...his mind is affected.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra in Peril.

ST. PAUL, Minn., May 12.—The special train on the Burlington and Northern road, bearing the Boston Symphony orchestra, was wrecked at Prescott, Wis., yesterday afternoon, and a terrible accident narrowly averted. A mile above Hastings the train ran into a handcar loaded with section hands, both going at top speed. The handcar was thrown thirty feet to one side, and three men, names unknown, instantly killed, and two others severely wounded. The special was derailed and the engine badly crippled. The passengers were roughly knocked about and more or less bruised, but none seriously injured.

Star, Washington, D. C.

Date 5/12

Stanley will be the first to stir up people against me."

MUSIC SPILLED.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra in a Collision—Three Laborers Killed.

ST. PAUL, MINN., May 12.—The special train on the Burlington and Northern road, bearing the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was wrecked at Prescott, Wis., yesterday afternoon and a terrible accident narrowly averted. A mile above Hastings the train ran into a hand car loaded with section hands, both going at top speed. The hand car was thrown 30 feet to one side and three men, names unknown, instantly killed, and two others severely wounded. The special was derailed and the engine crippled. The passengers were roughly knocked about and more or less bruised, but none seriously injured. A delay of four hours occurred, and an engine sent from here brought in the train. The killed and wounded were cared for at Prescott.

Clipping from News St. Paul Minn.

Date 5

Minn.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

At the People's Church on Tuesday, the 13th Inst.

The approaching concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra promises to be an immense success. Its coming has been the theme of conversation among the musicians and musical amateurs of the city for a month past. The subscription sale started off with a boom on last Thursday, boys standing in line all the day before and all Wednesday night to secure tickets for the subscribers. The advance sale for the general public begins on Monday morning at 9 o'clock at Dyer's. The programme for St. Paul has been very happily chosen. It is "popular" in character and yet contains some of the grandest of orchestral compositions. The overture to Tannhauser, the opening number, is one of Wagner's best known works and never fails to delight an audience. What must it be when played by seventy of the greatest artists of the country? The Peer Gynt Suite by Grieg is one of the most popular numbers in the repertoire of the orchestra. It was played three times in the Boston series this winter and will be played in almost every concert of the Western tour. The Mendelssohn Symphony is very showy and brilliant and forms a grand closing number.

The soloists, Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, the prima donna of the Leipsig Opera, and Mr. Timothee Adamowski, one of Boston's best violinists, are meeting with most enthusiastic receptions in Philadelphia and Baltimore, in the former city amounting to an ovation. Mme. Steinbach has a very powerful, flexible voice of wide range, and excels in operatic parts. She sings the great aria O Lovely Halls, from Tannhauser, at the St. Paul concert.

Special notice is given that the concert begins promptly at 8 o'clock, and it is earnestly requested that all be seated by that hour, as no one will be allowed to enter the church during the music.

Journal Minneapolis, Minn.

5/12

THE EVENT OF YEARS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Performance Will Be a Great Success.

CHAT WITH HERR ARTHUR NIKISCH

The Program Will Be Popular as Well as Pleasing—An Addition to the Previously Published Numbers.

The financial success of the Boston Symphony Orchestra performance at the coliseum tonight is assured. The social element in the affair is such that it is bound to be one of the most fashionable events in the history of the city, and the musical portion of the occasion is of such a splendid quality that it promises to be an unqualified success in all particulars.

The orchestra with Herr Arthur Nikisch, the leader, and Mme. Steinback-Jahns, arrived in Minneapolis last night, and the West hotel now has one of the most distinguished musical parties that it ever entertained. Herr Nikisch, in an interview, spoke in most flattering terms of the appreciation of music by the people of the United States, East and West. He found the people of this country even keener and more intelligent in their appreciation of classical music than he had expected. He pronounces Boston as the leading city in America in the higher orchestral music. He does not find anything of commanding importance among the works of the present younger German composers. Brahms he considers the greatest living symphonic composer, while he places Wagner alone in his magnificent and sublime operatic conceptions.

"There are many of the pleasing composers whose works are important," said he, "but the classic compositions, the works that grow on you with every hearing, are very scarce. The lighter forms are catchy at first but soon lose their charm, whereas the genuine classics, from even being repellant in some cases, grow more and more into the heart and give it some of the strength of the character whose genius inspired its creation."

Regarding his work in orchestra, he said whenever he undertook to conduct a work he studied it till he knew it as if it was his own composition and then he directed from memory, when every one in the orchestra was thoroughly imbued with his artistic conception. "And when they play with fire and zeal there is no lagging," he added.

The program tonight, while being made up from the works of the great composers, is by no means one which will not be enjoyed by those who have no special knowledge of music. It is a program that none but a deaf man could fail to enjoy. For those who desire and are able to follow the intricacies of the highest types of classical music there is ample scope, and those who are most in love with simpler but none the less classical selections will be gratified. In short, it is a program for the people of all grades of musical knowledge. Assistant Manager Comme says of the program:

"One of the greatest troubles that we have where we are not known is that the people are apt to get frightened at a symphony concert program. They see 'Les Preludes, Liszt,' on the program and they get an idea that it is heavy. They are mistaken. Now, in the program this evening 'Les Preludes' of Liszt is one of the sublimest bits of harmony ever written, ranking among the best of this composer's works; it is a superb opening number, as, at the outset, it will show the capabilities of the orchestra. The vocal selection from the Huguenots, is a more pleasing number than would be some heavy selection, and one that will meet with the approval of the audience. The next number will be a solo for violin, with orchestral accompaniment, and will introduce Herr Lœffler, the most romantic and poetic performer among the first violins of the orchestra. The solo is lovely, full of Spanish melodies, and will be within the grasp of everybody. Then follows the 'Peer Gynt,' composed by Grieg, the greatest composer that Norway ever produced. This will be the most taking number with the average audience, the music being bright, brilliant and what is called popular. Madame Steinbach-Jahn's three songs with piano accompaniments by Herr Nikisch will add a pleasant variety to the program. A symphony concert without a symphony would be like Hamlet without the melancholy Dane, so the closing number will be the famous D minor of Schumann."

In addition, Herr Nikisch has decided to introduce Demersseman's concert fantasie for flute and orchestra from the opera of "Oberon," to be played by Mons Mole, late first flute of the Grand Opera House, Paris, and one of the greatest flute soloists in the country.

...ipping from Times- Albany, N. Y.

...h. AMUSEMENTS.

The concerts of the Boston Symphon... orchestra have long been looked upon ... events of the highest musical enjoyme... and the services of this superb organiz... tion are always in demand in the large... cities. The lack of a suitable hall has pre... vented, until this season, the appearanc... of the orchestra in this city, and it is... matter of congratulation that our music... public are about to enjoy a concert by th... remarkably fine organization, where th... best possible opportunity is offered for th... display of the qualities which have mad... it famous. Under the direction of M... Arthur Nikisch, its gifted conductor, th... Boston orchestra, numbering seventy pe... formers, will give a single concert in Ha... manus Bleecker hall next Friday eve... ing. With a view of bringing this n... table musical event within the reach of al... particularly of musical students, an e... ceedingly low scale of prices has bee... adopted. The sale of seats begins Monda... at the usual places.

[149]

JUNE 7, 1890.]

AMERICAN ART JOURNAL

Music in Cincinnati.

The recent visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was an event of the greatest significance in the history of this season. The stamp of an original genius is evident in the directing of Mr. Nikisch, and the way in which his players respond to every demand stamps them as individual artists.

Before criticising their concert, however, let me allude to a handsome entertainment at the Cincinnati Conservatory. A reception to Mr. Nikisch, Madame Steinbach-Jahns, Mr.

BOSTON EVENING RECORD.
Entered at the P[ost] JUNE 10, 1[890], matter.]

LATEST EXTRA

BOSTON EVENING RECORD.
Entered at the P[ost] JUNE 11, [1890], all matter.]

CARING FOR THE DIVES.

"Not Enough Licenses" for a Decent Place——After All the Cheap Rumholes Have Been Fully Supplied.—[Decision of the Police Commissioners.

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, Music Hall. | BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 8, 1888. | SUMMER SEASON. Vol. III. No. 66

Notwithstanding the recent advance of several cents per pound in the price of

COFFEES

We are for the present offering the Finest Qualities that money will buy, as follows:—

Coffees, Roasted and Ground.

Maleberry Java	33 cents.
Old Government Java	30 "
Arabian Mocha	30 "
Plantation Ceylon	30 "
Cafe des Connoisseurs	30 "

One cent per pound less in 25-lb. lots.

Raw Coffees.

Maleberry Java	28 cents.
Old Government Java	26 "
Arabian Mocha	26 "
Plantation Ceylon	26 "

One cent per pound less in 25-lb. lots.

S. S. PIERCE & CO.

Importers and Grocers,
Scollay Square. Copley Square.

W. T. VAN NOSTRAND & CO.

Crystal Lake Brewery,

BOSTON - - - - MASS.
Established 1821.

P. B. Stock, Old Musty Ale,

And STOUT PORTER

In Wood and Bottles, also Half and Half in Bottles. Order by Telephone 868.

Sold by Wine Dealers, Grocers, and Apothecaries.

SUMMER SEASON OF 1888.

THE MUSIC HALL
Promenade Concerts.

FOURTH SEASON

Mr. AD. NEUENDORFF, Conductor.

C. A. ELLIS - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - Manager.

PROGRAMME FOR THIS EVENING.

FROM 8 TO 11.

SOLOIST . . . MR. W. H. FESSENDEN.

1. EGYPTIAN MARCH . . . . . STRAUSS
2. OVERTURE ("The Wood Nymph." First time), STERNDALE BENNETT
3. WALTZ ("Am Neckarstrand") . . . . . MILLOECKER
4. *TENOR SOLO (Aria from Mignon, "Ah, non credea") . A. THOMAS
   Mr. W. H. FESSENDEN.

5. OVERTURE ("Nabuccodonosor") . . . . . VERDI
6. *a. TRAUEMEREI AND ROMANCE . . . . . SCHUMANN
   *b. ALLEGRETTO (from the "8th Symphony") . . BEETHOVEN
7. *SONG ("My Wild Love") . . . . . NEUENDORFF
   Mr. W. H. FESSENDEN.
8. BALLET MUSIC (from "Le Cid") . . . . . MASSENET
   a. Castillane. b. Andalouse. c. Aragonaise.
   d. Aubade. e. Madrilene. f. Navarraise.

9. OVERTURE ("Tantalusqualen") . . . . . SUPPE
10. SONG (Selected) . . . . . .
    Mr. W. H. FESSENDEN.
11. GRAND DUO (from "William Tell." Arranged for Orchestra), ROSSINI
12. GALOP ("Eile mit Weile") . . . . . STRAUSS

*The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during this number.

THE PIANOFORTE USED IS A CHICKERING.

The Programme for to-morrow Evening appears on Page III.

SCHMIDT'S

Music Store,

13 WEST STREET

N. B.—All music performed at these Concerts in stock, generally in the well-known cheap editions.

LET US GO TO PARK'S,

Bosworth St., near Horticultural Hall, opposite the burying ground, and have a Brace of English Chops, a nice dish of Snipe, Peep, Plover or a Broiled Live Lobster, with a Mug of the Famous Musty Ale, and by the by this Ale is not sold by any other firm in Boston, even if it is so advertised.

F. Thomas'

Ice Cream Soda

A SPECIALTY.

Pure Fruit Syrups,
Fine Bon Bons and Chocolates
487 Washington St. and 65 Temple Place

LOUIS ROEDERER Champagne

FOR SALE BY THE LEADING WINE MERCHANTS AND GROCERS.

Smoke DANIEL FRANK & CO.'s ORIGINAL N S. CIGARS. NONE GENUINE BUT THOSE STAMPED N S. ONLY.

The police commissioners have again decided that no license to sell light refreshments shall be granted to Music Hall this year, which means that the "pop" concerts, which had almost come to be a part of Boston's summer life, shall not be revived. Commissioner Whiting gives as a reason for the action of the board that there were not enough licenses to go around. Mr. Ellis, the manager of the concerts, was greatly surprised at the news. No exceptions had ever been taken to the character of the entertainments; a large number of the best musicians of the city found employment during the summer months. The "pops" were supported by some of the best people of the city.

pops!

spective—period not to ence to associate it with, yet possessing

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, JUNE 12.

No Music Hall "pops" this summer, and it's not much use to scold the police commissioners, either. That trio of autocrats is wholly irresponsible to the people of Boston. If only Boston could get at them there would be a popular concert and no mistake.

[150]

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 14, 1890.

It certainly seems as if the Board of Police were bent upon alienating the esteem and support of the community in every possible way, reckless of the consideration that they cannot maintain themselves as disciplinarians with their force or as gentlemen and citizens with their acquaintance[s] and fellow-townsmen if they [lack] wisdom, acumen and [decent] acts and attitude. [The] failure to recognize to pursue it lies [in] license necessary [to] summer-evening concerts can these three [be] thinking about when [act] solidly against the [city], and not only [which] it is their duty [to] a material in[crease] appointed and [the] evil and to foster [and] let people be [keeping] shops and of [disorderly] houses, [the] material power [of] scores of such [by] public obloquy [of] them. They [the] passive attitude [of] law without [their] favorable in[fluence] means which one [open] to them. And [they] make a brave [public] of residents [police] of pure pleasure [when] diced person can [complaint]. The Mu[sic] have been [given] and they [with] the general [fund] money which [is] led otherwhere. [Exhibitions] are to be [which] has been fine in [from] the highest [class] med under emi[nent] body of Boston [decorum] there is [regular] conduct [every] instant and no [one] within the [reach] the audiences [of] theatres during [special] occasions [profitable] and cul[tured] onal dramatic [has] been sold and [drunk] en of beer, [occasional] glass [commissioners] have [refusing] the license [or] not, the public [suffer] at the refu-

RALD.

E 16, 1890.

EXPLAINS.

ot Granted for [Pops].

has been aimed [because] of its refusal to [open] Music Hall [Commissioners] at [with] the cudgels in [HERALD] today pre[sume] to make [my] own views, [present] those of [Commi]ssion that [it] that the re[fusal] was due to [Monopoly], I have [advise], and to [be] aded. The [Globe] ive music [Commissio]ns trav[el] to the [Pops] example, [Mercury]. Last [Commi]sses went [Globe] was one of [Herald] had drawn [Globe] ny person [Herald] a very [believe]—an [transfer] the [accordingly] ter stand [Globe] n named [Herald] stood it, [Globe]rts. had [Globe] e places [Herald] year ago [Globe] pplicants [Globe]r, and [Globe]r didn't [Globe]fore the [Globe] to sup[pose] hom no [Globe] ade had [Globe] nate and [Globe] lear that [Globe] re was no [Globe] who had [Globe] ve up his [Globe] were re[fused] ces thus [Globe] ho were [Globe] no room [Globe] ection had [Globe] ure brought [Globe] ch this year and [Globe] the total num[ber] that no license [was] granted to Music Hall after the list was complete. We should have issued the license later, if we could, when we learned that the concerts had been successful and not a failure as we had been led to suppose. We could not do that, however. If the manager had only held on to his license, keeping it in a box all winter, if necessary, he would have surely have had his license renewed. Now, I regret as much as anybody does that Music Hall has no license, but from the knowledge I had, thinking that the concerts were not a profitable undertaking, and that the manager had surrendered his place in the limited number by transferring his privileges in the middle of the summer, I couldn't come to any other conclusion than to leave Music Hall out of the list altogether this year. The people may regret this necessity, as I do, but a fair judicial mind could have taken no other course."

Mr. Osborne added that the Music Hall concerts may be licensed now by only one method, which is by the transfer of a license personally issued from the present holder to the manager of the "pops." It is said, however, that this plan may be adopted by the [Commissioners] of another series of popular concerts in the autumn—that is, if the [Commissioners] decide to step down and out [gracefully].

FRAF NOT WORSE.

dow certain uncharitable people are wondering if, after all, the license was withheld from Music Hall bec use there were not enough licenses to go around, or because there was not enough of something else to go around. It does not seem reasonable that the Police Commissioners should have been anxious to deprive so respectable a place as Music Hall of a license in order to accommodate some cheap, disreputable rum-hole with a right to dispense vile liquors. As a mere matter of choice it would appear that the preference should have been given to Music Hall, on the ground that simply beer and light wines were dispensed there, and that only, for a month or two. However, there is no knowing the mysterious processes by which the official brain reaches its conclusions, though in this instance it looks very like an official lack of brain.

REDUCTION

RATIO

15x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A3

A4

A5

1.0

1.1

1.25

1.4

1.6

1.8

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

If you contemplate purchasing DIAMONDS or other precious STONES, a visit to our office will satisfy you that it is the place to buy the best quality at the lowest prices. C. T. SEAVERNS & CO., 403 Washington St. (Opp. Macullar, Parker & Co. Room 8. Elevator.

Boston Music Hall Bulletin

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING
DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.

The advertising columns in the "Bulletin" are controlled SOLELY by Carl G. Zerrahn, 257 Washington Street, Room 6, to whom all communications should be addressed, and who will be pleased to furnish rates upon application.

Mr. George H. Adams is authorized to receive advertisements for this programme.

CARL G. ZERRAHN.

PRESS OF ALFRED MUDGE & SON.

TRA-LA-LA-LOO.

"I cannot sing the old songs,"
Though well I know the tune,
And I can carol like the bird
That sings in leafy June.

Yet though I'm full of music
As choirs of singing birds,
"I cannot sing the old songs"—
I do not know the words.

I start on "Hail Columbia,"
And get to "heaven-born band,"
And there I strike an up-grade
With neither steam or sand.

"Star-spangled banner" throws me
Right in my wildest screaming,
I start all right, but dumbly come
To voiceless wreck at "streaming."

So when I sing the old songs,
Don't murmur or complain,
If "Ti, de ah da, tum de dum"
Should fill the sweetest strain.

I love tiddy um dum di do,
And the tralala eep da birde,
But "I cannot sing the old songs"—
I do not know the words.

— Burdette.

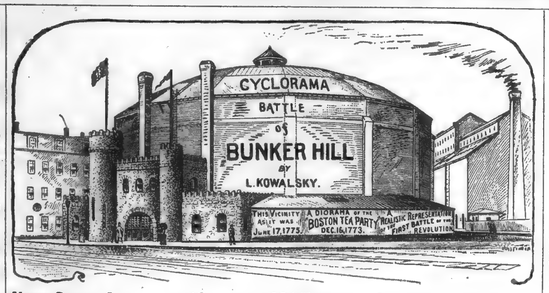
APROPOS of the miseries of criticism, the London Musical Times for March makes the following pertinent remarks:—

One of the troubles of the "concert noticer," sometimes called the musical critic, arises from the want in the English tongue of synonyms for certain stock expressions. Thus, when he has written the word "performed," he is compelled to fall back upon "executed," then "played," then "gave," then "rendered," and then he—like some of the items he describes—is "done." In his anxiety for variety he adopts terms that seem to be serviceable without inquiring into their applicability or to their philological accuracy. For example, the word "rendition," so frequently employed to express performance, like the word "execution," is of a somewhat ambiguous meaning. Each word is capable of a double signification, for "execution" may be the "doing of something to death" in fulfilment of a just sentence, while "rendition," if it means anything at all, can only be interpreted as the action of "tearing to pieces," or of giving in after a defeat. How far these words are fitted to express the action of a musical performance is doubtful. The poverty of our native tongue evidently exercises the minds of those versatile gentlemen attached to country newspapers, who are "turned on" to do the music, a fire, a coroner's inquest, or a parish meeting. They have "a nice derangement of epitaphs" suitable for each case, a choice assortment of fine words, which would be as beautiful as they are impressive if they were only inserted in the right places. When we find a rural genius gravely informing his readers that "the dominant key is A major in Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony," some regret is felt that no information is offered about the tonic. When, further, we learn that "the melody is taken by the 'cellos and basses, and, flowing over and around the orchestra with an exquisitely beautiful effect, is brought to a conclusion most impressively by three chords 'pizzicato' on the double bass," and "one's fancy can picture a rustic dance, with the adjuncts of soft scenery, a brilliant moon and an Italian sky, as the different measures trip from section to section in the orchestra," in this "most jubilant of symphonies," we feel that much is being done in quiet quarters to raise musical criticism into the ranks of the finer arts. The genius who declared that a certain singer was not successful "from a vocalistic point of view," and the clever creature who praised the performance of Rossini's overture, "See my remedy," will not have to wait long for their reward.



Now Open, 9 a. m. to 10 p. m., 401 Tremont St., near the Bridge.

J. C. GERLACH,

Sole N. E. Agent for the

Bartholomay Brewing Co.'s

CELEBRATED

ROCHESTER LAGER BEER.

Bottled for hotel and family use. Delivered free to any part of the city. This Beer is supplied to the patrons of these Concerts.

Also, Sole Agent of the RHENS NATURAL MINERAL WATER.

361 Atlantic Avenue and 22 Purchase Street.

Ritz

Photographic Portraiture.

Only those studios which pursue an all-the-year-round policy of lowest prices have the public confidence, and enjoy a steady and increasing patronage. Everybody knows that RITZ is the chief champion of steady, unsensational prices. No wonder, then, that all seasons find us equally busy, no spurts, no sacrifices in prices, but lowest prices always for the very best work. Active specialties now are the Boudoir, Elite and Panel sizes of Photographs, adapted for either large, splendidly retouched and finished heads, or full figures of children or ladies in bridal or party dresses.

Our old and original system of securing best Cabinet Photographs at special low rates is still in vogue, more successful than ever. If you don't know the plan, send or call for a card explaining it fully. We'll cheerfully furnish all you desire. 58 Temple Place.

FIRE INSURANCE

JOHN C. PAIGE,

20 Kilby Street,

BOSTON.

DÉJEUNER

132 Tremont St.

MAILLARD'S CANDIES,

DELICIOUS FRESH ICES.

OUR SPECIALTY,

STRAWBERRY ICE CREAM SODA

Made daily from fresh fruit.

OPEN EVERY EVENING.

Those who would recall Boston and vicinity as they appeared during the Revolutionary period should visit the New Cyclorama Building, 401 Tremont Street, and view the wonderfully realistic representations of the Battle of Bunker Hill, and the Boston Tea Party.

LE DÉJEUNER, 132 Tremont Street, makes a specialty of Strawberry Ice Cream Soda made daily from fresh fruit.

THE

LATEST EVENING TRAIN FOR NEW YORK

Leaves Boston daily (Sundays excepted) at 11.30 P. M.

VIA THE

N. Y. & N. E. R. R.

This late departure affords AMPLE time to reach the depot after the Concert. Pullman Sleeping-Cars run through to New York.

OFFICE, 322 WASHINGTON ST.
DEPOT, FOOT OF SUMMER ST.

The Wonderful Self-Playing ÆOLIAN ORGAN.

Can be played if desired, the same as any parlor organ at the will of the performer. Just the instrument for the home circle, lodges, hotels, yachts, etc. Send for descriptive circular and catalogue, or call and examine at warerooms, 225 Tremont Street. Please understand this is not an orgulnette or anything of the kind. The only crank about it is the Sole Agent for N. E.

J. HOWARD RICHARDSON.

THE "Live Lobsters" broiled is original with the Park House, and is copied by other hotels and restaurants with great success, as it were.

J. H. LEWIS,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

417 WASHINGTON STREET.

All the Latest Novelties in Foreign and Domestic Goods for Gentlemen's Summer Wear.

DRESS SUITS TO LET.

HARDMAN PIANOS

36,000 IN USE

C. C. HARVEY & CO. . . . Salesrooms, 177 Tremont St., BOSTON.

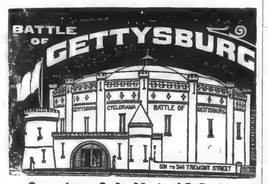
Estey Organs Pianos

Fully Warranted. Sold on Instalments.

ESTEY,

159 Tremont Street - - - Boston.

DO NOT FAIL TO SEE THE



Open from 9 A. M. to 10 P. M.

Horse Cars pass the Door every minute.

A. L. BEARSE,

33 WINTER STREET,

HEADQUARTERS FOR

FANS

— AND —

JEWELRY.

MOXIE

Has created the greatest excitement, demand and sale as a beverage, in two years, ever witnessed in the history of trade, from the fact that it brings nervous, exhausted, overworked women to good powers of endurance in a few days. Cures the uncontrollable appetite for liquors and tobacco at once, and has recovered a large number of cases of old, helpless paralysis as a food only.

SUMMER

It has lately created an immense excitement in Malden, Mass., in recovering the twelve year old daughter of John Nicholson, 735 Main Street, of an old, helpless case of general paralysis, from which she was speechless. She is now a romping, healthy school-girl.

DRINK

It is neither medicine nor stimulant, but a plant that yields a rich nutrition for the nerves, which repairs the hard wear of life or the effects from dissipation within a few days or weeks, and contains no more alcohol than bread or ice-cream, and is the richest beverage known. Druggists have it. For home use buy the Moxie Syrup for 75 cents a 26 oz. bottle, mix three dessert-spoonfuls with a tumbler of ice or soda water, and it will cost you but two cents a tumbler. Three tumblers a day will give you double powers of endurance. MOXIE NERVE FOOD CO., LOWELL, MASS.

Thursday Evening, Aug. 9th, 8 to 11.

PROGRAMME.

1. GRAND ENTREE OF THE QUEEN OF SHEBA AT THE COURT OF KING SOLOMON (from the Opera "The Queen of Sheba"), GOLDMARK
2. OVERTURE ("Leonore" in C, No. 3) . . . . . BEETHOVEN
3. GRAND SELECTION (from "Das Rheingold") . . . WAGNER
4. OVERTURE ("Flying Dutchman") . . . . . WAGNER
5. WALTZ ("Donauweibchen") . . . . . STRAUSS
6. a.* TRAUMEREI . . . . . SCHUMANN
   b.* LIEBESLIEDCHEN (from "The Tempest") . . . TAUBERT
7. MELODIES OF ALL NATIONS . . . . . MOSZKOWSKI
   a. Italian. b. German. c. Hungarian.
8. OVERTURE ("Tantalusqualen") . . . . . SUPPE
9. BAL MASQUE. . . . . RUBINSTEIN
   a. Toreador Andalouse. b. Royal Tambour at Vivandiere.
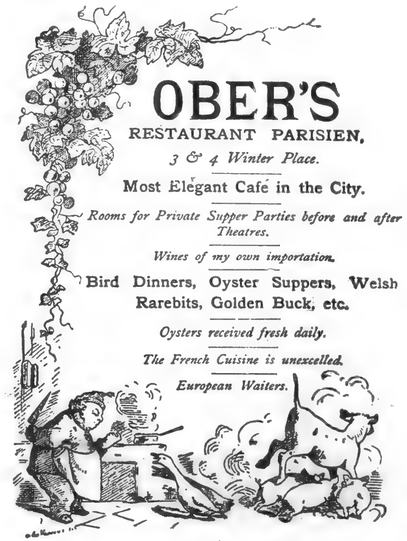
10. GALOP CHROMATIQUE . . . . . LISZT

*The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during this number.



OBER'S

RESTAURANT PARISIEN,

3 & 4 Winter Place.

Most Elegant Café in the City.

Rooms for Private Supper Parties before and after Theatres.

Wines of my own importation.

Bird Dinners, Oyster Suppers, Welsh Rarebits, Golden Buck, etc.

Oysters received fresh daily.

The French Cuisine is unexcelled.

European Waiters.

BESSE'S,

167 Tremont Street,

ICE CREAM PARLORS.

The best Ice Cream and Confectionery. The coolest and most comfortable place in Boston. Orders taken for delivery to any part of the city.

WE INVITE ATTENTION TO OUR

$5 HAND-SEWED

Lace, Button and Congress Calf Boots.

JOHN F. PRAY & SON,
321 Washington St., opp. Milk St.

KNABE

Manufacturers of

GRAND, UPRIGHT, AND SQUARE PIANO-FORTES

Unequalled in Tone, Touch, Workmanship, and Durability.

E. W. TYLER, Agent, 178 Tremont St.

R. H. WHITE & CO.

Washington Street, near Bedford.

The "Sembrich" Corset.

(REGISTERED.)

R. H. White & Co., Sole Owners.

THE MOST PERFECT FITTING CORSET IN THE WORLD. LENGTHENS THE WAIST AND REDUCES THE SIZE OF THE HIPS.

We take especial pleasure in showing this corset, as we know it is worthy the attention of every lady who is in want of a shapely, and, at the same time, a comfortable corset.

R. H. W. & CO.

Washington Street, near Bedford.

THE Lager Beer used at these Concerts is from the Bartholomay Brewing Company of Rochester, and is bottled for hotel and family use. J. C. Gerlach, N. E. Agent, 361 Atlantic Avenue.

THE

Collateral Loan Com'ny

328 WASHINGTON ST.

LOANS MADE ON

Diamonds,
Watches,
Jewelry,
Silverware,
Books, Etc.

The only Institution Chartered by the State.

REDUCTION RATIO 14x

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

If you contemplate purchasing DIAMONDS or other precious STONES, a visit to our office will satisfy you that it is the place to buy the best quality at the lowest prices. C. T. SEAVERNS & CO., 403 Washington St.

Boston Music Hall Bulletin

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING

DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.

The advertising columns in the "Bulletin" are controlled SOLELY by Carl G. Zerrahn, 257 Washington Street, Room 6, to whom all communications should be addressed, and who will be pleased to furnish rates upon application.

Mr. George H. Adams is authorized to receive advertisements for this programme.

CARL G. ZERRAHN.

PRESS OF ALFRED MUDGE & SON.

TRA-LA-LA-LOO.

"I cannot sing the old songs,"
Though well I know the tune,
And I can carol like the bird
That sings in leafy June.

Yet though I 'm full of music
As choirs of singing birds,
"I cannot sing the old songs"—
I do not know the words.

I start on "Hail Columbia,"
And get to "heaven-born band,"
And there I strike an up-grade
With neither steam or sand.

"Star-spangled banner" throws me
Right in my wildest screaming,
I start all right, but dumbly come
To voiceless wreck at "streaming."

So when I sing the old songs,
Don't murmur or complain,
If "Ti, de ah da, tum de dum"
Should fill the sweetest strain.

I love tiddy um dum di do,
And the tralla la ep da birds,
But "I cannot sing the old songs"—
I do not know the words.

— Burdette.

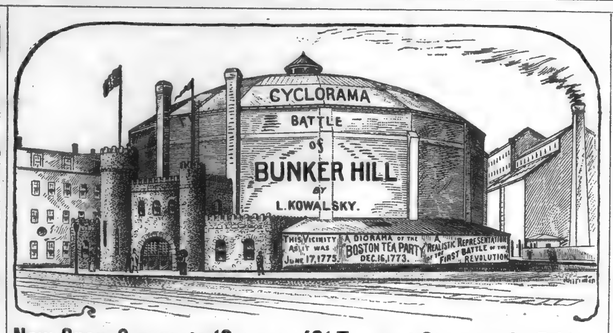
APROPOS of the miseries of criticism, the London Musical Times for March makes the following pertinent remarks: —

One of the troubles of the "concert noticer," sometimes called the musical critic, arises from the want in the English tongue of synonyms for certain stock expressions. Thus, when he has written the word "performed," he is compelled to fall back upon "executed," then "played," then "gave," then "rendered," and then he — like some of the items he describes — is "done." In his anxiety for variety he adopts terms that seem to be serviceable without inquiring into their applicability or to their philological accuracy. For example, the word "rendition," so frequently employed to express performance, like the word "execution," is of a somewhat ambiguous meaning. Each word is capable of a double signification, for "execution" may be the "doing of something to death" in fulfilment of a just sentence, while "rendition," if it means anything at all, can only be interpreted as the action of "tearing to pieces," or of giving in after a defeat. How far these words are fitted to express the action of a musical performance is doubtful The poverty of our native tongue evidently exercises the minds of those versatile gentlemen attached to country newspapers, who are "turned on" to do the music, a fire, a coroner's inquest, or a parish meeting. They have "a nice derangement of epitaphs" suitable for each case, a choice assortment of fine words, which would be as beautiful as they are impressive if they were only inserted in the right places. When we find a rural genius gravely informing his readers that "the dominant key is A major in Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony," some regret is felt that no information is offered about the tonic. When, further, we learn that "the melody is taken by the 'cellos and basses, and, flowing over and around the orchestra with an exquisitely beautiful effect, is brought to a conclusion most impressively by three chords 'pizzicato' on the double bass," and "one's fancy can picture a rustic dance, with the adjuncts of soft scenery, a brilliant moon and an Italian sky, as the different measures trip from section to section in the orchestra," in this "most jubilant of symphonies," we feel that much is being done in quiet quarters to raise musical criticism into the ranks of the finer arts. The genius who declared that a certain singer was not successful "from a vocalistic point of view," and the clever creature who praised the performance of Rossini's overture, "See my remedy," will not have to wait long for their reward.



Now Open, 9 a. m. to 10 p. m., 401 Tremont St., near the Bridge.

J. C. GERLACH,

Sole N. E. Agent for the

Bartholomay Brewing Co.'s

CELEBRATED

ROCHESTER LAGER BEER.

Bottled for hotel and family use. Delivered free to any part of the city. This Beer is supplied to the patrons of these Concerts.

Also, Sole Agent of the RHENS NATURAL MINERAL WATER.

361 Atlantic Avenue and 22 Purchase Street.

Ritz

Photographic Portraiture.

Only those studios which pursue an all-the-year-round policy of lowest prices have the public confidence, and enjoy a steady and increasing patronage. Everybody knows that RITZ is the chief champion of steady, unsensational prices. No wonder, then, that all seasons find us equally busy, no spurts, no sacrifices in prices, but lowest prices always for the very best work. Active specialties now are the Boudoir, Elite and Panel sizes of Photographs, adapted for either large, splendidly retouched and finished heads, or full figures of children or ladies in bridal or party dresses.

Our old and original system of securing best Cabinet Photographs at special low rates is still in vogue, more successful than ever. If you don't know the plan, send or call for a card explaining it fully. We'll cheerfully furnish all you desire. 58 Temple Place.

FIRE INSURANCE

JOHN C. PAIGE,

20 Kilby Street,

BOSTON.

132 Tremont St.

MAILLARD'S CANDIES,

DELICIOUS FRESH ICES.

OUR SPECIALTY,

STRAWBERRY ICE CREAM SODA

Made daily from fresh fruit.

OPEN EVERY EVENING.

Those who would recall Boston and vicinity as they appeared during the Revolutionary period should visit the New Cyclorama Building, 401 Tremont Street, and view the wonderfully realistic representations of the Battle of Bunker Hill, and the Boston Tea Party.

LE DÉJEUNER, 132 Tremont Street, makes a specialty of Strawberry Ice Cream Soda made daily from fresh fruit.

THE
LATEST EVENING TRAIN FOR NEW YORK

Leaves Boston daily (Sundays excepted) at 11.30 P. M.

VIA THE

N. Y. & N. E. R. R.

This late departure affords AMPLE time to reach the depot after the Concert. Pullman Sleeping-Cars run through to New York.

OFFICE, 322 WASHINGTON ST.

DEPOT, FOOT OF SUMMER ST.

The Wonderful Self-Playing ÆOLIAN ORGAN.

Can be played if desired, the same as any parlor organ at the will of the performer. Just the instrument for the home circle, lodges, hotels, yachts, etc. Send for descriptive circular and catalogue, or call and examine at warerooms, 225 Tremont Street. Please understand this is not an orguinette or anything of the kind. The only crank about it is the Sole Agent for N. E.

J. HOWARD RICHARDSON.

THE "Live Lobsters" broiled is original with the Park House, and is copied by other hotels and restaurants with great success, as it were.

J. H. LEWIS,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

417 WASHINGTON STREET.

All the Latest Novelties in Foreign and Domestic Goods for Gentlemen's Summer Wear.

DRESS SUITS TO LET.

HARDMAN PIANOS

36,000 IN USE

C. C. HARVEY & CO. . . . Salesrooms, 177 Tremont St., BOSTON.

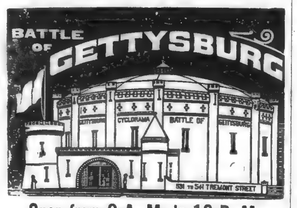
Estey Organs Pianos

Fully Warranted. Sold on Instalments.

ESTEY,

139 Tremont Street - - - Boston.

DO NOT FAIL TO SEE THE



Open from 9 A. M. to 10 P. M.

Horse Cars pass the Door every minute.

A. L. BEARSE,

33 WINTER STREET,

HEADQUARTERS FOR

FANS

— AND —

JEWELRY.

MOXIE

Has created the greatest excitement, demand and sale as a beverage, in two years, ever witnessed in the history of trade, from the fact that it brings nervous, exhausted, overworked women to good powers of endurance in a few days. Cures the uncontrollable appetite for liquors and tobacco at once, and has recovered a large number of cases of old, helpless paralysis as a food only.

SUMMER

It has lately created an immense excitement in Malden, Mass., in recovering the twelve year old daughter of John Nicholson, 735 Main Street, of an old, helpless case of general paralysis, from which she was speechless. She is now a romping, healthy school-girl.

DRINK

It is neither medicine nor stimulant, but a plant that yields a rich nutrition for the nerves, which repairs the hard wear of life or the effects from dissipation within a few days or weeks, and contains no more alcohol than bread or ice-cream, and is the richest beverage known. Druggists have it. For home use buy the Moxie Syrup for 75 cents a 26 oz. bottle, mix three dessert-spoonfuls with a tumbler of ice or soda water, and it will cost you but two cents a tumbler. Three tumblers a day will give you double powers of endurance. MOXIE NERVE FOOD CO., LOWELL, MASS.

Thursday Evening, Aug. 9th, 8 to 11.

PROGRAMME.

1. GRAND ENTREE OF THE QUEEN OF SHEBA AT THE COURT OF KING SOLOMON (from the Opera "The Queen of Sheba"), GOLDMARK
2. OVERTURE ("Leonore" in C, No. 3) . . . . . BEETHOVEN
3. GRAND SELECTION (from "Das Rheingold") . . . WAGNER

4. OVERTURE ("Flying Dutchman") . . . . . WAGNER
5. WALTZ ("Donauweibchen") . . . . . STRAUSS
6. *a. TRAUMEREI . . . . . SCHUMANN
   *b. LIEBESLIEDCHEN (from "The Tempest") . . TAUBERT
7. MELODIES OF ALL NATIONS . . . . . MOSZKOWSKI
   a. Italian. b. German. c. Hungarian.

8. OVERTURE ("Tantalusqualen") . . . . . SUPPE
9. BAL MASQUE. . . . . RUBINSTEIN
   a. Toreador Andalouse. b. Royal Tambour at Vivandiere.
10. GALOP CHROMATIQUE . . . . . LISZT

*The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during this number.

OBER'S

RESTAURANT PARISIEN,

3 & 4 Winter Place.

Most Elegant Cafe in the City.

Rooms for Private Supper Parties before and after Theatres.

Wines of my own importation.

Bird Dinners, Oyster Suppers, Welsh Rarebits, Golden Buck, etc.

Oysters received fresh daily.

The French Cuisine is unexcelled.

European Waiters.

chasing DIAMONDS or other precious STONES, a visit to our office will satisfy you that it is the place to buy the best quality at the lowest prices. C. T. SEAVERNS & CO., 403 Washington St. Opp. Macullar, Parker & Co. Room 8. Elevator.

Now Open, 9 a. m. to 10 p. m., 401 Tremont St., near the Bridge.

J. C. GERLACH,

Sole N. E. Agent for the

Bartholomay Brewing Co.'s

CELEBRATED

ROCHESTER LAGER BEER.

Bottled for hotel and family use. Delivered free to any part of the city. This Beer is supplied to the patrons of these Concerts.

Also, Sole Agent of the RHENS NATURAL MINERAL WATER.

361 Atlantic Avenue and 22 Purchase Street.

Ritz

Photographic Portraiture.

Only those studios which pursue an all-the-year-round policy of lowest prices have the public confidence, and enjoy a steady and increasing patronage. Everybody knows that RITZ is the chief champion of steady, unsensational prices. No wonder, then, that all seasons find us equally busy, no spurts, no sacrifices in prices, but lowest prices always for the very best work. Active specialties now are the Boudoir, Elite and Panel sizes of Photographs, adapted for either large, splendidly retouched and finished heads, or full figures of children or ladies in bridal or party dresses.

Our old and original system of securing best Cabinet Photographs at special low rates is still in vogue, more successful than ever. If you don't know the plan, send or call for a card explaining it fully. We'll cheerfully furnish all you desire. 58 Temple Place.

FIRE INSURANCE

JOHN C. PAIGE,

20 Kilby Street,

BOSTON.

LE DÉJEUNER

132 Tremont St.

MAILLARD'S CANDIES,

DELICIOUS FRESH ICES.

OUR SPECIALTY,

STRAWBERRY ICE CREAM SODA

Made daily from fresh fruit.

OPEN EVERY EVENING.

Those who would recall Boston and vicinity as they appeared during the Revolutionary period should visit the New Cyclorama Building, 401 Tremont Street, and view the wonderfully realistic representations of the Battle of Bunker Hill, and the Boston Tea Party.

LE DÉJEUNER, 132 Tremont Street, makes a specialty of Strawberry Ice Cream Soda made daily from fresh fruit.

THE

LATEST EVENING TRAIN FOR NEW YORK

Leaves Boston daily (Sundays excepted) at 11.30 P. M.

VIA THE

N. Y. & N. E. R. R.

This late departure affords AMPLE time to reach the depot after the Concert. Pullman Sleeping-Cars run through to New York.

OFFICE, 322 WASHINGTON ST.
DEPOT, FOOT OF SUMMER ST.

The Wonderful Self-Playing ÆOLIAN ORGAN.

Can be played if desired, the same as any parlor organ at the will of the performer. Just the instrument for the home circle, lodges, hotels, yachts, etc. Send for descriptive circular and catalogue, or call and examine at warerooms, 225 Tremont Street. Please understand this is not an orguinette or anything of the kind. The only crank about it is the Sole Agent for N. E.

J. HOWARD RICHARDSON.

THE "Live Lobsters" broiled is original with the Park House, and is copied by other hotels and restaurants with great success, as it were.

J. H. LEWIS,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

417 WASHINGTON STREET.

All the Latest Novelties in Foreign and Domestic Goods for Gentlemen's Summer Wear.

DRESS SUITS TO LET.

HARDMAN

36,000 PIANOS IN USE

C. C. HARVEY & CO. . . . Salesrooms, 177 Tremont St., BOSTON.

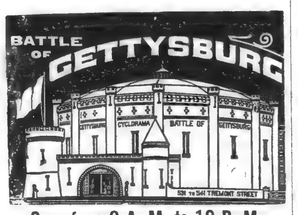
Estey Organs Pianos

Fully Warranted. Sold on Instalments.

ESTEY,

159 Tremont Street - - - Boston.

DO NOT FAIL TO SEE THE



Open from 9 A. M. to 10 P. M.

Horse Cars pass the Door every minute.

A. L. BEARSE,

33 WINTER STREET,

HEADQUARTERS FOR

FANS

—AND—

JEWELRY.

MOXIE

Has created the greatest excitement, demand and sale as a beverage, in two years, ever witnessed in the history of trade, from the fact that it brings nervous, exhausted, overworked women to good powers of endurance in a few days. Cures the uncontrollable appetite for liquors and tobacco at once, and has recovered a large number of cases of old, helpless paralysis as a food only.

SUMMER

It has lately created an immense excitement in Malden, Mass., in recovering the twelve year old daughter of John Nicholson, 735 Main Street, of an old, helpless case of general paralysis, from which she was speechless. She is now a romping, healthy school-girl.

DRINK

It is neither medicine nor stimulant, but a plant that yields a rich nutrition for the nerves, which repairs the hard wear of life or the effects from dissipation within a few days or weeks, and contains no more alcohol than bread or ice-cream, and is the richest beverage known. Druggists have it. For home use buy the Moxie Syrup for 75 cents a 26 oz. bottle, mix three dessert-spoonfuls with a tumbler of ice or soda water, and it will cost you but two cents a tumbler. Three tumblers a day will give you double powers of endurance. MOXIE NERVE FOOD CO., LOWELL, MASS.

Thursday Evening, Aug. 9th, 8 to 11.

PROGRAMME.

1.	GRAND ENTREE OF THE QUEEN OF SHEBA AT THE COURT OF KING SOLOMON (from the Opera "The Queen of Sheba"),	GOLDMARK
2.	OVERTURE ("Leonore" in C, No. 3)	BEETHOVEN
3.	GRAND SELECTION (from "Das Rheingold")	WAGNER
4.	OVERTURE ("Flying Dutchman")	WAGNER
5.	WALTZ ("Donauweibchen")	STRAUSS
6.	a. TRAUMEREI	SCHUMANN
	b. LIEBESLIEDCHEN (from "The Tempest")	TAUBERT
7.	MELODIES OF ALL NATIONS a. Italian. b. German. c. Hungarian.	MOSZKOWSKI
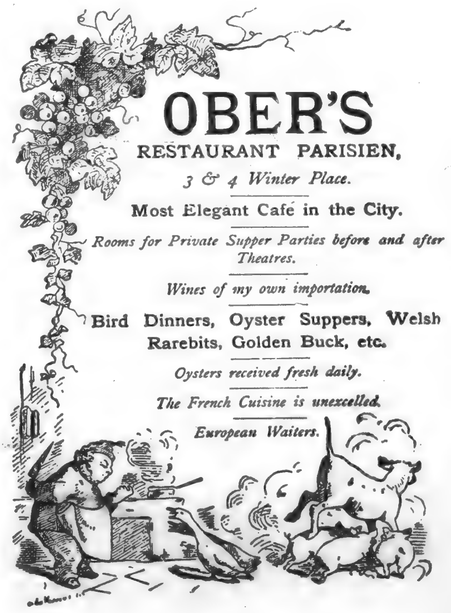
8.	OVERTURE ("Tantalusqualen")	SUPPE
9.	BAL MASQUE. a. Toreador Andalouse. b. Royal Tambour at Vivandiere.	RUBINSTEIN
10.	GALOP CHROMATIQUE	LISZT

*The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during this number.



OBER'S

RESTAURANT PARISIEN,

3 & 4 Winter Place.

Most Elegant Cafe in the City.

Rooms for Private Supper Parties before and after Theatres.

Wines of my own importation.

Bird Dinners, Oyster Suppers, Welsh Rarebits, Golden Buck, etc.

Oysters received fresh daily.

The French Cuisine is unexcelled.

European Waiters.

BESSE'S,

167 Tremont Street,

ICE CREAM PARLORS.

The best Ice Cream and Confectionery. The coolest and most comfortable place in Boston. Orders taken for delivery to any part of the city.

WE INVITE ATTENTION TO OUR

$5 HAND-SEWED

Lace, Button and Congress Calf Boots.

JOHN F. PRAY & SON,
321 Washington St., opp. Milk St.

KNABE

Manufacturers of

GRAND, UPRIGHT, AND SQUARE PIANO-FORTES

Unequalled in Tone, Touch, Workmanship, and Durability.

E. W. TYLER, Agent, 178 Tremont St.

R. H. WHITE & CO.

Washington Street, near Bedford.

The "Sembrich" Corset.

(REGISTERED.)

R. H. White & Co., Sole Owners.

THE MOST PERFECT FITTING CORSET IN THE WORLD. LENGTHENS THE WAIST AND REDUCES THE SIZE OF THE HIPS.

We take especial pleasure in showing this corset, as we know it is worthy the attention of every lady who is in want of a shapely, and, at the same time, a comfortable corset.

R. H. W. & CO.

Washington Street, near Bedford.

THE Lager Beer used at these Concerts is from the Bartholomay Brewing Company of Rochester, and is bottled for hotel and family use. J. C. Gerlach, N. E. Agent, 361 Atlantic Avenue.

THE

Collateral Loan Com'ny

328 WASHINGTON ST.

LOANS MADE ON

Diamonds,
Watches,
Jewelry,
Silverware,
Books, Etc.

The only Institution Chartered by the State.

If you contemplate purchasing DIAMONDS or other precious STONES, a visit to our office will satisfy you that it is the place to buy the best quality at the lowest prices. C. T. SEAVERNS & CO., 403 Washington St.

Boston Music Hall Bulletin

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING
DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.

The advertising columns in the "Bulletin" are controlled SOLELY by Carl G. Zerrahn, 257 Washington Street, Room 6, to whom all communications should be addressed, and who will be pleased to furnish rates upon application.

Mr. George H. Adams is authorized to receive advertisements for this programme.

CARL G. ZERRAHN.

PRESS OF ALFRED MUDGE & SON.

TRA-LA-LA-LOO.

"I cannot sing the old songs,"
Though well I know the tune,
And I can carol like the bird
That sings in leafy June.

Yet though I 'm full of music
As choirs of singing birds,
"I cannot sing the old songs"—
I do not know the words.

I start on "Hail Columbia,"
And get to "heaven-born band,"
And there I strike an up-grade
With neither steam or sand.

"Star-spangled banner" throws me
Right in my wildest screaming,
I start all right, but dumbly come
To voiceless wreck at "streaming."

So when I sing the old songs,
Don't murmur or complain,
If "Ti, de ah da, tum de dum"
Should fill the sweetest strain.

I love tiddy um dum di do,
And the trallala eep da birds,
But "I cannot sing the old songs"—
I do not know the words.

— Burdette.

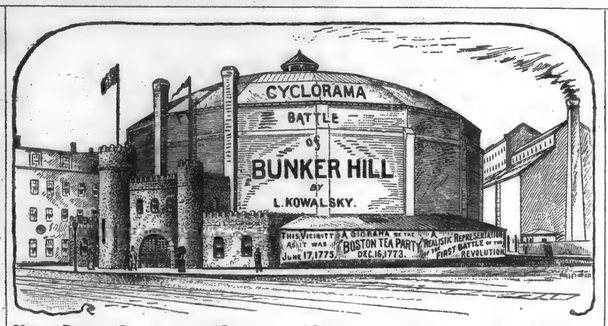
APROPOS of the miseries of criticism, the London Musical Times for March makes the following pertinent remarks: —

One of the troubles of the "concert noticer," sometimes called the musical critic, arises from the want in the English tongue of synonyms for certain stock expressions. Thus, when he has written the word "performed," he is compelled to fall back upon "executed," then "played," then "gave," then "rendered," and then he — like some of the items he describes — is "done." In his anxiety for variety he adopts terms that seem to be serviceable without inquiring into their applicability or to their philological accuracy. For example, the word "rendition," so frequently employed to express performance, like the word "execution," is of a somewhat ambiguous meaning. Each word is capable of a double signification, for "execution" may be the "doing of something to death" in fulfilment of a just sentence, while "rendition," if it means anything at all, can only be interpreted as the action of "tearing to pieces," or of giving in after a defeat. How far these words are fitted to express the action of a musical performance is doubtful. The poverty of our native tongue evidently exercises the minds of those versatile gentlemen attached to country newspapers, who are "turned on" to do the music, a fire, a coroner's inquest, or a parish meeting. They have "a nice derangement of epitaphs" suitable for each case, a choice assortment of fine words, which would be as beautiful as they are impressive if they were only inserted in the right places. When we find a rural genius gravely informing his readers that "the dominant key is A major in Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony," some regret is felt that no information is offered about the tonic. When, further, we learn that "the melody is taken by the 'cellos and basses, and, flowing over and around the orchestra with an exquisitely beautiful effect, is brought to a conclusion most impressively by three chords 'pizzicato' on the double bass," and "one's fancy can picture a rustic dance, with the adjuncts of soft scenery, a brilliant moon and an Italian sky, as the different measures trip from section to section in the orchestra," in this "most jubilant of symphonies," we feel that much is being done in quiet quarters to raise musical criticism into the ranks of the finer arts. The genius who declared that a certain singer was not successful "from a vocalistic point of view," and the clever creature who praised the performance of Rossini's overture, "See my remedy," will not have to wait long for their reward.



Now Open, 9 a. m. to 10 p. m., 401 Tremont St., near the Bridge.

J. C. GERLACH,

Sole N. E. Agent for the

Bartholomay Brewing Co.'s

CELEBRATED

ROCHESTER LAGER BEER.

Bottled for hotel and family use. Delivered free to any part of the city. This Beer is supplied to the patrons of these Concerts.

Also, Sole Agent of the RHENS NATURAL MINERAL WATER.

361 Atlantic Avenue and 22 Purchase Street.

Pitz

Photographic Portraiture.

Only those studios which pursue an all-the-year-round policy of lowest prices have the public confidence, and enjoy a steady and increasing patronage. Everybody knows that PITZ is the chief champion of steady, unsensational prices. No wonder, then, that all seasons find us equally busy, no spurts, no sacrifices in prices, but lowest prices always for the very best work. Active specialties now are the Boudoir, Elite and Panel sizes of Photographs, adapted for either large, splendidly retouched and finished heads, or full figures of children or ladies in bridal or party dresses.

Our old and original system of securing best Cabinet Photographs at special low rates is still in vogue, more successful than ever. If you don't know the plan, send or call for a card explaining it fully. We'll cheerfully furnish all you desire. 58 Temple Place.

FIRE INSURANCE

JOHN C. PAIGE,
20 Kilby Street,
BOSTON.

LE DÉJEUNER

132 Tremont St.
MAILLARD'S CANDIES,
DELICIOUS FRESH ICES.

OUR SPECIALTY,
STRAWBERRY ICE CREAM SODA
Made daily from fresh fruit.

OPEN EVERY EVENING.

Those who would recall Boston and vicinity as they appeared during the Revolutionary period should visit the New Cyclorama Building, 401 Tremont Street, and view the wonderfully realistic representations of the Battle of Bunker Hill, and the Boston Tea Party.

LE DÉJEUNER, 132 Tremont Street, makes a specialty of Strawberry Ice Cream Soda made daily from fresh fruit.

THE
LATEST EVENING TRAIN FOR NEW YORK

Leaves Boston daily (Sundays excepted) at 11.30 P. M.

VIA THE

N. Y. & N. E. R. R.

This late departure affords AMPLE time to reach the depot after the Concert. Pullman Sleeping-Cars run through to New York.

OFFICE, 322 WASHINGTON ST.
DEPOT, FOOT OF SUMMER ST.

The Wonderful Self-Playing ÆOLIAN ORGAN,

Can be played if desired, the same as any parlor organ at the will of the performer. Just the instrument for the home circle, lodges, hotels, yachts, etc. Send for descriptive circular and catalogue, or call and examine at warerooms, 225 Tremont Street. Please understand this is not an orguinette or anything of the kind. The only crank about it is the Sole Agent for N. E.

J. HOWARD RICHARDSON.

THE "Live Lobsters" broiled is original with the Park House, and is copied by other hotels and restaurants with great success, as it were.

J. H. LEWIS,

MERCHANT TAILOR,
417 WASHINGTON STREET.

All the Latest Novelties in Foreign and Domestic Goods for Gentlemen's Summer Wear.

DRESS SUITS TO LET.

HARDMAN

36,000 PIANOS IN USE

C. C. HARVEY & CO. . . . Salesrooms, 177 Tremont St., BOSTON.

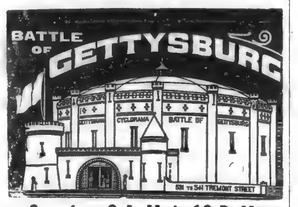
Estey Organs & Pianos

Fully Warranted. Sold on Instalments.

ESTEY,

159 Tremont Street - - - Boston.

DO NOT FAIL TO SEE THE



Open from 9 A. M. to 10 P. M.

Horse Cars pass the Door every minute.

A. L. BEARSE,

33 WINTER STREET,
HEADQUARTERS FOR

FANS

— AND —

JEWELRY.

MOXIE

Has created the greatest excitement, demand and sale as a beverage, in two years, ever witnessed in the history of trade, from the fact that it brings nervous, exhausted, overworked women to good powers of endurance in a few days. Cures the uncontrollable appetite for liquors and tobacco at once, and has recovered a large number of cases of old, helpless paralysis as a food only.

SUMMER

It has lately created an immense excitement in Malden, Mass., in recovering the twelve year old daughter of John Nicholson, 735 Main Street, of an old, helpless case of general paralysis, from which she was speechless. She is now a romping, healthy school-girl.

DRINK

It is neither medicine nor stimulant, but a plant that yields a rich nutrition for the nerves, which repairs the hard wear of life or the effects from dissipation within a few days or weeks, and contains no more alcohol than bread or ice-cream, and is the richest beverage known. Druggists have it. For home use buy the Moxie Syrup for 75 cents a 26 oz. bottle, mix three dessert-spoonfuls with a tumbler of ice or soda water, and it will cost you but two cents a tumbler. Three tumblers a day will give you double powers of endurance. MOXIE NERVE FOOD CO., LOWELL, MASS.

Thursday Evening, Aug. 9th, 8 to 11.

PROGRAMME.

1. GRAND ENTREE OF THE QUEEN OF SHEBA AT THE COURT OF KING SOLOMON (from the Opera "The Queen of Sheba"), GOLDMARK
2. OVERTURE ("Leonore" in C, No. 3) . . . . BEETHOVEN
3. GRAND SELECTION (from "Das Rheingold") . . . WAGNER
4. OVERTURE ("Flying Dutchman") . . . . . WAGNER
5. WALTZ ("Donauweibchen") . . . . . STRAUSS
6. a. TRAUMEREI . . . . . SCHUMANN
   b. LIEBESLIEDCHEN (from "The Tempest") . . . TAUBERT
7. MELODIES OF ALL NATIONS . . . . . MOSZKOWSKI
   a. Italian. b. German. c. Hungarian.
8. OVERTURE ("Tantalusqualen") . . . . . SUPPE
9. BAL MASQUE. . . . . RUBINSTEIN
   a. Toreador Andalouse. b. Royal Tambour at Vivandiere.
10. GALOP CHROMATIQUE . . . . . LISZT

*The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during this number.

OBER'S

RESTAURANT PARISIEN,

3 & 4 Winter Place.

Most Elegant Cafe in the City.

Rooms for Private Supper Parties before and after Theatres.

Wines of my own importation.

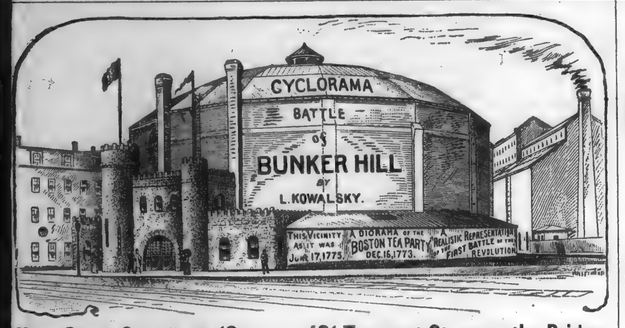
Bird Dinners, Oyster Suppers, Welsh Rarebits, Golden Buck, etc.

Oysters received fresh daily.

The French Cuisine is unexcelled.

European Waiters.

DIAMONDS or other precious STONES, a visit to our office will satisfy you that it is the place to buy the best quality at the lowest prices. C. T. SEAVERNS & CO., 403 Washington St. Opp. Macullar, Parker & Co. Room 8. Elevator.



Now Open, 9 a. m. to 10 p. m., 401 Tremont St., near the Bridge.

J. C. GERLACH,

Sole N. E. Agent for the

Bartholomay Brewing Co.'s

CELEBRATED

ROCHESTER LAGER BEER.

Bottled for hotel and family use. Delivered free to any part of the city. This Beer is supplied to the patrons of these Concerts.

Also, Sole Agent of the RHENS NATURAL MINERAL WATER.

361 Atlantic Avenue and 22 Purchase Street.

Ritz

Photographic Portraiture.

Only those studios which pursue an all-the-year-round policy of lowest prices have the public confidence, and enjoy a steady and increasing patronage. Everybody knows that RITZ is the chief champion of steady, unsensational prices. No wonder, then, that all seasons find us equally busy, no spurts, no sacrifices in prices, but lowest prices always for the very best work. Active specialties now are the Boudoir, Elite and Panel sizes of Photographs, adapted for either large, splendidly retouched and finished heads, or full figures of children or ladies in bridal or party dresses.

Our old and original system of securing best Cabinet Photographs at special low rates is still in vogue, more successful than ever. If you don't know the plan, send or call for a card explaining it fully. We'll cheerfully furnish all you desire. 58 Temple Place.

FIRE INSURANCE

JOHN C. PAIGE,

20 Kilby Street,

BOSTON.

LE DÉJEUNER

132 Tremont St.

MAILLARD'S CANDIES,

DELICIOUS FRESH ICES.

OUR SPECIALTY,

STRAWBERRY ICE CREAM SODA

Made daily from fresh fruit.

OPEN EVERY EVENING.

Those who would recall Boston and vicinity as they appeared during the Revolutionary period should visit the New Cyclorama Building, 401 Tremont Street, and view the wonderfully realistic representations of the Battle of Bunker Hill, and the Boston Tea Party.

LE DÉJEUNER, 132 Tremont Street, makes a specialty of Strawberry Ice Cream Soda made daily from fresh fruit.

THE

LATEST EVENING TRAIN FOR NEW YORK

Leaves Boston daily (Sundays excepted) at 11.30 P. M.

VIA THE

N. Y. & N. E. R. R.

This late departure affords AMPLE time to reach the depot after the Concert. Pullman Sleeping-Cars run through to New York.

OFFICE, 322 WASHINGTON ST.

DEPOT, FOOT OF SUMMER ST.

The Wonderful Self-Playing ÆOLIAN ORGAN.

Can be played if desired, the same as any parlor organ at the will of the performer. Just the instrument for the home circle, lodges, hotels, yachts, etc. Send for descriptive circular and catalogue, or call and examine at warerooms, 225 Tremont Street. Please understand this is not an orguinette or anything of the kind. The only crank about it is the Sole Agent for N. E.

J. HOWARD RICHARDSON.

THE "Live Lobsters" broiled is original with the Park House, and is copied by other hotels and restaurants with great success, as it were.

J. H. LEWIS,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

417 WASHINGTON STREET.

All the Latest Novelties in Foreign and Domestic Goods for Gentlemen's Summer Wear.

DRESS SUITS TO LET.

HARDMAN PIANOS

36,000 IN USE

C. C. HARVEY & CO. . . . Salesrooms, 177 Tremont St., BOSTON.

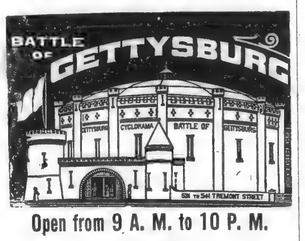
Estey Organs Pianos

Fully Warranted. Sold on Instalments.

ESTEY,

159 Tremont Street - - - Boston.

DO NOT FAIL TO SEE THE



Open from 9 A. M. to 10 P. M.

Horse Cars pass the Door every minute.

A. L. BEARSE,

33 WINTER STREET,

HEADQUARTERS FOR

FANS

—AND—

JEWELRY.

MOXIE

Has created the greatest excitement, demand and sale as a beverage, in two years, ever witnessed in the history of trade, from the fact that it brings nervous, exhausted, overworked women to good powers of endurance in a few days. Cures the uncontrollable appetite for liquors and tobacco at once, and has recovered a large number of cases of old, helpless paralysis as a food only.

SUMMER

It has lately created an immense excitement in Malden, Mass., in recovering the twelve year old daughter of John Nicholson, 735 Main Street, of an old, helpless case of general paralysis, from which she was speechless. She is now a romping, healthy school-girl.

DRINK

It is neither medicine nor stimulant, but a plant that yields a rich nutrition for the nerves, which repairs the hard wear of life or the effects from dissipation within a few days or weeks, and contains no more alcohol than bread or ice-cream, and is the richest beverage known. Druggists have it. For home use buy the Moxie Syrup for 75 cents a 26 oz. bottle, mix three dessert-spoonfuls with a tumbler of ice or soda water, and it will cost you but two cents a tumbler. Three tumblers a day will give you double powers of endurance. MOXIE NERVE FOOD CO., LOWELL, MASS.

Thursday Evening, Aug. 9th, 8 to 11.

PROGRAMME.

1. GRAND ENTREE OF THE QUEEN OF SHEBA AT THE COURT OF KING SOLOMON (from the Opera "The Queen of Sheba"), GOLDMARK
2. OVERTURE ("Leonore" in C, No. 3) . . . . . BEETHOVEN
3. GRAND SELECTION (from "Das Rheingold") . . . WAGNER
4. *OVERTURE ("Flying Dutchman") . . . . . WAGNER
5. WALTZ ("Donauweibchen") . . . . . STRAUSS
6. a. TRAUMEREI . . . . . SCHUMANN
   b.* LIEBESLIEDCHEN (from "The Tempest") . . TAUBERT
7. MELODIES OF ALL NATIONS . . . . . MOSZKOWSKI
   a. Italian. b. German. c. Hungarian.
8. OVERTURE ("Tantalusqualen") . . . . . SUPPE
9. BAL MASQUE. . . . . RUBINSTEIN
   a. Toreador Andalouse. b. Royal Tambour at Vivandiere.
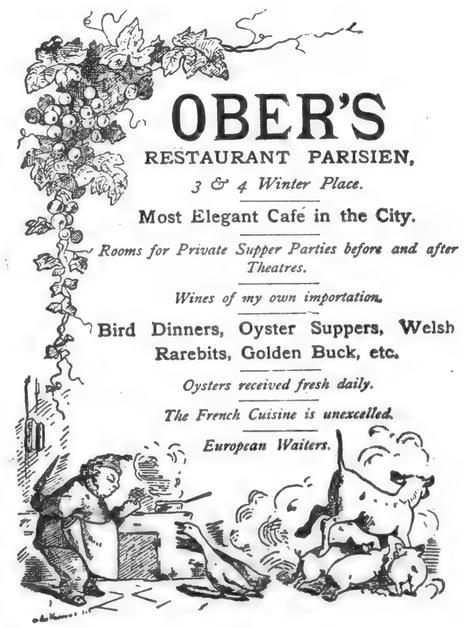
10. GALOP CHROMATIQUE . . . . . LISZT

*The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during this number.



OBER'S

RESTAURANT PARISIEN,

3 & 4 Winter Place.

Most Elegant Café in the City.

Rooms for Private Supper Parties before and after Theatres.

Wines of my own importation.

Bird Dinners, Oyster Suppers, Welsh Rarebits, Golden Buck, etc.

Oysters received fresh daily.

The French Cuisine is unexcelled.

European Waiters.

BESSE'S,

167 Tremont Street,

ICE CREAM PARLORS.

The best Ice Cream and Confectionery. The coolest and most comfortable place in Boston. Orders taken for delivery to any part of the city.

WE INVITE ATTENTION TO OUR

$5 HAND-SEWED

Lace, Button and Congress Calf Boots.

JOHN F. PRAY & SON,

321 Washington St., opp. Milk St.

KNABE

Manufacturers of

GRAND, UPRIGHT, AND SQUARE PIANO-FORTES

Unequalled in Tone, Touch, Workmanship, and Durability.

E. W. TYLER, Agent, 178 Tremont St.

R. H. WHITE & CO.

Washington Street, near Bedford.

The "Sembrich" Corset.

(REGISTERED.)

R. H. White & Co., Sole Owners.

THE MOST PERFECT FITTING CORSET IN THE WORLD. LENGTHENS THE WAIST AND REDUCES THE SIZE OF THE HIPS.

We take especial pleasure in showing this corset, as we know it is worthy the attention of every lady who is in want of a shapely, and, at the same time, a comfortable corset.

R.H.W.&CO.

Washington Street, near Bedford.

THE Lager Beer used at these Concerts is from the Bartholomay Brewing Company of Rochester, and is bottled for hotel and family use. J. C. Gerlach, N. E. Agent, 361 Atlantic Avenue.

THE

Collateral Loan Com'ny

328 WASHINGTON ST.

LOANS MADE ON

Diamonds,

Watches,

Jewelry,

Silverware,

Books, Etc.

The only Institution Chartered by the State.

REDUCTION

RATIO

12x

2.5 mm 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.5 mm

IVERS & POND
PIANO-FORTES.

THE FINEST INSTRUMENTS OF THEIR CLASS
IN THE WORLD.

VERY LOWEST PRICES
CONSISTENT WITH BEST QUALITY.

CONVENIENT TERMS OF PAYMENT. PIANOS TO RENT.

Warerooms, 181, 182 Tremont St., Boston. Factories, cor. Main & Albany Sts., Cambridgeport.

...ng the old songs"—

NO MATTER WHAT YOU WANT

From an apothecary store, you can save money by buying it at 40 Bromfield Street. We sell

ALL PATENT MEDICINES,

and all other drug store goods at

LOWER REDUCED PRICES

Than they can be bought for at any store on earth.

Physicians' Prescriptions put up for less than half of others' prices.

WOODWARD'S,

40 BROMFIELD STREET.

LOOK for the BLUE STORE.
for the RAINBOW SIGNS.
for the GOLDEN MORTAR over the door.

Remember that 40 is the number of the Original Cut Price Drug Store.

Pensee d'ete.

To Lenox, to Tuxedo Park,
To favored Newport's shore,
To Mount Desert like any lark
Our summer fancies soar.
But e'en in Adirondacks wild,
Or on the distant sea,
The heart of Boston's true-born child
Will ne'er forget P. B.

ELEVENSON.

A. Stowell & Co.

Summer JEWELRY. The Largest Variety of Fans, Opera Glasses, Worcester Porcelains, English Art Glass and China. Large and Attractive Stock. Lowest Prices.

NEW GOODS THIS WEEK.

24 WINTER ST.

POINT OF PINES
THE GREAT PYROTECHNIC SPECTACLE.

THAYER'S NEW FIREWORKS DRAMA

THE FALL OF TUNIS

Every pleasant evening (except Sunday).

Trains via Revere Beach and Lynn R. R. and Eastern Division Boston and Maine R. R.

Fare for the Round Trip, including admission, 35 cents.

TO GENTLEMEN.

In order to make room for our FALL STOCK we shall offer for the next thirty days some choice patterns of SCOTCH and ENGLISH SUITINGS at $30.00 each. Also, SCOTCH and ENGLISH TROUSERINGS at $10.00 each, spot cash.

VIVIAN,

2 (a) Park Street.

C. S. WILLIAMS & CO. 28 Congress St.

66 Devonshire Street, 26 Congress Square and Quincy House.
LYNN OFFICE, MOWER'S BLOCK.

Large or Small Lots on 1 per ct. margin.
No Interest. Profits Unlimited.

STOCKS, GRAIN & PROVISIONS.

COUNTRY and SEASHORE.

5 Quires Crown Imperial Linen
And 100 Envelopes, 55 cents.
PAPER BY THE POUND.

W. W. DAVIS & CO.
23 West Street.

THE new entrance to the Park House for ladies is on Bosworth Street. Musty Ale, Broiled Live Lobsters and Game are specialties.

The Boston Times.

"The most Enjoyable Musical and Dramatic Weekly published in Boston."

REGULAR FEATURES:

Society Gossip, Letters from Summer Resorts, Musical Mention, Dramatic News, Current Literature, Base Ball Games and Gossip, etc.

☞ For sale at all Hotels and News Stands every Sunday morning.

D. S. KNOWLTON, Publisher, 20 Hawley St.

Conundrums.

Why is it that so many cigar manufacturers desire to imitate the N S. Cigar?

A. Because it is and always has been a good and fine cigar, and has an excellent reputation.

How can you tell the genuine from the various imitations that exist at present?

A. By examining that nothing but the letters N S. are stamped in the cigar. All others are inferior, and are intended to mislead the public.

, instead of Tuesday.
Villiams will speak on the high school audi-
A. Chase will play
e hostesses are Mrs.
and Mrs. Ralph L.

b of Women

ng held on April itcher, Milton, the elected: president,
, vice president,
secretary, Mrs.
urer, Miss Nellie sewing commit-
th, chairman of
s. Walter Hart.

W. C. A.

Friday evenhrough Scenic ntains," per-
Ann Mathea,
egian songs.
ll follow the members of s.

will speak ether," on members
Miss Mar-
he Way-
Wheeler, side; re-

in the y even-by the Ayer, irman be in ur G. short an of rama Hose and d the d. Tea

Jewett,
Amos

nan of ed her Lowell
ril 22.
April

Newton Federation Interest in Unemployment Relief Play

Well-known club members of the Newtons are working toward the success of the three-act comedy, "T.N.T.," which will be given April 27, 28 and 29, at the Newton High School auditorium, with a cast including Mrs. Arthur W. Lane, Miss Dorothy DeWitt, Mrs. Harold C. Bond, Mrs. S. L. Sholley, Mrs. Henry H. Skelton, William V. M. Fawcett, Sam Tuthill, Miss Marinda Comer, John C. Hiller, and Cushman Clapp.

The entire proceeds of the performances will go to the Mayor's Relief Committee, Inc., for relief of the unemployed and will be credited to each village in proportion according to their respective quotas.

Wednesday and Thursday evenings,

(Photo by Bachrach)

Mrs. Henry H. Skelton

April 27 and 28, the Newton Post American Legion Band will furnish the music, and Friday evening (29th), the Newton High School Orchestra, directed by Mr. Spaulding, will be heard.

The following Newton women will act as ushers for the first performance Wednesday evening: Mrs. Francis J. Flagg; Mrs. Moses H. Gulesian, Mrs. Frank L. Richardson, Mrs. Frank A. Mason, Mrs. Ralph C. Henry, Mrs. Walter Railsback, Mrs. Albert P. Everts, Mrs. Thomas E. Young, Mrs. Donald E. Rust, Mrs. Odin C. Mackay, Mrs. Charles G. Wetherbee, and Mrs. Albert S. Hutchinson.

Thursday evening the immediate past president of the Newton Federation of Woman's Clubs, Mrs. Phister Cowin, with the immediate past presidents of woman's clubs in the different villages will act as ushers. They are Mrs. Walter A. Hosley, Mrs. Ward I. Cornell, Mrs. Albert D. Auryansen, Mrs. Charles E. Valentine, Mrs. Charles C. Willson, Miss Ethel Sabin, Mrs. Walter Hartstone, Mrs. Joseph A. Otis and Mrs. Francis Newhall.

The president of the Newton Federation of Woman's Club, Mrs. Samuel N. Braman, will act as hostess for the ushers for the performance Friday evening, April 29. The ushers will be Mrs. John R. Capron, president of the Newton Center Woman's Club; Mrs. Harry P. Forte, president of the Newton Highlands Woman's Club; Mrs. Herbert N. Blair, presi-

From Dramatist

Three Years' Record from O'Neill's Ow
Of the Inception, Sketching, Shap
Writing, Revising, Rounding,
Of His Threefold Play

In the limited edition of Eugene O'Neill's "Mourning Becomes Electra," published by Horace Liveright, Inc., were included working notes and extracts from a fragmentary diary kept by the playwright. By consent of Mr. O'Neill, and with the kind permission of the publisher, they were printed in the Transcript on Saturday, Nov. 7, 1931, when the play was new in New York. So great was the demand for copies that the edition of the paper in which they were included was quickly exhausted. Now, in response to many requests and as prelude to the arrival of the play at the Colonial Theater on Monday evening. the notes are here reprinted with the same permission.

SPRING, 1926)—Modern psychological drama, using one of the old legend plots of Greek tragedy for its basic theme—the Electra story? —the Medea? Is it possible to get modern psychological approximation of Greek sense of fate into such a play, which an intelligent audience of today, possessed by no belief in gods or supernatural retribution, could accept and be moved by?

2. (October, 1928—Arabian Sea, en route for China.) Greek tragedy plot idea—story of Electra and family psychologically most interesting—most comprehensive, intense, basic human inter-relationships—can easily be widened in scope to include still others—

3. (November, 1928—China Sea.) Greek plot idea—give modern Electra figure in play; tragic ending worthy of character. In Greek story she peters out into undramatic married banality. Such a character contained too much tragic fate in her soul to permit this—Why should Furies have let Electra escape unpunished? Why did the chain of fated crime and retribution ignore her mother's murderess?—a weakness in what remains to us of Greek tragedy that there is no play about Electra's life after murder of Clytaemnestra. Surely it possesses as imaginative tragic possibilities as any of their plots!

4. (Cap d'Ail, France—April, 1929.) Greek tragedy plot idea—no matter in what period of American history play is laid, must remain modern psychological drama—nothing to do with period except to use as mask—What war? Revolution too far off, too clogged in people's minds with romantic grammar school history associations. World War too near and recognizable in its obstructing (for my purpose) minor aspects and superficial character identifications (audience would not see fated wood because too busy recalling trees)—needs distance and perspective—period not too distant for audience to associate it with, yet possessing ters, at least—but and make it a stu only convenience always tough job.

Agamemnon—
Clytaemnestr
Orestes—Ori
Electra — E
Elsa (?).
Laodicea — more like it),
Aegisthus
Adam (?).
Pylades—
Hermione

7. (Cap
Greek trage
ing Becom sense of th
Electra to in usual mourning is the o destiny—

8. (C
"Mourni getting or even and ma non's Electr using retribu
Give "Mou
trilog ing"—

9.
"Mou
—for straig purp nite later
—wha use m

10.
Franc comes play,

11.
Franc comes ond pl vantag point, who murde tion, a ters—enable withou compa happe able) winke comin pecte in N in 18

12.
Fran come play,
Elec
Ores

13.
Fre

AMERICAN ART JOURNAL

Music in Cincinnati.

The recent visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was an event of the greatest significance in the history of this season. The stamp of an original genius is evident in the directing of Mr. Nikisch, and the way in which his players respond to every demand stamps them as individual artists.

Before criticising their concert, however, let me allude to a handsome entertainment at the Cincinnati Conservatory. A reception to Mr. Nikisch, Madame Steinbach-Jahns, Mr. Steinbach, her husband, also to Mr. Kneisel, the violinist, and to Mr. Hikking, the 'cellist, given in the parlors of the Conservatory on May 7.

Besides the students of the school about 150 of our best-known citizens and connoisseurs were present. No school or body of art workers in our city is more active or enterprising in fostering and developing all good forms of music than Miss Clara Baur, the Directress of the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, and her admirable corps of teachers.

The reception to Mr. Nikisch, besides its delightful social character, had a direct musical significance, for by thus cultivating friendly relations with celebrated artists and bringing their students in social contact with them, a vast impulse of enthusiasm is imparted to these young musicians, and waves of ideal influence are started, whose circles go on widening infinitely. Delicate refreshments, genial conversation, good humor and mutual good will were the order of the day; and there was but one opinion, to the effect that a more delightful afternoon had not been spent in a long time.

On the 6th and 7th inst. Herr Nikisch, with his Boston symphony orchestra, gave us two concerts which were well attended. The elite of art and fashion were there en masse and the consumate excellencies manifested by one of the greatest living conductors and his celebrated orchestra shone out at every moment with astonishing power and aroused storms of applause.

The concerts were agreeably diversified by the singing of the renowned dramatic prima donna Madame Steinbach-Jahns and the playing of those masters of their instruments, Messrs Hekking and Kneisel. Cincinnati is a peculiar city. If a stranger should happen to be present at one of our great gala concerts, such as the first of Sarasate and D'Albert or any of our great festival affairs, he would say that we were like an oasis in the desert; that musical enthusiasm shot sky high, like the date palm that encircles a living fountain in some hot and arid land; but alas at other times performances of equal excellence do not receive any just or creditable support.

No weather bureau has ever yet been able to ascertain or predict the changes of public taste in matters of art; and few cities are more incalculable than ours. Amid all this uncertainty, however, our schools are strong, steadfast and of lofty purpose, like an ocean cliff, which may at times be shrouded with clouds or crowned with tempests, but is again gilded with serene sunshine; so our music schools defy the turbulent changes of the populace.

Among these schools none has been more lofty in its purpose or more unswerving in its adherence to the best things than the Cincinnati Conservatory, which is in effect an expression of the musical views and character of Miss Clara Baur, its founder. The impromptu reception to Mr. Nikisch and his coadjutors at this institution was a fitting testimonial of our great admiration for him. The general impression here seems to be that he is not only a great technician, but a supremely great interpreter. His orchestra is admirably balanced, composed of virtuosi, and the exquisite clearness of his phrasing marvelous accents and his broad and careful reading of the works aroused profound enthusiasm. His charming personality is a fitting counterpart to his consumate artistship, and the total impression of himself and orchestra in Cincinnati has been as favorable as anything I have ever observed.

J. S. V C.

Boston Post

WEDNESDAY MORNING, JUNE 11, 1890.

NO MORE "POP" CONCERTS.

The police commissioners have again decided that no license to sell light refreshments shall be granted to Music Hall this year, which means that the "pop" concerts, which had almost come to be a part of Boston's summer life, shall not be revived. Commissioner Whiting gives as a reason for the action of the board that there were not enough licenses to go around. Mr. Ellis, the manager of the concerts, was greatly surprised at the news. No exceptions had ever been taken to the character of the entertainments; a large number of the best musicians of the city found employment during the summer months. The "pops" were supported by some of the best people of the city.

BOSTON EVENING RECORD.
Entered at the Post Office as second class matter.
JUNE 10, 1890.

LATEST EXTRA

HALF-PAST FIVE.

NO MORE POPS!

Police Commission Refuses a License.

They Let All the North End Dives Run,

But Will Not Mix Beer and Fine Music, No.

Perhaps They Have a Grudge Against Mr. Vogner.

Harmonic Boston is at the high C of disgust.

The Music Hall "Pops" are no more.

The autocratic police commission has set its mighty foot upon the neck of melody, and music lovers must seek consolation in the strains of the German bands, and in the free concerts to be furnished from the city treasury.

The fiat has gone forth that no license to sell light refreshments will be granted to Music Hall this summer. The malodorous North st. dives can continue to dispense, via tables, bad beer and worse whiskey; rows between drunken men and disreputable women may continue there unchecked, but the Music Hall promenades must be abolished. Why?

The straight-laced do not utter a word against the character of the Music Hall entertainments of this nature. Not only has good order and decorum been the rule, but the "Pops" have numbered among their patrons many of the best people of the city. The "Pops" have furnished music lovers forced to remain in the city during the summer months a harmless means of enjoyment which has been appreciated as much as the action of the police commission will be disfavored.

Not Enough to "Go Round."

A Record reporter met Commissioner Whiting at the outer portal of the Pemberton sq. office this morning. The following colloquy ensued:—

Reporter—"Have you anything to say, Mr. Whiting, as to why you withhold the Music Hall license?"

Mr. Whiting—"Nothing to say."

"Were your reasons general, or was it a complaint of an abuttor?"

"Hadn't enough licenses to go around."

"Good-day."

"Good-day."

Manager Ellis's Surprise.

C. F. Ellis, the manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Music Hall, talked on the subject this morning with a Record man.

"That we did not receive a license is a great surprise to us," said he, "as we have had it each season for five years, and the commissioners had expressed themselves in previous seasons as well pleased with the concerts and manner in which they were conducted. No exceptions have ever been taken and none could be taken to the character of the concerts and the audiences which attended. As a matter of fact the 'pops' were supported by the best class of people, and it is especially to be regretted for the reason that a large number of the best musicians of the city found employment during the summer months, making the season of musical engagements extend throughout the year, making an inducement to valuable artists to make this city a musical centre."

"The commissioner gave as a reason that their limited number of licenses could not supply the number of applicants, and as our license only extended over a few weeks of the summer, though we paid the license of a year, yet the interests of those who wanted a license for the entire year were more at stake."

The Record regards these excuses as very thin! Boston can spare half a dozen North End rumholes and yet gain in a license for the Music Hall pops!

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, JUNE 12.

No Music Hall "pops" this summer, and it's not much use to scold the police commissioners, either. That trio of autocrats is wholly irresponsible to the people of Boston. If only Boston could get at them there would be a popular concert and no mistake.

---

[150]

BOSTON EVENING RECORD.
Entered at the Post Office as second class matter.
JUNE 11, 1890.

CARING FOR THE DIVES.

"Not Enough Licenses" for a Decent Place——After All the Cheap Rumholes Have Been Fully Supplied.—[Decision of the Police Commissioners.

Boston Daily Traveller

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 11, 1890.

THE SUMMER "POPS."

During the past few years the unhappy Bostonian who has been obliged to remain in town during the hot season, while his family and his best friends have revelled in the delights of the seashore or in the pastoral beauties of the rural resort, has had one pastime to console him in his forlorn and wretched condition. He has been able to go to the "Pop" concerts at Music Hall, where, amid the other unfortunates, like himself—dwellers in the stifling town—and in the fragrant atmosphere of the Havana cigar he has listened to the entrancing strains of a Strauss waltz and for the time forgotten his sad fate. This year his condition will be harder than ever, for this sole consolation has been ruthlessly taken from him. The action of the Police Commissioners in refusing to grant a license for the continuance of the "Pops" is one of those official acts, the wisdom and justice of which is not apparent to the average intelligence. In past years they have been well conducted; they have served a good purpose in furnishing agreeable musical entertainment at a price within the reach of everybody. We presume that the reason the license was refused to the committee of these concerts was due to the fact that intoxicating liquors were sold in the hall while they were going on. This objection might be met by providing that they shall be conducted on strictly temperance principles. It would be a mistake to suppose that those persons who frequent these concerts go to them for the purpose of drinking; they go for the pleasure of hearing good music at their ease, and with the privilege of taking refreshments incidentally. We venture to say that if the "Pops" were conducted as they have been conducted in past years, with the single difference that no intoxicating liquors should be sold in the hall while they were in progress, they would meet with the same success which has always attended them.

Boston Post

FRIDAY MORNING, JUNE 13, 1890

The Music Hall "Pops" on a prohibition basis, as has been suggested, would never do at all. The popping of the champagne cork or the patent stopper is a sine qua non.

Gazette

BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, JUNE 15.

RIDICULOUS, IF NOT WORSE.

And now certain uncharitable people are wondering if, after all, the license was withheld from Music Hall bec use there were not enough licenses to go around, or because there was not enough of something else to go around. It does not seem reasonable that the Police Commissioners should have been anxious to deprive so respectable a place as Music Hall of a license in order to accommodate some cheap, disreputable rum-hole with a right to dispense vile liquors. As a mere matter of choice it would appear that the preference should have been given to Music Hall, on the ground that simply beer and light wines were dispensed there, and that only, for a month or two. However, there is no knowing the mysterious processes by which the official brain reaches its conclusions, though in this instance it looks very like an official lack of brain.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 14, 1890.

It certainly seems as if the Board of Police were bent upon alienating the esteem and support of the community in every possible way, reckless of the consideration that they cannot maintain themselves as disciplinarians with their force or as gentlemen and citizens with their acquaintances and fellow-townsmen if they continue to show as little wisdom, acumen and courage as many of their recent acts and attitudes display. Their latest failure to recognize the right course and to pursue it lies in their refusal to issue the license necessary for this year's series of summer-evening concerts at Music Hall. What can these three superior personages be thinking about when they set themselves up stolidly against the general sense of the community, and not only affront a local sentiment which it is their duty to respect, but do the city a material injury beside? They are appointed and paid to prevent and repress evil and to foster good. They sit idly by and let people be robbed of money in gambling shops and of reputation and character in disorderly houses, when they have statutory and material power enough to suppress summarily scores of such establishments and to punish by public obloquy the owners and supporters of them. They cannot long maintain their impassive attitude of ignorance and disregard of law without awakening suspicions that their favorable inaction has been obtained by means which one would hesitate to attribute to them. And now, on the other hand, they make a brave stand and close to the vast public of residents and summer visitors one source of pure pleasure against which no unprejudiced person can breathe one whisper of complaint. The Music Hall promenade concerts have been models in every way, and they have brought to the general coffers of the city a deal of money which would else have been expended otherwhere (if merely material considerations are to be brought up), while the music has been fine in choice, often newly drawn from the highest sources, and beautifully performed under eminent direction by an able body of Boston musicians. On the score of decorum there is no room for question; no irregular conduct has ever been tolerated for an instant and no suspicious person admitted within the doors; the average quality of the audiences has been as high as in the theatres during their season and on many special occasions has been as brilliant, fashionable and cultured as on any but exceptional dramatic nights. No intoxicants have been sold and the chief consumption has been of beer, lemonade and syrups, with an occasional glass of light wine. If the commissioners have any decent reasons for withholding the license let these be made public; if not, the public must draw their own conclusion at the refusal.

BOSTON HERALD.

MONDAY, JUNE 16, 1890.

MR. OSBORNE EXPLAINS.

Why a License Was Not Granted for the "Pop" Concerts.

So much adverse criticism has been aimed at the police board because of its refusal to grant a liquor license for the Music Hall "pop" concerts, that the commissioners at length feel inclined to take up the cudgels in their own behalf. The HERALD today prevailed upon Commissioner Osborne to make the following statement of his own views, which, to a great extent, represent those of the entire board:

"It is proper to correct the impression that some of the public may have had that the rejection of the Music Hall license was due to any objectionable motive. Personally, I have always been friendly to that license, and to the object for which it was intended. The concerts are nearer to the attractive music hall entertainments which persons travelling abroad enjoy, nearer to the Strauss concerts in Vienna, for example, than anything else in this country. Last year, when the limitation of licenses went into effect, the Music Hall license was one of the 780 selected as those which had drawn prizes without the necessity of any person importuning the board. Within a very short time—July 2, I believe—an application was made to transfer the license to another place. It was accordingly transferred on July 11 to an old oyster stand in Haymarket square, and a man named Peirce got the benefit. As I understood it, Mr. Ellis, who managed the concerts, had surrendered his right to one of the places under the limitation of licenses. A year ago we had to reject a number of applicants who applied again this year, and this year the Music Hall manager didn't have the same equitable standing before the board that others had. It was fair to suppose that the licensees against whom no serious remonstrances had been made had conducted their business in a legitimate and proper manner. Therefore it was clear that if Music Hall resigned its place there was no place left for it unless some person who had carried on his business properly gave up his license. Some of the old licenses were rejected this year, it is true, but the places thus vacated were filled from applicants who were shut out last year because there was no room for them, and against whom no objection had been raised. To remove the pressure brought to bear for licenses both this year and last, the board issued the total number at one time, so that no license could be granted to Music Hall after the list was complete. We should have issued the license later, if we could, when we learned that the concerts had been successful and not a failure as we had been led to suppose. We could not do that, however. If the manager had only held on to his license, keeping it in a box all winter, if necessary, he would have surely have had his license renewed. Now, I regret as much as anybody does that Music Hall has no license, but from the knowledge I had, thinking that the concerts were not a profitable undertaking, and that the manager had surrendered his place in the limited number by transferring his privileges in the middle of the summer, I couldn't come to any other conclusion than to leave Music Hall out of the list altogether this year. The public may regret this necessity, as I do, but a fair judicial mind could have taken no other course."

Mr. Osborne added that the Music Hall concerts may be licensed now by only one board, which is by the transfer of a license already issued from the present holder to the manager of the "pops." It is said indeed that this plan may be adopted by the proprietors of another series of popular entertainments—that is, if they can get a license to step down and out in that way.

JUNE 7, 1890.]

AMERICAN ART JOURNAL

Music in Cincinnati.

The recent visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was an event of the greatest significance in the history of this season. The stamp of an original genius is evident in the directing of Mr. Nikisch, and the way in which his players respond to every demand stamps them as individual artists.

Before criticising their concert, however, let me allude to a handsome entertainment at the Cincinnati Conservatory. A reception to Mr. Nikisch, Madame Steinbach-Jahns, Mr. Steinbach, her husband, also to Mr. Kneisel, the violinist, and to Mr. Hikking, the 'cellist, given in the parlors of the Conservatory on May 7.

Besides the students of the school about 150 of our best-known citizens and connoisseurs were present. No school or body of art workers in our city is more active or enterprising in fostering and developing all good forms of music than Miss Clara Baur, the Directress of the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, and her admirable corps of teachers.

The reception to Mr. Nikisch, besides its delightful social character, had a direct musical significance, for by thus cultivating friendly relations with celebrated artists and bringing their students in social contact with them, a vast impulse of enthusiasm is imparted to these young musicians, and waves of ideal influence are started, whose circles go on widening infinitely. Delicate refreshments, genial conversation, good humor and mutual good will were the order of the day; and there was but one opinion, to the effect that a more delightful afternoon had not been spent in a long time.

On the 6th and 7th inst. Herr Nikisch, with his Boston symphony orchestra, gave us two concerts which were well attended. The elite of art and fashion were there en masse and the consumate excellencies manifested by one of the greatest living conductors and his celebrated orchestra shone out at every moment with astonishing power and aroused storms of applause.

The concerts were agreeably diversified by the singing of the renowned dramatic prima donna Madame Steinbach-Jahns and the playing of those masters of their instruments, Messrs Hekking and Kneisel. Cincinnati is a peculiar city. If a stranger should happen to be present at one of our great gala concerts, such as the first of Sarasate and D'Albert or any of our great festival affairs, he would say that we were like an oasis in the desert; that musical enthusiasm shot sky high, like the date palm that encircles a living fountain in some hot and arid land; but alas at other times performances of equal excellence do not receive any just or creditable support.

No weather bureau has ever yet been able to ascertain or predict the changes of public taste in matters of art; and few cities are more incalculable than ours. Amid all this uncertainty, however, our schools are strong, steadfast and of lofty purpose, like an ocean cliff, which may at times be shrouded with clouds or crowned with tempests, but is again gilded with serene sunshine; so our music schools defy the turbulent changes of the populace.

Among these schools none has been more lofty in its purpose or more unswerving in its adherence to the best things than the Cincinnati Conservatory, which is in effect an expression of the musical views and character of Miss Clara Baur, its founder. The impromptu reception to Mr. Nikisch and his coadjutors at this institution was a fitting testimonial of our great admiration for him. The general impression here seems to be that he is not only a great technician, but a supremely great interpreter. His orchestra is admirably balanced, composed of virtuosi, and the exquisite clearness of his phrasing marvelous accents and his broad and careful reading of the works aroused profound enthusiasm. His charming personality is a fitting counterpart to his consumate artistship, and the total impression of himself and orchestra in Cincinnati has been as favorable as anything I have ever observed.

J. S. V C.

Boston Post

WEDNESDAY MORNING, JUNE 11, 1890

NO MORE "POP" CONCERTS.

The police commissioners have again decided that no license to sell light refreshments shall be granted to Music Hall this year, which means that the "pop" concerts, which had almost come to be a part of Boston's summer life, shall not be revived. Commissioner Whiting gives as a reason for the action of the board that there were not enough licenses to go around. Mr. Ellis, the manager of the concerts, was greatly surprised at the news. No exceptions had ever been taken to the character of the entertainments; a large number of the best musicians of the city found employment during the summer months. The "pops" were supported by some of the best people of the city.

BOSTON EVENING RECORD.

Entered at the P[ost] JUNE 10, 1890 [all matter.]

LATEST

EXTRA

HALF-PAST FIVE.

NO MORE POPS!

Police Commission Refuses a License.

They Let All the North End Dives Run,

But Will Not Mix Beer and Fine Music, No.

Perhaps They Have a Grudge Against Mr. Vogner.

Harmonic Boston is at the high C of disgust.

The Music Hall "Pops" are no more.

The autocratic police commission has set its mighty foot upon the neck of melody, and music lovers must seek consolation in the strains of the German bands, and in the free concerts to be furnished from the city treasury.

The fiat has gone forth that no license to sell light refreshments will be granted to Music Hall this summer. The malodorous North st. dives can continue to dispense, via tables, bad beer and worse whiskey; rows between drunken men and disreputable women may continue there unchecked, but the Music Hall promenades must be abolished. Why?

The straight-laced do not utter a word against the character of the Music Hall entertainments of this nature. Not only has good order and decorum been the rule, but the "Pops" have numbered among their patrons many of the best people of the city. The "Pops" have furnished music lovers forced to remain in the city during the summer months a harmless means of enjoyment which has been appreciated as much as the action of the police commission will be disfavored.

Not Enough to "Go Round."

A Record reporter met Commissioner Whiting at the outer portal of the Pemberton sq. office this morning. The following colloquy ensued:—

Reporter—"Have you anything to say, Mr. Whiting, as to why you withheld the Music Hall license?"

Mr. Whiting—"Nothing to say."

"Were your reasons general, or was it a complaint of an abuttor?"

"Hadn't enough licenses to go around."

"Good-day."

"Good-day."

Manager Ellis's Surprise.

C. F. Ellis, the manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Music Hall, talked on the subject this morning with a Record man.

"That we did not receive a license is a great surprise to us," said he, "as we have had it each season for five years, and the commissioners had expressed themselves in previous seasons as well pleased with the concerts and manner in which they were conducted. No exceptions have ever been taken and none could be taken to the character of the concerts and the audiences which attended. As a matter of fact the 'pops' were supported by the best class of people, and it is especially to be regretted for the reason that a large number of the best musicians of the city found employment during the summer months, making the season of musical engagements extend throughout the year, making an inducement to valuable artists to make this city a musical centre."

"The commissioner gave as a reason that their limited number of licenses could not supply the number of applicants, and as our license only extended over a few weeks of the summer, though we paid the license of a year, yet the interests of those who wanted a license for the entire year were more at stake."

The Record regards these excuses as very thin! Boston can spare half a dozen North End rumholes and yet gain in a license for the Music Hall pops!

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, JUNE 12.

No Music Hall "pops" this summer, and it's not much use to scold the police commissioners, either. That trio of autocrats is wholly irresponsible to the people of Boston. If only Boston could get at them there would be a popular concert and no mistake.

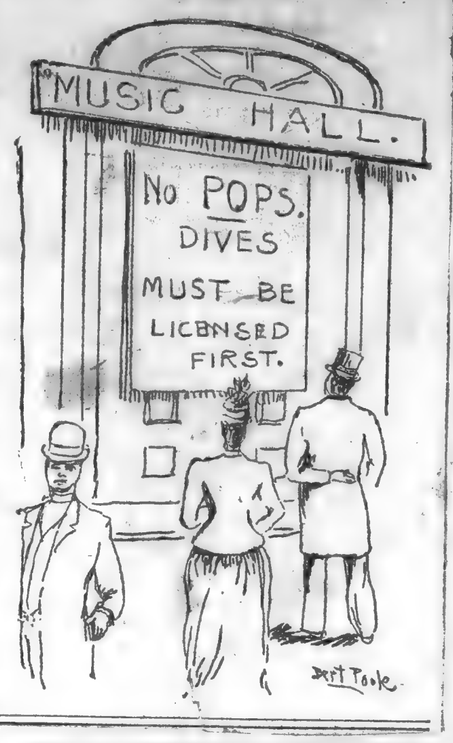
[150]

BOSTON EVENING RECORD.

Entered at the P[ost] JUNE 11, [all matter.]

CARING FOR THE DIVES.

"Not Enough Licenses" for a Decent Place——After All the Cheap Rumholes Have Been Fully Supplied.—[Decision of the Police Commissioners.



Boston Daily Traveller

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 11, 1890.

THE SUMMER "POPS."

During the past few years the unhappy Bostonian who has been obliged to remain in town during the hot season, while his family and his best friends have revelled in the delights of the seashore or in the pastoral beauties of the rural resort, has had one pastime to console him in his forlorn and wretched condition. He has been able to go to the "Pop" concerts at Music Hall, where, amid the other unfortunates, like himself—dwellers in the stifling town—and in the fragrant atmosphere of the Havana cigar he has listened to the entrancing strains of a Strauss waltz and for the time forgotten his sad fate. This year his condition will be harder than ever, for this sole consolation has been ruthlessly taken from him. The action of the Police Commissioners in refusing to grant a license for the continuance of the "Pops" is one of those official acts, the wisdom and justice of which is not apparent to the average intelligence. In past years they have been well conducted; they have served a good purpose in furnishing agreeable musical entertainment at a price within the reach of everybody. We presume that the reason the license was refused to the committee of these concerts was due to the fact that intoxicating liquors were sold in the hall while they were going on. This objection might be met by providing that they shall be conducted on strictly temperance principles. It would be a mistake to suppose that those persons who frequent these concerts go to them for the purpose of drinking; they go for the pleasure of hearing good music at their ease, and with the privilege of taking refreshments incidentally. We venture to say that if the "Pops" were conducted as they have been conducted in past years, with the single difference that no intoxicating liquors should be sold in the hall while they were in progress, they would meet with the same success which has always attended them.

Boston Post

FRIDAY MORNING, JUNE 13, 1890

The Music Hall "Pops" on a prohibition basis, as has been suggested, would never do at all. The popping of the champagne cork or the patent stopper is a sine qua non.

Gazette

BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, JUNE 15.

RIDICULOUS, IF NOT WORSE.

And now certain uncharitable people are wondering if, after all, the license was withheld from Music Hall bec use there were not enough licenses to go around, or because there was not enough of something else to go around. It does not seem reasonable that the Police Commissioners should have been anxious to deprive so respectable a place as Music Hall of a license in order to accommodate some cheap, disreputable rum-hole with a right to dispense vile liquors. As a mere matter of choice it would appear that the preference should have been given to Music Hall, on the ground that simply beer and light wines were dispensed there, and that only, for a month or two. However, there is no knowing the mysterious processes by which the official brain reaches its conclusions, though in this instance it looks very like an official lack of brain.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 14, 1890.

It certainly seems as if the Board of Police were bent upon alienating the esteem and support of the community in every possible way, reckless of the consideration that they cannot maintain themselves as disciplinarians with their force or as gentlemen and citizens with their acquaintances and fellow-townsmen if they continue to show as little wisdom, acumen and courage as many of their recent acts and attitudes display. Their latest failure to recognize the right course and to pursue it lies in their refusal to issue the license necessary for this year's series of summer-evening concerts at Music Hall. What can these three superior personages be thinking about when they set themselves up stolidly against the general sense of the community, and not only affront a local sentiment which it is their duty to respect, but do the city a material injury beside? They are appointed and paid to prevent and repress evil and to foster good. They sit idly by and let people be robbed of money in gambling shops and of reputation and character in disorderly houses, when they have statutory and material power enough to suppress summarily scores of such establishments and to punish by public obloquy the owners and supporters of them. They cannot long maintain their impassive attitude of ignorance and disregard of law without awakening suspicions that their favorable inaction has been obtained by means which one would hesitate to attribute to them. And now, on the other hand, they make a brave stand and close to the vast public of residents and summer visitors one source of pure pleasure against which no unprejudiced person can breathe one whisper of complaint. The Music Hall promenade concerts have been models in every way, and they have brought to the general coffers of the city a deal of money which would else have been expended otherwhere (if merely material considerations are to be brought up), while the music has been fine in choice, often newly drawn from the highest sources, and beautifully performed under eminent direction by an able body of Boston musicians. On the score of decorum there is no room for question; no irregular conduct has ever been tolerated for an instant and no suspicious person admitted within the doors; the average quality of the audiences has been as high as in the theatres during their season and on many special occasions has been as brilliant, fashionable and cultured as on any but exceptional dramatic nights. No intoxicants have been sold and the chief consumption has been of beer, lemonade and syrups, with an occasional glass of light wine. If the commissioners have any decent reasons for withholding the license let these be made public; if not, the public must draw their own conclusion at the refusal.

BOSTON HERALD.

MONDAY, JUNE 16, 1890.

MR. OSBORNE EXPLAINS.

Why a License Was Not Granted for the "Pop" Concerts.

So much adverse criticism has been aimed at the police board because of its refusal to grant a liquor license for the Music Hall "pop" concerts, that the commissioners at length feel inclined to take up the cudgels in their own behalf. The HERALD today prevailed upon Commissioner Osborne to make the following statement of his own views, which, to a great extent, represent those of the entire board:

"It is proper to correct the impression that some of the public may have had that the rejection of the Music Hall license was due to any objectionable motive. Personally, I have always been friendly to that license, and to the object for which it was intended. The concerts are nearer to the attractive music hall entertainments which persons travelling abroad enjoy, nearer to the Strauss concerts in Vienna, for example, than anything else in this country. Last year, when the limitation of licenses went into effect, the Music Hall license was one of the 780 selected as those which had drawn prizes without the necessity of any person importuning the board. Within a very short time—July 2, I believe—an application was made to transfer the license to another place. It was accordingly transferred on July 11 to an old oyster stand in Haymarket square, and a man named Peirce got the benefit. As I understood it, Mr. Ellis, who managed the concerts, had surrendered his right to one of the places under the limitation of licenses. A year ago we had to reject a number of applicants who applied again this year, and this year the Music Hall manager didn't have the same equitable standing before the board that others had. It was fair to suppose that the licensees against whom no serious remonstrances had been made had conducted their business in a legitimate and proper manner. Therefore it was clear that if Music Hall resigned its place there was no place left for it unless some person who had carried on his business properly gave up his license. Some of the old licenses were rejected this year, it is true, but the places thus vacated were filled from applicants who were shut out last year because there was no room for them, and against whom no objection had been raised. To remove the pressure brought to bear for licenses both this year and last, the board issued the total number at one time, so that no license could be granted to Music Hall after the list was complete. We should have issued the license later, if we could, when we learned that the concerts had been successful and not a failure as we had been led to suppose. We could not do that, however. If the manager had only held on to his license, keeping it in a box all winter, if necessary, he would have surely have had his license renewed. Now, I regret as much as anybody does that Music Hall has no license, but from the knowledge I had, thinking that the concerts were not a profitable undertaking, and that the manager had surrendered his place in the limited number by transferring his privileges in the middle of the summer, I couldn't come to any other conclusion than to leave Music Hall out of the list altogether this year. The public may regret this necessity, as I do, but a fair, judicial mind could have taken no other course."

Mr. Osborne added that the Music Hall concerts may be licensed now by only one means, which is by the transfer of a license already issued from the present holder to the manager of the "pops." It is said, indeed, that this plan may be adopted by the projectors of another series of popular musical entertainments—that is, if they can get a licensee to step down and out in their favor.

AMERICAN ART JOURNAL

Music in Cincinnati.

The recent visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was an event of the greatest significance in the history of this season. The stamp of an original genius is evident in the directing of Mr. Nikisch, and the way in which his players respond to every demand stamps them as individual artists.

Before criticising their concert, however, let me allude to a handsome entertainment at the Cincinnati Conservatory. A reception to Mr. Nikisch, Madame Steinbach-Jahns, Mr. Steinbach, her husband, also to Mr. Kneisel, the violinist, and to Mr. Hikking, the 'cellist, given in the parlors of the Conservatory on May 7.

Besides the students of the school about 150 of our best-known citizens and connoisseurs were present. No school or body of art workers in our city is more active or enterprising in fostering and developing all good forms of music than Miss Clara Baur, the Directress of the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, and her admirable corps of teachers.

The reception to Mr. Nikisch, besides its delightful social character, had a direct musical significance, for by thus cultivating friendly relations with celebrated artists and bringing their students in social contact with them, a vast impulse of enthusiasm is imparted to these young musicians, and waves of ideal influence are started, whose circles go on widening infinitely. Delicate refreshments, genial conversation, good humor and mutual good will were the order of the day; and there was but one opinion, to the effect that a more delightful afternoon had not been spent in a long time.

On the 6th and 7th inst. Herr Nikisch, with his Boston symphony orchestra, gave us two concerts which were well attended. The elite of art and fashion were there en masse and the consumate excellencies manifested by one of the greatest living conductors and his celebrated orchestra shone out at every moment with astonishing power and aroused storms of applause.

The concerts were agreeably diversified by the singing of the renowned dramatic prima donna Madame Steinbach-Jahns and the playing of those masters of their instruments, Messrs Hekking and Kneisel. Cincinnati is a peculiar city. If a stranger should happen to be present at one of our great gala concerts, such as the first of Sarasate and D'Albert or any of our great festival affairs, he would say that we were like an oasis in the desert; that musical enthusiasm shot sky high, like the date palm that encircles a living fountain in some hot and arid land; but alas at other times performances of equal excellence do not receive any just or creditable support.

No weather bureau has ever yet been able to ascertain or predict the changes of public taste in matters of art; and few cities are more incalculable than ours. Amid all this uncertainty, however, our schools are strong, steadfast and of lofty purpose, like an ocean cliff, which may at times be shrouded with clouds or crowned with tempests, but is again gilded with serene sunshine; so our music schools defy the turbulent changes of the populace.

Among these schools none has been more lofty in its purpose or more unswerving in its adherence to the best things than the Cincinnati Conservatory, which is in effect an expression of the musical views and character of Miss Clara Baur, its founder. The impromptu reception to Mr. Nikisch and his coadjutors at this institution was a fitting testimonial of our great admiration for him. The general impression here seems to be that he is not only a great technician, but a supremely great interpreter. His orchestra is admirably balanced, composed of virtuosi, and the exquisite clearness of his phrasing marvelous accents and his broad and careful reading of the works aroused profound enthusiasm. His charming personality is a fitting counterpart to his consumate artistship, and the total impression of himself and orchestra in Cincinnati has been as favorable as anything I have ever observed.

J. S. V. C.

Boston Post

WEDNESDAY MORNING, JUNE 11, 1890.

NO MORE "POP" CONCERTS.

The police commissioners have again decided that no license to sell light refreshments shall be granted to Music Hall this year, which means that the "pop" concerts, which had almost come to be a part of Boston's summer life, shall not be revived. Commissioner Whiting gives as a reason for the action of the board that there were not enough licenses to go around. Mr. Ellis, the manager of the concerts, was greatly surprised at the news. No exceptions had ever been taken to the character of the entertainments; a large number of the best musicians of the city found employment during the summer months. The "pops" were supported by some of the best people of the city.

BOSTON EVENING RECORD.
JUNE 10, 1890.

LATEST EXTRA

HALF-PAST FIVE.

NO MORE POPS!

Police Commission Refuses a License.

They Let All the North End Dives Run,

But Will Not Mix Beer and Fine Music, No.

Perhaps They Have a Grudge Against Mr. Vogner.

Harmonic Boston is at the high C of disgust.

The Music Hall "Pops" are no more.

The autocratic police commission has set its mighty foot upon the neck of melody, and music lovers must seek consolation in the strains of the German bands, and in the free concerts to be furnished from the city treasury.

The fiat has gone forth that no license to sell light refreshments will be granted to Music Hall this summer. The malodorous North st. dives can continue to dispense, via tables, bad beer and worse whiskey; rows between drunken men and disreputable women may continue there unchecked, but the Music Hall promenades must be abolished. Why?

The straight-laced do not utter a word against the character of the Music Hall entertainments of this nature. Not only has good order and decorum been the rule, but the "Pops" have numbered among their patrons many of the best people of the city. The "Pops" have furnished music lovers forced to remain in the city during the summer months a harmless means of enjoyment which has been appreciated as much as the action of the police commission will be disfavored.

Not Enough to "Go Round."

A Record reporter met Commissioner Whiting at the outer portal of the Pemberton sq. office this morning. The following colloquy ensued:—

Reporter—"Have you anything to say, Mr. Whiting, as to why you withheld the Music Hall license?"

Mr. Whiting—"Nothing to say."

"Were your reasons general, or was it a complaint of an abuttor?"

"Hadn't enough licenses to go around."

"Good-day."

"Good-day."

Manager Ellis's Surprise.

C. F. Ellis, the manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Music Hall, talked on the subject this morning with a Record man.

"That we did not receive a license is a great surprise to us," said he, "as we have had it each season for five years, and the commissioners had expressed themselves in previous seasons as well pleased with the concerts and manner in which they were conducted. No exceptions have ever been taken and none could be taken to the character of the concerts and the audiences which attended. As a matter of fact the 'pops' were supported by the best class of people, and it is especially to be regretted for the reason that a large number of the best musicians of the city found employment during the summer months, making the season of musical engagements extend throughout the year, making an inducement to valuable artists to make this city a musical centre."

"The commissioner gave as a reason that their limited number of licenses could not supply the number of applicants, and as our license only extended over a few weeks of the summer, though we paid the license of a year, yet the interests of those who wanted a license for the entire year were more at stake."

The Record regards these excuses as very thin! Boston can spare half a dozen North End rumholes and yet gain in a license for the Music Hall pops!

Boston Daily Globe.

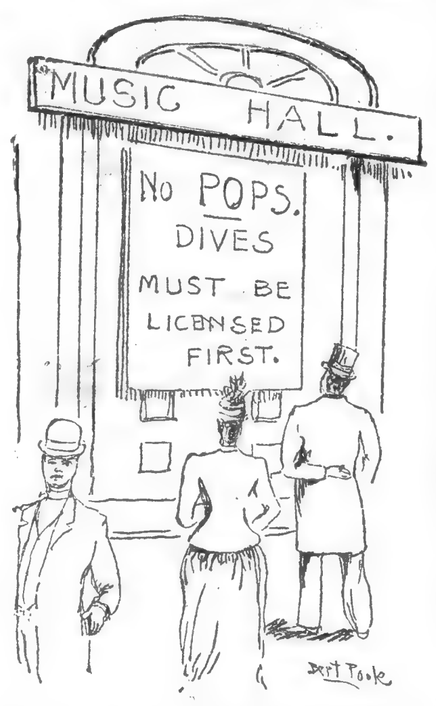
THURSDAY, JUNE 12.

No Music Hall "pops" this summer, and it's not much use to scold the police commissioners, either. That trio of autocrats is wholly irresponsible to the people of Boston. If only Boston could get at them there would be a popular concert and no mistake.

BOSTON EVENING RECORD.
JUNE 11, 1890.

CARING FOR THE DIVES.

"Not Enough Licenses" for a Decent Place——After All the Cheap Rumholes Have Been Fully Supplied.—[Decision of the Police Commissioners.



Boston Daily Traveller

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 11, 1890.

THE SUMMER "POPS."

During the past few years the unhappy Bostonian who has been obliged to remain in town during the hot season, while his family and his best friends have revelled in the delights of the seashore or in the pastoral beauties of the rural resort, has had one pastime to console him in his forlorn and wretched condition. He has been able to go to the "Pop" concerts at Music Hall, where, amid the other unfortunates like himself—dwellers in the stifling town—and in the fragrant atmosphere of the Havana cigar he has listened to the entrancing strains of a Strauss waltz and for the time forgotten his sad fate. This year his condition will be harder than ever, for this sole consolation has been ruthlessly taken from him. The action of the Police Commissioners in refusing to grant a license for the continuance of the "Pops" is one of those official acts, the wisdom and justice of which is not apparent to the average intelligence. In past years they have been well conducted; they have served a good purpose in furnishing agreeable musical entertainment at a price within the reach of everybody. We presume that the reason the license was refused to the committee of these concerts was due to the fact that intoxicating liquors were sold in the hall while they were going on. This objection might be met by providing that they shall be conducted on strictly temperance principles. It would be a mistake to suppose that those persons who frequent these concerts go to them for the purpose of drinking; they go for the pleasure of hearing good music at their ease, and with the privilege of taking refreshments incidentally. We venture to say that if the "Pops" were conducted as they have been conducted in past years, with the single difference that no intoxicating liquors should be sold in the hall while they were in progress, they would meet with the same success which has always attended them.

Boston Post

FRIDAY MORNING, JUNE 13, 1890

The Music Hall "Pops" on a prohibition basis, as has been suggested, would never do at all. The popping of the champagne cork or the patent stopper is a sine qua non.

Gazette

BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, JUNE 15.

RIDICULOUS, IF NOT WORSE.

And now certain uncharitable people are wondering if, after all, the license was withheld from Music Hall bec use there were not enough licenses to go around, or because there was not enough of something else to go around. It does not seem reasonable that the Police Commissioners should have been anxious to deprive so respectable a place as Music Hall of a license in order to accommodate some cheap, disreputable rum-hole with a right to dispense vile liquors. As a mere matter of choice it would appear that the preference should have been given to Music Hall, on the ground that simply beer and light wines were dispensed there, and that only, for a month or two. However, there is no knowing the mysterious processes by which the official brain reaches its conclusions, though in this instance it looks very like an official lack of brain.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 14, 1890.

It certainly seems as if the Board of Police were bent upon alienating the esteem and support of the community in every possible way, reckless of the consideration that they cannot maintain themselves as disciplinarians with their force or as gentlemen and citizens with their acquaintances and fellow-townsmen if they continue to show as little wisdom, acumen and courage as many of their recent acts and attitudes display. Their latest failure to recognize the right course and to pursue it lies in their refusal to issue the license necessary for this year's series of summer-evening concerts at Music Hall. What can these three superior personages be thinking about when they set themselves up stolidly against the general sense of the community, and not only affront a local sentiment which it is their duty to respect, but do the city a material injury beside? They are appointed and paid to prevent and repress evil and to foster good. They sit idly by and let people be robbed of money in gambling shops and of reputation and character in disorderly houses, when they have statutory and material power enough to suppress summarily scores of such establishments and to punish by public obloquy the owners and supporters of them. They cannot long maintain their impassive attitude of ignorance and disregard of law without awakening suspicions that their favorable inaction has been obtained by means which one would hesitate to attribute to them. And now, on the other hand, they make a brave stand and close to the vast public of residents and summer visitors one source of pure pleasure against which no unprejudiced person can breathe one whisper of complaint. The Music Hall promenade concerts have been models in every way, and they have brought to the general coffers of the city a deal of money which would else have been expended otherwhere (if merely material considerations are to be brought up), while the music has been fine in choice, often newly drawn from the highest sources, and beautifully performed under eminent direction by an able body of Boston musicians. On the score of decorum there is no room for question; no irregular conduct has ever been tolerated for an instant and no suspicious person admitted within the doors; the average quality of the audiences has been as high as in the theatres during their season and on many special occasions has been as brilliant, fashionable and cultured as on any but exceptional dramatic nights. No intoxicants have been sold and the chief consumption has been of beer, lemonade and syrups, with an occasional glass of light wine. If the commissioners have any decent reasons for withholding the license let these be made public; if not, the public must draw their own conclusion at the refusal.

BOSTON HERALD.

MONDAY, JUNE 16, 1890.

MR. OSBORNE EXPLAINS.

Why a License Was Not Granted for the "Pop" Concerts.

So much adverse criticism has been aimed at the police board because of its refusal to grant a liquor license for the Music Hall "pop" concerts, that the commissioners at length feel inclined to take up the cudgels in their own behalf. The HERALD today prevailed upon Commissioner Osborne to make the following statement of his own views, which, to a great extent, represent those of the entire board:

"It is proper to correct the impression that some of the public may have had that the rejection of the Music Hall license was due to any objectionable motive. Personally, I have always been friendly to that license, and to the object for which it was intended. The concerts are nearer to the attractive music hall entertainments which persons travelling abroad enjoy, nearer to the Strauss concerts in Vienna, for example, than anything else in this country. Last year, when the limitation of licenses went into effect, the Music Hall license was one of the 780 selected as those which had drawn prizes without the necessity of any person importuning the board. Within a very short time—July 2, I believe—an application was made to transfer the license to another place. It was accordingly transferred on July 11 to an old oyster stand in Haymarket square, and a man named Peirce got the benefit. As I understood it, Mr. Ellis, who managed the concerts, had surrendered his right to one of the places under the limitation of licenses. A year ago we had to reject a number of applicants who applied again this year, and this year the Music Hall manager didn't have the same equitable standing before the board that others had. It was fair to suppose that the licensees against whom no serious remonstrances had been made had conducted their business in a legitimate and proper manner. Therefore it was clear that if Music Hall resigned its place there was no place left for it unless some person who had carried on his business properly gave up his license. Some of the old licenses were rejected this year, it is true, but the places thus vacated were filled from applicants who were shut out last year because there was no room for them, and against whom no objection had been raised. To remove the pressure brought to bear for licenses both this year and last, the board issued the total number at one time, so that no license could be granted to Music Hall after the list was complete. We should have issued the license later, if we could, when we learned that the concerts had been successful and not a failure as we had been led to suppose. We could not do that, however. If the manager had only held on to his license, keeping it in a box all winter, if necessary, he would have surely have had his license renewed. Now, I regret as much as anybody does that Music Hall has no license, but from the knowledge I had, thinking that the concerts were not a profitable undertaking, and that the manager had surrendered his place in the limited number by transferring his privileges in the middle of the summer, I couldn't come to any other conclusion than to leave Music Hall out of the list altogether this year. The public may regret this necessity, as I do, but a fair, judicial mind could have taken no other course."

Mr. Osborne added that the Music Hall concerts may be licensed now by only one means, which is by the transfer of a license already issued from the present holder to the manager of the "pops." It is said, indeed, that this plan may be adopted by the projectors of another series of popular musical entertainments—that is, if they can get a licensee to step down and out in their favor.

[150]

QUEEN'S HALL, - - - MONTREAL.

TUESDAY EVENING, JUNE 17, 1890, AT 8.15.

MRS. PAGE THROWER'S CONCERT.

THE

KNEISEL QUARTET,

OF BOSTON.

MR. FRANZ KNEISEL, 1ST VIOLIN.

MR. E. FIEDLER, 2D VIOLIN.

MR. D. KUNTZ, VIOLA.

MR. ANTON HEKKING, VIOLONCELLO.

VOCALISTS.

MISS DONNER, MRS. PAGE THROWER, MR. M. W. WILD.

ACCOMPANIST.

MR. CHARLES A. E. HARRISS.

THE KNABE PIANO WILL BE USED ON THIS OCCASION, KINDLY FURNISHED BY MESSRS. WILLIS & CO., NOTRE DAME STREET.

AMERICAN ART JOURNAL.

JUNE 14.

No pops at Music Hall this summer. Why? Because the city license for the sale of liquors is refused. People have to be seated when they drink in Boston now-a-days, and order something to eat besides. The crowd always sat down in Union Hall, and some people ate also; but for some reason the license is refused, and the concerts won't pay without the beer.

[151]

Boston Post

MONDAY MORNING, JUNE 16, 1890.

WHY WERE THEY REFUSED?

PROMINENT BOSTONIANS EXPRESS GREAT INDIGNATION

At the Surprising Action of the Police Commission in Refusing to License the "Pop" Concerts—The Character of Past Concerts Very Highly Commended.

Since the police commissioners have finally refused to grant a license to the managers of the Music Hall summer promenade concerts for the coming season, it may be too late to say anything which would influence that board of arbitrary worthies to change their minds on the subject; but it is now a most opportune moment to show to them and to the community what the general sentiment is in regard to their action, and to the character of the concerts given so satisfactorily during the past five seasons. It seems very strange that the license should have been refused this year, when there has never been any trouble in the past, and as there never has ever been so much as a murmur of complaint breathed against the conduct of the concerts. It was perhaps unfortunate that Mr. Ellis was obliged to be away at the time when the 780 licenses were granted to the bar-rooms of the city, for could he have attended to the matter personally there can be little doubt but what the much-needed parchment would have been forthcoming. As it happened, he was travelling in the West with the Symphony Orchestra at that important moment. It was learned recently at police headquarters that since the giving out of the licenses a month or more ago several have been returned to the police, the proprietors of the places licensed not caring to continue the business, perchance having made a fortune. This made vacancies which could be filled, and have been, by those applicants who were unsuccessful at the first. Why did not Music Hall receive one of these? Perhaps the commissioners could answer if they would. The interviews with some of the most prominent Boston men, who have been regular patrons of the concerts heretofore, which are printed below, show a very general and almost unanimous expression of indignation and disgust at the stand which the commissioners have taken in the matter. These concerts have been of an order, so say competent critics, far excelling and unapproached by anything to be found in any other American city, the Thomas concerts at New York being the nearest approach, and visitors to this city who have attended these delightful treats at Music Hall have many times expressed their pleasure and admiration and the wish that they had a similar place in which to pass a pleasant summer evening in their own towns. The musicians engaged for these concerts are of a high class of talent, many of them men who have been brought from abroad to play in the Symphony Orchestra, and who have to be assured of a full year's engagement as an inducement to come to this country. These concerts, therefore, made an opening for these artists.

The opinion of one of the most noted musical men of this city, Mr. B. J. Lang, should have some weight on this question. Mr. Lang said to a reporter the other evening that perhaps he had no right to an opinion on the action of the police on these concerts, but at the same time he has an opinion, and a strong one. "In plain English," began Mr. Lang, "it is all nonsense. These concerts have, beyond the mere fact of furnishing employment to so many men, musicians, waiters, etc., extended to those who like good beer and good music an opportunity to gratify their tastes, both animal and æsthetic, in a far cleaner and more attractive place than was ever possible before. Personally, I never tasted anything stronger than water or milk in my life, but there are men who do drink more or less, and this is the sort of place which will attract them of an evening and keep them from many a worse resort. If I could take these men, we will suppose, down to Trinity Church of an evening to hear Phillips Brooks preach a little, it would do them a deal of good, and I should consider that I had done a wonderful thing. Just so when these men are drawn to the Music Hall concerts to hear the music of any good orchestra I consider that they are benefited and that a great deal of good has been done. They certainly cannot be degraded by their influence, and the chances are that they will tend to lift those who attend."

Mr. Arthur Foote, who has patronized these concerts in past summers a great deal, not only by his personal attendance, but by bringing his wife and little parties of friends to enjoy an evening, said that he could not understand why a license had been refused, although he had heard certain rumors which he was not at liberty to make public, but which were not at all derogatory to the concerts, which might explain matters somewhat. He was very sorry that they could not be continued this summer.

Mr. George Snell, the architect, thought too much could not be said to show the indignation which is felt by the public at this, as he termed it, outrageous action of the commissioners, and wished that the entire press would take the matter up and hound them into consistency. He could not divine any reason why the license had been withheld, as there had never been any drunkenness there—there was no chance for it—and the entire entertainment furnished was delightful and refined. Mr. Snell was very emphatic in his denunciation of the Police Commission, not for this alone, but for other similarly unreasonable rulings.

Mr. L. S. Ipsen, the designer, said: "My honest and candid opinion is that it is a greay shame—an outrage. I have attended thost concerts a great deal with my family ane parties of ladies, and no one ever noticed and drunkenness or misconduct, and it is the women who are the first to see such things and be offended—the men can stand it. Everyone that I ever heard express an opinion concerning these concerts has always expressed entire satisfaction and delight at the general management. I am greatly disappointed.

"Being one of the stay-at-homes," said Mr. Arthur Macy, "I have always been a persistent patron of the 'Pop' concerts and have derived a great deal of pleasure from them. As far as I have observed the class of people in attendance has been most respectable. I have often seen one of our leading men of letters there with his young daughter, and have noted that even clergymen were not averse to be seen in attendance at them, one clergyman being an almost constant patron. I have never observed drunken persons at the tables unless it were those who came in a state of intoxication from other places, and I even consider the concerts as an aid to temperance inasmuch as they attracted young men who might otherwise go where they would indulge in hard liquors, which is rarely served at the tables in Music Hall. If you were to ask me if the 'Pop' concerts were of that respectability that a gentleman would care to take his wife to them, I should say decidedly that they were. I am unqualifiedly in favor of a continuance of the popular concerts."

"It is a good institution," said Mr. Dwight, "and it ought to be continued. A place for light drinks and innocent amusement I know nothing better. It so happened that I did not go to the concerts last year, but I have not heard that their character deteriorated at all, and I am sure that when I did attend them in previous years I often met and saw there women of the highest character and for whom I entertain the greatest respect."

Dr. H. E. Merse thought it a great pity that people who have to stay in town during the summer months should be deprived of an innocent amusement. The comment he made on the concerts in past years was that the amount of liquor drunk was exceedingly small, especially when compared with foreign halls of similar character. He also commended the character of the concerts, both as to the class of people who attended and the excellent music rendered.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 21, 1890.

If any single thing could add to the indignation and scorn which have been long accumulating against the police commission, it would be their weak and foolish attempt to exculpate themselves for their indisputable injustice in refusing to the Music Hall management the license necessary for carrying on the summer-night concerts. If these three men are as childish and unreasoning as their statements to an interviewer would make them out, it is high time that the governor should displace them for mental incompetency. Their defence has two branches, of which the first is that the Music Hall license was transferred to another holder after the concert season of last year was over. How silly! Can any such transfer be made without their approval?—and if one be made, does not this give them the opportunity of gratifying some other applicant—of killing two birds with one stone? On the other hand, they plead that there was a miscount and that only at the last moment did they discover that there was no license which had not been already promised. A miscount! Really, the excuse that three commissioners with clerical assistants and dependents cannot count straight up to eight hundred, is a little too diaphanous to offer even to the much enduring public of this city. Dare the commissioners deny that there have been made additions to the first lot of licenses issued, or that the Music Hall application was not made in proper form and season? Dare they own their true reason for denying it, which can only be that they preferred to favor some common saloon, whose proprietor brought a stronger pull to bear upon them? A contemporary said the other day that it was outrageously wrong to intimate that the commissioners were ever actuated by other than the best motives. Indeed? Who accuses them? Their own actions, speaking louder than words, which imply personal partiality, disregard of law and cowardice in executing those statutes the existence of which they condescend to recognize. For years they presumed to nullfy the "open bar" injunctions of the Commonwealth, as for years they have refused to obey the provisions for a proper women's house of detention; for either of which pieces of flagrant disobedience a right-minded executive would have long ago sent them packing. They do a perilously brave service on Sundays when they ferret out and punish a few peddlers of liquor; but they have neither wit nor courage enough to discover the gambling-den, the policy shop, and the house of ill fame, and to close them up. And if they are compelled by public pressure to make an occasional "descent" upon the gamblers' fortified stronghold, they lack the persistency and the hardihood to press action under the severe and definite statutes against those who are responsible for the barricades and the criminal occupation of the buildings. As for the lottery, they have far too kindly a feeling for that even to try to checkmate its ingenious system of evading law or to obtain evidence against its agents which would be effective in court. It would be interesting to know how they occupy their time from week to week, and what service, other than a perfunctory and routine one, they render for their generous salaries. They manage to dissatisfy the best part of the community, to be sure, and to nurture the distrust and disrespect from which one day they will be unable to escape.

Times-Albany, N. Y. Clipping from

QUEEN'S HALL, - - - MONTREAL,

TUESDAY EVENING, JUNE 17, 1890, AT 8.15.

MRS. PAGE THROWER'S CONCERT.

THE

KNEISEL QUARTET,

OF BOSTON.

MR. FRANZ KNEISEL, 1ST VIOLIN.

MR. E. FIEDLER, 2D VIOLIN.

MR. D. KUNTZ, VIOLA.

MR. ANTON HEKKING, VIOLONCELLO.

VOCALISTS.

MISS DONNER, MRS. PAGE THROWER, MR. M. W. WILD.

ACCOMPANIST.

MR. CHARLES A. E. HARRISS.

THE KNABE PIANO WILL BE USED ON THIS OCCASION, KINDLY FURNISHED BY MESSRS. WILLIS & CO., NOTRE DAME STREET.

AMERICAN ART JOURNAL.

JUNE 14,

No pops at Music Hall this summer. Why? Because the city license for the sale of liquors is refused. People have to be seated when they drink in Boston now-a-days, and order something to eat besides. The crowd always sat down in Union Hall, and some people ate also; but for some reason the license is refused, and the concerts won't pay without the beer.

[151]

Boston Post

MONDAY MORNING, JUNE 16, 1890

WHY WERE THEY REFUSED?

PROMINENT BOSTONIANS EXPRESS GREAT INDIGNATION

At the Surprising Action of the Police Commission in Refusing to License the "Pop" Concerts—The Character of Past Concerts Very Highly Commended.

Since the police commissioners have finally refused to grant a license to the managers of the Music Hall summer promenade concerts for the coming season, it may be too late to say anything which would influence that board of arbitrary worthies to change their minds on the subject; but it is now a most opportune moment to show to them and to the community what the general sentiment is in regard to their action, and to the character of the concerts given so satisfactorily during the past five seasons. It seems very strange that the license should have been refused this year, when there has never been any trouble in the past, and as there never has ever been so much as a murmur of complaint breathed against the conduct of the concerts. It was perhaps unfortunate that Mr. Ellis was obliged to be away at the time when the 780 licenses were granted to the bar-rooms of the city, for could he have attended to the matter personally there can be little doubt but what the much-needed parchment would have been forthcoming. As it happened, he was travelling in the West with the Symphony Orchestra at that important moment. It was learned recently at police headquarters that since the giving out of the licenses a month or more ago several have been returned to the police, the proprietors of the places licensed not caring to continue the business, perchance having made a fortune. This made vacancies which could be filled, and have been, by those applicants who were unsuccessful at the first. Why did not Music Hall receive one of these? Perhaps the commissioners could answer if they would. The interviews with some of the most prominent Boston men, who have been regular patrons of the concerts heretofore, which are printed below, show a very general and almost unanimous expression of indignation and disgust at the stand which the commissioners have taken in the matter. These concerts have been of an order, so say competent critics, far excelling and unapproached by anything to be found in any other American city, the Thomas concerts at New York being the nearest approach, and visitors to this city who have attended these delightful treats at Music Hall have many times expressed their pleasure and admiration and the wish that they had a similar place in which to pass a pleasant summer evening in their own towns. The musicians engaged for these concerts are of a high class of talent, many of them men who have been brought from abroad to play in the Symphony Orchestra, and who have to be assured of a full year's engagement as an inducement to come to this country. These concerts, therefore, made an opening for these artists.

The opinion of one of the most noted musical men of this city, Mr. B. J. Lang, should have some weight on this question. Mr. Lang said to a reporter the other evening that perhaps he had no right to an opinion on the action of the police on these concerts, but at the same time he has an opinion, and a strong one. "In plain English," began Mr. Lang, "it is all nonsense. These concerts have, beyond the mere fact of furnishing employment to so many men, musicians, waiters, etc., extended to those who like good beer and good music an opportunity to gratify their tastes, both animal and æsthetic, in a far cleaner and more attractive place than was ever possible before. Personally, I never tasted anything stronger than water or milk in my life, but there are men who do drink more or less, and this is the sort of place which will attract them of an evening and keep them from many a worse resort. If I could take these men, we will suppose, down to Trinity Church of an evening to hear Phillips Brooks preach a little, it would do them a deal of good, and I should consider that I had done a wonderful thing. Just so when these men are drawn to the Music Hall concerts to hear the music of any good orchestra I consider that they are benefited and that a great deal of good has been done. They certainly cannot be degraded by their influence, and the chances are that they will tend to lift those who attend."

Mr. Arthur Foote, who has patronized these concerts in past summers a great deal, not only by his personal attendance, but by bringing his wife and little parties of friends to enjoy an evening, said that he could not understand why a license had been refused, although he had heard certain rumors which he was not at liberty to make public, but which were not at all derogatory to the concerts, which might explain matters somewhat. He was very sorry that they could not be continued this summer.

Mr. George Snell, the architect, thought too much could not be said to show the indignation which is felt by the public at this, as he termed it, outrageous action of the commissioners, and wished that the entire press would take the matter up and hound them into consistency. He could not divine any reason why the license had been withheld, as there had never been any drunkenness there—there was no chance for it—and the entire entertainment furnished was delightful and refined. Mr. Snell was very emphatic in his denunciation of the Police Commission, not for this alone, but for other similarly unreasonable rulings.

Mr. L. S. Ipsen, the designer, said: "My honest and candid opinion is that it is a great shame—an outrage. I have attended those concerts a great deal with my family and parties of ladies, and no one ever noticed any drunkenness or misconduct, and it is the women who are the first to see such things and be offended—the men can stand it. Everyone that I ever heard express an opinion concerning these concerts has always expressed entire satisfaction and delight at the general management. I am greatly disappointed.

"Being one of the stay-at-homes," said Mr. Arthur Macy, "I have always been a persistent patron of the 'Pop' concerts and have derived a great deal of pleasure from them. As far as I have observed the class of people in attendance has been most respectable. I have often seen one of our leading men of letters there with his young daughter, and have noted that even clergymen were not averse to be seen in attendance at them, one clergyman being an almost constant patron. I have never observed drunken persons at the tables unless it were those who came in a state of intoxication from other places, and I even consider the concerts as an aid to temperance inasmuch as they attracted young men who might otherwise go where they would indulge in hard liquors, which is rarely served at the tables in Music Hall. If you were to ask me if the 'Pop' concerts were of that respectability that a gentleman would care to take his wife to them, I should say decidedly that they were. I am unqualifiedly in favor of a continuance of the popular concerts."

"It is a good institution," said Mr. John Dwight, "and it ought to be continued. As a place for light drinks and innocent amusement I know nothing better. It so happened that I did not go to the concerts last year, but I have not heard that their character deteriorated at all, and I am sure that when I did attend them in previous years I often met and saw there women of the highest character and for whom I entertain the greatest respect."

Dr. H. E. Morse thought it a great pity that people who have to stay in town during the summer months should be deprived of an innocent amusement. The comment he made on the concerts in past years was that the amount of liquor drunk was exceedingly small, especially when compared with foreign halls of similar character. He also commended the character of the concerts, both as to the class of people who attended and the excellent music rendered.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 21, 1890.

If any single thing could add to the indignation and scorn which have been long accumulating against the police commission, it would be their weak and foolish attempt to exculpate themselves for their indisputable injustice in refusing to the Music Hall management the license necessary for carrying on the summer-night concerts. If these three men are as childish and unreasoning as their statements to an interviewer would make them out, it is high time that the governor should displace them for mental incompetency. Their defence has two branches, of which the first is that the Music Hall license was transferred to another holder after the concert season of last year was over. How silly! Can any such transfer be made without their approval?—and if one be made, does not this give them the opportunity of gratifying some other applicant—of killing two birds with one stone? On the other hand, they plead that there was a miscount and that only at the last moment did they discover that there was no license which had not been already promised. A miscount! Really, the excuse that three commissioners with clerical assistants and dependents cannot count straight up to eight hundred, is a little too diaphanous to offer even to the much enduring public of this city. Dare the commissioners deny that there have been made additions to the first lot of licenses issued, or that the Music Hall application was not made in proper form and season? Dare they own their true reason for denying it, which can only be that they preferred to favor some common saloon, whose proprietor brought a stronger pull to bear upon them? A contemporary said the other day that it was outrageously wrong to intimate that the commissioners were ever actuated by other than the best motives. Indeed? Who accuses them? Their own actions, speaking louder than words, which imply personal partiality, disregard of law and cowardice in executing those statutes the existence of which they condescend to recognize. For years they presumed to nullfy the "open bar" injunctions of the Commonwealth, as for years they have refused to obey the provisions for a proper women's house of detention; for either of which pieces of flagrant disobedience a right-minded executive would have long ago sent them packing. They do a perilously brave service on Sundays when they ferret out and punish a few peddlers of liquor; but they have neither wit nor courage enough to discover the gambling-den, the policy shop, and the house of ill fame, and to close them up. And if they are compelled by public pressure to make an occasional "descent" upon the gamblers' fortified stronghold, they lack the persistency and the hardihood to press action under the severe and definite statutes against those who are responsible for the barricades and the criminal occupation of the buildings. As for the lottery, they have far too kindly a feeling for that even to try to checkmate its ingenious system of evading law or to obtain evidence against its agents which would be effective in court. It would be interesting to know how they occupy their time from week to week, and what service, other than a perfunctory and routine one, they render for their generous salaries. They manage to dissatisfy the best part of the community, to be sure, and to nurture the distrust and disrespect from which one day they will be unable to escape.

PROGRAM.

BEETHOVEN.	QUARTET IN C MINOR, OP. 18. ALLEGRO MA NON TANTO.— SCHERZO (ANDANTE SCHERZANDO QUASI ALLEGRETTO).— MENUETTO (ALLEGRO).— ALLEGRETTO. KNEISEL QUARTET.
LISZT.	SONG. "THE LORELEY." MRS. PAGE THROWER.
SCHUBERT.	ANDANTE VARIAZIONI FROM THE QUARTET IN D MINOR. KNEISEL QUARTET.
HENSCHEL.	DUET. "KEIN FEUER, KEINE KOHLE." MISS DONNER AND MR. WILD.
ERNST.	AIR HONGROIS. (SOLO FOR VIOLIN.) MR. KNEISEL.
SULLIVAN.	SONG. "MY DEAREST HEART." MISS DONNER.
SULLIVAN.	ARABIAN LOVE SONG. MR. WILD.
CHOPIN.	NOCTURNE. (SOLO FOR VIOLONCELLO.) MR. HEKKING.
GRIEG.	ROMANZA FROM QUARTET IN G MINOR. KNEISEL QUARTET.

The quartet in C minor played to-day was the one which Haydn liked best. Attention is called to a few of the salient points of the work: the first phrase of the first movement is pure Mozart; the second subject is first given out by the second violin, with viola accompaniment, with counter theme for first violin, and then taken up by that instrument. To this melody succeeds a tributary in the same key (E flat). In the andante scherzando some see a resemblance to the andante of the first symphony. The movement is an early indication of what Beethoven subsequently did with the scherzo. The minuet and trio contain a little of Haydn, more of Mozart, and are not without some Beethovenish turns. The last movement is in rondo form built upon a characteristic melody. Those fond of tracing analogies have found it remindful of Mozart's serenade in C minor, for eight wind instruments, afterward turned into a quintet for strings.

Of the twenty string quartets Schubert wrote, the one in D minor, and its companion in G major, op. 161, are preeminent. The D minor quartet was composed between June 28 and December 30, 1826, two years before Schubert died, Von Hellborn says of the quartets in G major and D minor: "They are delicate and refined compositions of the true Schubert stamp, containing a wealth of charming melodies, and breathing that spirit of romance which greets us in almost all of the more important creations of the master's genius. Schumann idolized Schubert. Compared with Beethoven, Schumann says, "Schubert is a maiden character; more gossipy, more tender, broader; a child, fearlessly and carelessly playing among giants. True, he too has moments of power; he too handles masses; but nevertheless, his attitude is that of a wife towards her husband,—he commands, while she pleads and persuades. But this only in comparison with Beethoven; to all others he is man enough, yes, the most daring and independent of modern musicians. He has tones for the subtlest emotions, thoughts, occurrences, and conditions of life. His music is as varied as the desires and endeavors of mankind. What ever he sees with his eyes or touches with his hand is transformed into music; from the stones which he casts, as from those thrown by Deucalion and Pyrrha, spring up living men and women. He was the most excellent after Beethoven, and, the deadly enemy of ignorance, cultivated music in the highest sense of the word."

The andante con moto is an air with variations, the theme being that which is given to "Death," in Schubert's song, "Der Tod und das Mädchen." After two variations in the key of G minor (both of which, it will be observed, have a final cadence in the major), there is a third, full of character, in the minor throughout. The fourth variation is equally remarkable in another style. The minor key is then resumed, only to be abandoned at the coda, when we have again a finish in the major. Schubert especially excelled in the variation form, in which he, more nearly perhaps than any other composer, approached Beethoven.

AMERICAN ART JOURNAL.

JUNE 14,

No pops at Music Hall this summer. Why? Because the city license for the sale of liquors is refused. People have to be seated when they drink in Boston now-a-days, and order something to eat besides. The crowd always sat down in Union Hall, and some people ate also; but for some reason the license is refused, and the concerts won't pay without the beer.

[151]

Boston Post

MONDAY MORNING, JUNE 16, 1890

WHY WERE THEY REFUSED?

PROMINENT BOSTONIANS EXPRESS GREAT INDIGNATION

At the Surprising Action of the Police Commission in Refusing to License the "Pop" Concerts—The Character of Past Concerts Very Highly Commended.

Since the police commissioners have finally refused to grant a license to the managers of the Music Hall summer promenade concerts for the coming season, it may be too late to say anything which would influence that board of arbitrary worthies to change their minds on the subject; but it is now a most opportune moment to show to them and to the community what the general sentiment is in regard to their action, and to the character of the concerts given so satisfactorily during the past five seasons. It seems very strange that the license should have been refused this year, when there has never been any trouble in the past, and as there never has ever been so much as a murmur of complaint breathed against the conduct of the concerts. It was perhaps unfortunate that Mr. Ellis was obliged to be away at the time when the 780 licenses were granted to the bar-rooms of the city, for could he have attended to the matter personally there can be little doubt but what the much-needed parchment would have been forthcoming. As it happened, he was travelling in the West with the Symphony Orchestra at that important moment. It was learned recently at police headquarters that since the giving out of the licenses a month or more ago several have been returned to the police, the proprietors of the places licensed not caring to continue the business, perchance having made a fortune. This made vacancies which could be filled, and have been, by those applicants who were unsuccessful at the first. Why did not Music Hall receive one of these? Perhaps the commissioners could answer if they would. The interviews with some of the most prominent Boston men, who have been regular patrons of the concerts heretofore, which are printed below, show a very general and almost unanimous expression of indignation and disgust at the stand which the commissioners have taken in the matter. These concerts have been of an order, so say competent critics, far excelling and unapproached by anything to be found in any other American city, the Thomas concerts at New York being the nearest approach, and visitors to this city who have attended these delightful treats at Music Hall have many times expressed their pleasure and admiration and the wish that they had a similar place in which to pass a pleasant summer evening in their own towns. The musicians engaged for these concerts are of a high class of talent, many of them men who have been brought from abroad to play in the Symphony Orchestra, and who have to be assured of a full year's engagement as an inducement to come to this country. These concerts, therefore, made an opening for these artists.

The opinion of one of the most noted musical men of this city, Mr. B. J. Lang, should have some weight on this question. Mr. Lang said to a reporter the other evening that perhaps he had no right to an opinion on the action of the police on these concerts, but at the same time he has an opinion, and a strong one. "In plain English," began Mr. Lang, "it is all nonsense. These concerts have, beyond the mere fact of furnishing employment to so many men, musicians, waiters, etc., extended to those who like good beer and good music an opportunity to gratify their tastes, both animal and æsthetic, in a far cleaner and more attractive place than was ever possible before. Personally, I never tasted anything stronger than water or milk in my life, but there are men who do drink more or less, and this is the sort of place which will attract them of an evening and keep them from many a worse resort. If I could take these men, we will suppose, down to Trinity Church of an evening to hear Phillips Brooks preach a little, it would do them a deal of good, and I should consider that I had done a wonderful thing. Just so when these men are drawn to the Music Hall concerts to hear the music of any good orchestra I consider that they are benefited and that a great deal of good has been done. They certainly cannot be degraded by their influence, and the chances are that they will tend to lift those who attend."

Mr. Arthur Foote, who has patronized these concerts in past summers a great deal, not only by his personal attendance, but by bringing his wife and little parties of friends to enjoy an evening, said that he could not understand why a license had been refused, although he had heard certain rumors which he was not at liberty to make public, but which were not at all derogatory to the concerts, which might explain matters somewhat. He was very sorry that they could not be continued this summer.

Mr. George Snell, the architect, thought too much could not be said to show the indignation which is felt by the public at this, as he termed it, outrageous action of the commissioners, and wished that the entire press would take the matter up and hound them into consistency. He could not divine any reason why the license had been withheld, as there had never been any drunkenness there—there was no chance for it—and the entire entertainment furnished was delightful and refined. Mr. Snell was very emphatic in his denunciation of the Police Commission, not for this alone, but for other similarly unreasonable rulings.

Mr. L. S. Ipsen, the designer, said: "My honest and candid opinion is that it is a great shame—an outrage. I have attended those concerts a great deal with my family, and parties of ladies, and no one ever noticed and drunkenness or misconduct, and it is the women who are the first to see such things and be offended—the men can stand it. Everyone that I ever heard express an opinion concerning these concerts has always expressed entire satisfaction and delight at the general management. I am greatly disappointed.

"Being one of the stay-at-homes," said Mr. Arthur Macy, "I have always been a persistent patron of the 'Pop' concerts and have derived a great deal of pleasure from them. As far as I have observed the class of people in attendance has been most respectable. I have often seen one of our leading men of letters there with his young daughter, and have noted that even clergymen were not averse to be seen in attendance at them, one clergyman being an almost constant patron. I have never observed drunken persons at the tables unless it were those who came in a state of intoxication from other places, and I even consider the concerts as an aid to temperance inasmuch as they attracted young men who might otherwise go where they would indulge in hard liquors, which is rarely served at the tables in Music Hall. If you were to ask me if the 'Pop' concerts were of that respectability that a gentleman would care to take his wife to them, I should say decidedly that they were. I am unqualifiedly in favor of a continuance of the popular concerts."

Ernst was, by birth, a Moravian. He studied at the Vienna Conservatory, and also with Mayseder, some of whose quartet music is not yet quite forgotten. At the age of sixteen, in the year 1830, Ernst undertook his first concert tour, visiting the larger cities of what is now Germany, and winning immediate recognition as a performer of great gifts. He is found in Paris in 1832, from which year dates his fame as a violinist. For years he was a familiar figure in artistic Continental capitals, His biographer says that his playing was distinguished by great boldness in the execution of technical difficulties, while at the same time his cantelina was full of deep feeling, and his tone had a peculiar charm. Ernst composed much effective music for the violin.

Edward Grieg is a true Norseman. "My native place," he says, "is Bergen, and my home is still in the neighborhood of that town. I passed my early childhood among some of the grandest scenery of the North, and ever since I can remember has the beauty of my country impressed me as something wonderful and magnificent beyond expression. It is our mountains, our lakes and forests which have influenced my work far more than any human being has done, and even now, though I am over forty (I was born in 1843), they have the self-same power over me. My musical education up to my fifteenth year was solely in the hands of my mother, who was a very good pianist indeed, and who was very careful in her teaching. I remember one amusing scene at school, when I was about nine years old, and when my first composition failed to find favor in the eyes of my master. We were having a German lesson, and every pupil was supposed to bring a bulky dictionary to school. I had forgotten mine, and was duly scolded by the teacher, when the boy who sat next to me burst out, 'He has n't got his dictionary, but he has got something else. He has a piece of music which he himself has written.' It had to be produced, and the verdict was that I would far better leave such rubbish at home and think of my lessons. I dare say it was rubbish. At all events, it does not exist any more." Grieg, though not a prolific writer has published a goodly number of compositions which bear the impress of individuality. In the larger forms his pianoforte concerto and orchestral suites are the works best known in this country. In the lesser forms of chamber music, and as a writer for pianoforte, Grieg has been particularly active; the extract played to-day being from his only string quartet.

(Notes by G. H. Wilson.)

AMERICAN ART JOURNAL.

JUNE 14,

No pops at Music Hall this summer. Why? Because the city license for the sale of liquors is refused. People have to be seated when they drink in Boston now-a-days, and order something to eat besides. The crowd always sat down in Union Hall, and some people ate also; but for some reason the license is refused, and the concerts won't pay without the beer.

Boston Post

MONDAY MORNING, JUNE 16, 1890

WHY WERE THEY REFUSED?

PROMINENT BOSTONIANS EXPRESS GREAT INDIGNATION

At the Surprising Action of the Police Commission in Refusing to License the "Pop" Concerts—The Character of Past Concerts Very Highly Commended.

Since the police commissioners have finally refused to grant a license to the managers of the Music Hall summer promenade concerts for the coming season, it may be too late to say anything which would influence that board of arbitrary worthies to change their minds on the subject; but it is now a most opportune moment to show to them and to the community what the general sentiment is in regard to their action, and to the character of the concerts given so satisfactorily during the past five seasons. It seems very strange that the license should have been refused this year, when there has never been any trouble in the past, and as there never has ever been so much as a murmur of complaint breathed against the conduct of the concerts. It was perhaps unfortunate that Mr. Ellis was obliged to be away at the time when the 780 licenses were granted to the bar-rooms of the city, for could he have attended to the matter personally there can be little doubt but what the much-needed parchment would have been forthcoming. As it happened, he was travelling in the West with the Symphony Orchestra at that important moment. It was learned recently at police headquarters that since the giving out of the licenses a month or more ago several have been returned to the police, the proprietors of the places licensed not caring to continue the business, perchance having made a fortune. This made vacancies which could be filled, and have been, by those applicants who were unsuccessful at the first. Why did not Music Hall receive one of these? Perhaps the commissioners could answer if they would. The interviews with some of the most prominent Boston men, who have been regular patrons of the concerts heretofore, which are printed below, show a very general and almost unanimous expression of indignation and disgust at the stand which the commissioners have taken in the matter. These concerts have been of an order, so say competent critics, far excelling and unapproached by anything to be found in any other American city, the Thomas concerts at New York being the nearest approach, and visitors to this city who have attended these delightful treats at Music Hall have many times expressed their pleasure and admiration and the wish that they had a similar place in which to pass a pleasant summer evening in their own towns. The musicians engaged for these concerts are of a high class of talent, many of them men who have been brought from abroad to play in the Symphony Orchestra, and who have to be assured of a full year's engagement as an inducement to come to this country. These concerts, therefore, made an opening for these artists.

The opinion of one of the most noted musical men of this city, Mr. B. J. Lang, should have some weight on this question. Mr. Lang said to a reporter the other evening that perhaps he had no right to an opinion on the action of the police on these concerts, but at the same time he has an opinion, and a strong one. "In plain English," began Mr. Lang, "it is all nonsense. These concerts have, beyond the mere fact of furnishing employment to so many men, musicians, waiters, etc., extended to those who like good beer and good music an opportunity to gratify their tastes, both animal and æsthetic, in a far cleaner and more attractive place than was ever possible before. Personally, I never tasted anything stronger than water or milk in my life, but there are men who do drink more or less, and this is the sort of place which will attract them of an evening and keep them from many a worse resort. If I could take these men, we will suppose, down to Trinity Church of an evening to hear Phillips Brooks preach a little, it would do them a deal of good, and I should consider that I had done a wonderful thing. Just so when these men are drawn to the Music Hall concerts to hear the music of any good orchestra I consider that they are benefited and that a great deal of good has been done. They certainly cannot be degraded by their influence, and the chances are that they will tend to lift those who attend."

Mr. Arthur Foote, who has patronized these concerts in past summers a great deal, not only by his personal attendance, but by bringing his wife and little parties of friends to enjoy an evening, said that he could not understand why a license had been refused, although he had heard certain rumors which he was not at liberty to make public, but which were not at all derogatory to the concerts, which might explain matters somewhat. He was very sorry that they could not be continued this summer.

Mr. George Snell, the architect, thought too much could not be said to show the indignation which is felt by the public at this, as he termed it, outrageous action of the commissioners, and wished that the entire press would take the matter up and hound them into consistency. He could not divine any reason why the license had been withheld, as there had never been any drunkenness there—there was no chance for it—and the entire entertainment furnished was delightful and refined. Mr. Snell was very emphatic in his denunciation of the Police Commission, not for this alone, but for other similarly unreasonable rulings.

Mr. L. S. Ipsen, the designer, said: "My honest and candid opinion is that it is a great shame—an outrage. I have attended those concerts a great deal with my family and parties of ladies, and no one ever noticed any drunkenness or misconduct, and it is the women who are the first to see such things and be offended—the men can stand it. Everyone that I ever heard express an opinion concerning these concerts has always expressed entire satisfaction and delight at the general management. I am greatly disappointed.

"Being one of the stay-at-homes," said Mr. Arthur Macy, "I have always been a persistent patron of the 'Pop' concerts and have derived a great deal of pleasure from them. As far as I have observed the class of people in attendance has been most respectable. I have often seen one of our leading men of letters there with his young daughter, and have noted that even clergymen were not averse to be seen in attendance at them, one clergyman being an almost constant patron. I have never observed drunken persons at the tables unless it were those who came in a state of intoxication from other places, and I even consider the concerts as an aid to temperance inasmuch as they attracted young men who might otherwise go where they would indulge in hard liquors, which is rarely served at the tables in Music Hall. If you were to ask me if the 'Pop' concerts were of that respectability that a gentleman would care to take his wife to them, I should say decidedly that they were. I am unqualifiedly in favor of a continuance of the popular concerts."

BOST

If any nation mulatin would b exculpa injustic agemen on the men are statemen them ou should tency.
which license holder a was over fer be m one be n portunit
—of kil
the othe miscount did they which h miscount
commissi depei.den hundred,
even to t
Dare the been ma licenses i cation w season?
denying i ferred to proprieto upon them day that mate tha actuated motives.
Their o than word disregard those stat condescen sumed to the Comm fused to ob men's hous pieces of fi executive w ing. They d days when t dlers of liq courage en the policy s to close the by public p scent" upon they lack t press action utes against barricades buildings. too kindly checkmate or to obtain would be ef esting to kn week to wee functory and generous sa
the best pa and to nur from which cape.

[151]

Clipping from Post Chicago Ill

Date Jan 15

The Superb Boston Symphony Orchestra in Chicago.

WITHOUT A PEER IN AMERICA.

What Individual Generosity Has Done for Music in Boston—Mr. Nikisch as a Leader.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has already appeared in Chicago on three previous occasions, was heard for the first time under its new conductor, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, at the Central Music Hall yesterday evening in the following programme:

Symphonic poem, "Les Preludes".....Liszt
Aria from "Der Freischuetz".....Weber
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Concerto for pianofore—F. minor .....Chopin
Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler.
Suite, "Peer Gynt," op. 46.....Grieg
a. "Daybreak." Allegretto pastorale.
b. "The Death of Aase." Andante doloroso.
c. "Anitra's Dance." Tempo di mazourka.
d. "In the Halls of the King." Alla marcia.
Songs with piano, (a) Auftraege.....Schumann
(b) Schusucht.....Nikisch
(c) Die Quelle.....Goldmark
Symphony No. 4, in D minor, op. 120..Schumann

As a matter of record it may not be amiss to say that the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been in existence as a permanent organization for nine years, having been founded in 1881, and is entirely indebted for its present commanding position and excellence to the untiring efforts and unstinted liberality of H. L. Higginson, the well-known Boston banker. To found and maintain an orchestra of seventy-five performers was indeed no small undertaking, and many a man, alarmed at the constant increase of the debit side of the account and the consequent frequent and heavy inroads on his privy purse, would have long ago abandoned the venture as premature, not to say hopeless. Not so Mr. Higginson. For the last five years he has cheerfully stopped the financial gaps to the tune of over $100,000, and it is to him we owe it that there is in America to-day at least one orchestra worthy to take rank with the very best orchestras of Europe.

ARTHUR NIKISCH.

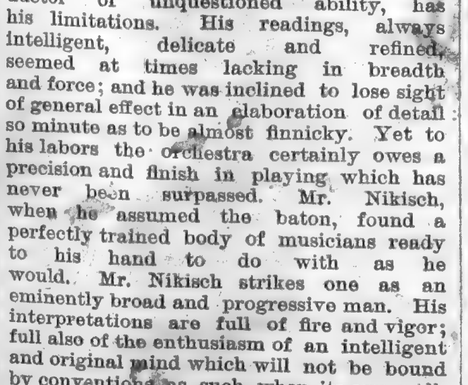
The first conductor of the orchestra was George Henschel, who held the position for three years, when he was succeeded by Mr. Gericke. After five years arduous and successful labors Mr. Gericke, on account of ill-health, in his turn resigned the baton, and was succeeded by Mr. Nikisch, the present conductor. The Boston people do not appear to have quite made up their minds as yet as to whether the orchestra has altogether gained or lost by this latter change. Mr. Gericke, though a musician and conductor of unquestioned ability, has his limitations. His readings, always intelligent, delicate and refined, seemed at times lacking in breadth and force; and he was inclined to lose sight of general effect in an elaboration of detail so minute as to be almost finnicky. Yet to his labors the orchestra certainly owes a precision and finish in playing which has never been surpassed. Mr. Nikisch, when he assumed the baton, found a perfectly trained body of musicians ready to his hand to do with as he would. Mr. Nikisch strikes one as an eminently broad and progressive man. His interpretations are full of fire and vigor; full also of the enthusiasm of an intelligent and original mind which will not be bound by conventions as such, when its own well-considered thought recognizes the fact that an improvement on the accepted ways and methods of past generations of musicians may not be impossible. Mr. Nikisch has treated conservative Boston to some new readings of old authors, at first, to their great astonishment and disgust; but, latterly the concensus of critical opinion seems to be that in this progressive age progressive ideas may not be out of place in music alone of all the fine arts.



MRS. FANNY BLOOMFIELD-ZEISLER.

Under Mr. Nikisch's lead the playing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has certainly gained in force, vigor and freedom of expression, and so far does not appear to have lost in delicacy or refinement. A certain almost mechanical style, previously noticeable, has entirely disappeared, with a consequent notable improvement in ease and breadth of playing and effect. On the occasion of the first appearance of this organization in this city numerous comparisons were instituted between Mr. Gericke and Mr. Thomas, and many more will doubtless be drawn between that gentleman and Mr. Nikisch. Such comparisons are idle and mean little. About the various intelligent readings of which almost any given work is susceptible, individual tastes and critical opinions will always differ; but in the face of such orchestral playing as was heard last night, and finer was never heard in Chicago, criticism, in the ordinary acceptation of the term, is dumb. One could but wonder at and admire the marvelous precision and unity, the perfect balance, the exquisite shading and finish, and the full, rich body of tone of an orchestra which has to-day few equals and, of its size, no superior. Whatever may be Mr. Thomas' merit as a conductor, one thing is certain: his orchestra, as heard at any time in Chicago, has never compared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in balance and general efficiency. The concert of last evening opened with a magnificent performance of Liszt's "Les Preludes;" indeed, a finer rendering of this noble work has not been heard. It was given with great dash and vigor, and the wonderful ensemble of the orchestra, where each instrumental part is given its full value, the pure tone of the brass wind and the exquisite quality of the wood wind, was specially noticeable. After the almost barbaric wealth of color of Listz's tone poem, it must be confessed that the Chopin concerto—Chopin was avowedly no writer for orchestra—sounded somewhat tame. Mrs. Bloomfield-Zeisler gave a most finished and careful reading of this concerto; from a technical standpoint her playing was well nigh faultless, and both her phrasing and shading were intelligent and really delightful. The interpretation was, however, at times a trifle cold in expression, and not quite Chopinesque; one missed a little the exquisite sensibility of the great Chopin interpreter, De Pachmann, so recently heard. It is no disparagement of Mrs. Bloomfield-Zeisler's really artistic work to say this, as she showed herself last evening, as ever, a capable artist of far more than average ability.

Grieg is at his most characteristic in the suite "Peer Gynt," an arrangement of the incidental music composed for Ibsen's drama of the same name, which was delightfully rendered. The rare precision and finish of the playing of the orchestra, and more especially of the strings, was markedly prominent. The last movement, a quaint and whimsical march movement fantastically scored, was loudly redemanded and had to be repeated. The whole effect of this number was a trifle theatrical. Let Mr. Nikisch beware of sensationalism; he seems, perhaps, a little inclined that way, and he, least of all, needs to be told that it is the foe against which modern art has principally to contend. A splendid interpretation of Schumann's D minor symphony No. 4 brought a most enjoyable concert to a close. The distinctive feature of this symphony is expressed by its title "Symphony No. 4, D minor: introduction, allegro, romance, scherzo and finale, in one piece." There are no pauses between the movements; and there is so pronounced a connection between them maintained by the recurrence of themes that the impression of the work is that of a single piece of music. Before Schumann examples of the merging movements are found, but the bond between them, caused by what one writer has called "a partial community of theme," is an invention of his. Theorists dispute its value; but Mendelssohn, in his "Scotch" symphony, adopted it.

MME. STEINBACH-JAHNS.

The reading of this great work given by Mr. Nikisch was masterly and contained. A very interesting feature of the programme was the exhaustive historical and critical analysis of the pieces performed furnished by G. H. Wilson, the well-known critic of the Boston Traveller.

It is difficult to see why such a distinctly second-class vocalist as Mme. Steinbach Johns should ever have been imported to this country to swell the ranks of mediocrity. The audience, however, seemed by their applause to think her singing a success, so let it go at that. The audience, be it said for the credit of Chicago as a musical city, was large and genuinely appreciative of the musical treat afforded them. It only now remains for a Chicago counterpart of Mr. Higginson to put in an appearance. Surely the time is ripe.

Clipping from Post Chicago Ill

Date Jan 15

THEIR GREAT LEADER.

Arthur Nikisch, Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

HIS CAREER ONE OF SUCCESS.

Born in Hungary and Educated in Vienna—One of the Most Talented of Living Conductors.

The work of the Boston symphony orchestra certainly entitles it to be considered as the finest orchestra in this country and one of the four or five finest orchestras in the world. This being so, a short biographical sketch of its present conductor, Arthur Nikisch, who has since his arrival in America more than justified the highly flattering accounts of his marked skill and ability as a conductor which preceded him, may not be unwelcome.

Arthur Nikisch was born on the 12th of October, 1855, in a small town called Szent-Miklos, Hungary. His father occupied the position of head steward and auditor to Prince Lichtenstein, and was himself an enthusiastic musical amateur. In earliest childhood the boy showed such extraordinary talents that his parents determined to educate him as a musician. He began his studies with the violin; and he mastered this instrument with such ease and so completely that, at the early age of eight, he appeared in public with most extraordinary success; in fact, the young prodigy received a genuine ovation. His first studies in harmony and organ-playing were made under the direction of the organist Prochazka, in the neighboring town of Buschtowitz; and in all branches the lad made such remarkable progress as to enable him to enter the Royal Conservatory in Vienna at the unusually early age of eleven. Here he worked harder than ever, and especially devoted himself to all the technical branches of composition, with such success that two years later (being then only thirteen years old) he sent a string sextet to an open competition, and unanimously received the first prize. He remained at the conservatory for eight years, during which time he won many more prizes for his composition as well as the first prize and silver medal for violin playing. One of his compositions—a cantata for solo, chorus and orchestra—was so successful as to be constantly repeated; and, as a special honor (and tribute to his abilities as a conductor-composer), on the occasion of his graduating from the conservatory, he publicly conducted a symphony. He was immensely popular with all his fellow students, among whom were Mottl and Faur, who especially recognized his extraordinary talent for conducting; and, as a parting gift from his class, he was presented with a magnificent and costly baton.

He immediately applied for a desk among the first violinists at the Royal Opera; and, obtaining this honorable position without the least difficulty, he occupied it during four years, receiving in this way the best possible practical instruction in conducting. During this time he played through an enormous repertoire of operatic and concert music, and had constantly before him the splendid example of such magnificent conductors as Richter and Jahn. At the end of his experiences as a member of the orchestra (1878), he went with the celebrated manager Angelo Neumann to Leipzig, and was installed as assistant conductor in the Old Opera House. He remained in this position for a year, drilling the chorus and soloists and conducting the smaller operas and operettas; but Neumann's experience had shown him that he had found a real musical wonder, and at the end of the year he was transferred to the New Opera House as head conductor, where he has been ever since. He made his debut in this position with one of the most magnificent performances of "Tannhauser" ever heard in Leipzig, and from that moment he was universally acknowledged as one of the most gifted and important conductors in Europe. Under his care and direction the Leipzig Theater orchestra has gained a European fame which entitles it to an equal or even superior place to the Gewandhaus orchestra. Nikisch has also, during these years in Leipzig, distinguished himself quite as much as a concert conductor as in the theatre, and he is particularly successful as a programme-maker. A performance of the ninth symphony under his direction in 1882 is said to have been the most magnificent ever given; while the superb manner in which he conducted the concerts of the last "Tonkunstler-Versammlung" in 1883 brought him a profusion of orders and decorations from all over the country. He also conducted on many occasions in the Gewand-haus as Reinecke's substitute, and has given many remarkable successful concerts with his own theatre orchestra. More especially noteworthy, however, is the manner in which he conducted the recent monster concerts of the Liszt Society. With them, he achieved a success which caused all the noted German critics to acknowledge that Arthur Nikisch is one of the most brilliant and talented living conductors, both in the theatre and on the concert stage.

In conclusion it may be said that Mr. Nikisch has earned a place for himself which justly entitles him to be ranked with such great conductors as Richter, Levy and Mottl. The single concert to be given here by the Boston symphony will take place at Central Music Hall this (Wednesday) evening, and should attract a large audience. Instead of the Beethoven concerts as previously announced, Mrs. Bloomfield-Zeisler will play the Chopin concerto in C minor.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived in this city from St. Paul this morning. The single concert which is allowed Chicago will take place this evening at Central Music Hall. As already announced, the programme will include Liszt's "Les Preludes," Grieg's orchestral suite, "Peer Gynt," and Schumann's great Symphony No. 4, "D Minor," in one piece—there being no pauses between the movements—and solo numbers by Mme. Steinbach-Jahns and Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler. The demand for seats has been very large.

Clipping No.

Clipping from Chicago Ill

Date Jan 12

Gut.

Boston Symphony Orcheetra.

The vocalist at the approaching concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, a distinguished prima donna from Germany, who, it is understood, has visited this country by the personal invitation of Mr. Nikisch. She began her professional career singing soubrette parts in the opera at Frankfort-on-the-Main. She next appeared in Danzig, where her remarkable gifts attracted attention and brought her an engagement at the Leipzig Stadt Theatre. Here she soon became the leading dramatic soprano, and her career was one of extraordinary success. She is a lady of commanding presence and great personal charm, and possesses a voice of rare beauty and extraordinary compass. She comes with the strongest indorsements of the Leipzig critics, and is a supreme favorite with both the opera and concert going public. Among her more notable triumphs were the roles of Elsa in "Lohengrin," Senta in "Flying Dutchman," Genoveva Eva in "Die Meistersinger," and Agnes in "Freischutz."

The following review of the ninth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mr. B. E. Woolf, the eminent Boston critic, will be of interest, as showing the work done by this organization under their new conductor, Mr. Arthur Nikisch, and the estimation in which he and his orchestra are held in the most musical city in the country:

At the outset of the season there was a general inclination to judge Mr. Nikisch by the standard established by Mr. Gericke during his five years of service as conductor of the orchestra. This sentiment, however, soon gave way to a wiser impulse to judge the new comer by the standard he was seeking to establish for himself, and from the moment that this latter method began to prevail Mr. Nikisch grew steadily in general estimation and has shown himself to be keenly attentive and amenable to criticism written in the true interests of musical art. Mr. Nikisch has firmly established himself in the respect and favor of our musical public, and has made it clear to every unprejudiced mind that he is a conductor of rare ability and fully worthy to hold the trust and confidence that have been placed in him.

His programmes have been quite as acceptable as have been those of his predecessors. They were not models of what such programmes should be, in the lack of the more eclectic spirit that might be brought to bear upon them. Forty-eight composers were represented by 106 works. Of these latter compositions new to Boston were: A symphony by Borodin; a concerto for violin by Brahms; "Kol Nidrei," for cello and orchestra, by Bruch; a concerto for cello by Eckert; "Spring," overture by Goldmark; Symphony No. 1, by Raff; concerto for violin, Saint-Saens; Symphony (Irish) by Staniford; and overture, "Romeo and Juliet," by Tschaikowski. This is not a large showing of novelties, especially when we consider that of these nine works four are concertos introduced by soloists. Three symphonies, not one of which is of the first order, and two overtures, both admirable, are all that we had of new works from abroad. Of native composers four works were performed for the first time: two episodes for orchestra, by Arthur Bird; a suite for string orchestra, by Arthur Foote; a symphonic poem, "Launcelot and Elaine," by E. A. MacDowell, and "Italia," a dramatic suite, by Arthur Weld.

The end of the season found the orchestra in fully as efficient a state as it was when he assumed direction of it. That the effect he produced with it differed from the effect produced by Mr. Gericke may be attributed to the widely contrasting temperament of the two men. Mr. Gericke obtained a higher finish and a finer delicacy from the players, but this was at the cost of the complete merging of the individualities of the artists in the conductor, and resulted in a certain loss of flexibility and largeness in style. Mr. Nikisch, by releasing the players from this restraint and giving their individualities a wider scope, imparted to the orchestra greater fire, vigor and contrast in effects.

Argus-Albany, N. Y.

Date 3

A Musical Treat.

The far famed Boston Symphony orchestra, Herr Arthur McKisch conductor, and with the assistance of the Swedish soprano, Mme. Steenbach-Jahns, and the favorite violinist, Timothie Adamouski, will give their first concert in this city on Friday evening of next week at the new hall. This is the only permanent orchestra in this country maintained exclusively for concert purposes and for the interpretation of music of the highest class. This is a delightful treat in store for Albany's musical people and this superb organization merits a crowded house. The prices are fifty, seventy-five cents and one dollar. On Monday morning the sale of seats begins at the music stores.

[152]

Clipping from Richmond Va. Dispatch
Date 1/5.

GREAT ORCHESTRA.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY UNDER NIKISCH AT THE ACADEMY.

First Night of the May Festival—A Brilliant Audience and a Fine Performance.

By long odds the finest entertainment ever given under the auspices of the Mozart Association was the concert rendered at the Academy last evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under their able director, Mr. Arthur Nikisch. Indeed to our mind Richmond has never before heard such perfection in orchestral playing.

About ten minutes after the hour announced (8:30) for the concert to begin Mr. Nikisch walked upon the stage, and having acknowledged the applause which greeted him and given an "attention" rap with his tiny baton, stepped upon his stand and faced his orchestra of seventy-odd musicians. There was a brilliant audience present and when the first strains of Weber's beautiful overture were sounded many of the vast assemblage which subsequently filled the house were still coming in.

THE CONDUCTOR.

The great leader is thoroughly quiet in his movements and mild-mannered, yet from the moment he takes his position as conductor he looks the master spirit. He directs in a way thoroughly original. The baton in his hands is not wielded as if a threatening cudgel with which to frighten the timid and bring the refractory into subjection; it is as if a very unimportant little reed gracefully waved for the gratification of the conductor, in keeping time to the music, as one pats his foot to inspiring strains. Yet the work of that unostentatious baton is simply immense. It seems electrified with the genius of its holder and transmits his spirit to each individual performer. Nikisch uses his left hand in a way that seems to speak to the performers. He is rather the opposite of his worthy predecessor Gericke, who appeared rather more as a commander; yet the former has conquered in his way and has made the Boston Symphony as near perfection as we poor mortals in earthly matters can expect to attain.

A GREAT PERFORMANCE.

But for the work of last evening. Never before have we heard anything to approach the finished rendering given the Weber Overture. The shading was something delicious, if we might so express it. The last movement (waltz time) of Rubinstein's "Bal Costume" seemed to be the most taking feature of the evening, though as a whole it was beautifully rendered.

Mrs. Steinbach-Jahns, the vocalist of the occasion, received quite an ovation and a triple recall, although no encores were responded to. She has a voice of power and excellent quality, and was heard at her best in the song, "Die Quelle," by Goldmark. We thought her rendering of the grand aria from Freyscheutz rather lacking in animation. Yet this may be accounted for from the fact that she was suffering from a very sore throat, and at one time in the afternoon it was feared she would not be able to sing.

A CHARMING ADDITION.

The management very generously made a charming addition to the programme, which was announced from the stage. It was the "Perpetuo Moto" of Paganini played by all the violins (twenty-six) in unison and accompanied by Mr. Nikisch on the piano. This was simply a remarkable performance. It is difficult to realize how so many violins could play as one can, very rapid and difficult execution kept up throughout, just as the name of the composition has it—in perpetual motion.

When the Mendelssohn symphony in A (Italian) was reached the orchestra got down to its fine work, though it must be admitted, and is still more wonderful to relate, some of the audience seemed to grow wearied as the simply exquisite rendering of this fine composition progressed. It was a fitting conclusion to a fine programme beautifully rendered.

THE ORCHESTRA.

The orchestra is almost faultless in its composition. Yet from the marvellous perfection of the strings and the prominence given them we should say they are Mr. Nikisch's pets. Their prominent position last night, from the extension of the stage away out from the proscenium, must have done their conductor's heart good. Yet it was a matter of regret to us that the wind instruments should have been, as it were, so thrown into the shade. Upon these latter instruments there are in this orchestra some of the finest performers in the world. Heindel, who played with the old "Boston Quintette Club," and whom we used to think the finest of all flute-players, is here as second flute. Only think of it!

PRETTY STAGE SCENE.

The stage setting was very pretty and effective, with a conservatory scene for the background. Only about one half of the stage proper was occupied, but with the staging over of the footlights and entire orchestra the perspective was decidedly effective. Back of the rear scene as arranged last night raised tiers of seats have been erected for the festival chorus to-night. They will seat 285 singers, but were hidden to view last evening.

To-night will close the "festival," and a fine programme will be rendered by the orchestra, the Festival chorus, and Madame Steinbach-Jahns. Grieg's "Peer Gynt" will prove an enjoyable feature.

Nikisch is pronounced with accent on the first syllable.

Press Albany,
Date 5/18

Vol. 41

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Boston's World Famous Organization Shortly to Appear in Albany.

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH THE DIRECTOR.

The Admirably Balanced Program Which is to be Rendered at Harmanus Bleecker Hall.

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH.

The coming visit of this orchestra, for a single concert at Harmanus Bleecker Hall next Friday evening, deserves the attention of every lover of fine music. This organization has had a prosperous season, visiting all the large cities. In New York, Washington and all leading places, a series of concerts by the Boston orchestra is one of the regular features of the musical season, and the merits of the organization have won for it in each of these cities a large clientele of cultured and fashionable people.

The orchestra numbers seventy performers, under direction of Mr. Arthur Nikisch, and on Friday will be assisted by Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, a famous Leipzic soprano, and Mr. T. Adamowski, a gifted violinist.

The work of the Boston Symphony orchestra certainly entitles it to be considered one of the finest orchestras in the world. This being so, a short biographical sketch of its present conductor, Arthur Nikisch, will not be unwelcome.

He was born October 12, 1855, in a small town called Szent-Miklos, Hungary. His father occupied the position of auditor to Prince Lichtenstein, and was himself an enthusiastic musical amateur. In earliest childhood the boy showed such extraordinary talent that his parents determined to educate him as a musician. He began his studies with the violin; and he mastered that instrument with such ease that at the early age of eight he appeared in public with most extraordinary success, in fact, the young prodigy received a genuine ovation.

His first studies in harmony and organ playing were made under the direction of the organist Prochazka, in the neighboring town of Buschtowitz; and in all branches the lad made such remarkable progress as to enable him to enter the Royal conservatory in Vienna at the unusually early age of eleven. Here he worked harder than ever and especially devoted himself to all the technical branches of composition, with such success that two years later (being then only thirteen years old) he sent a string sextet to an open competition and received the first prize. He remained at the conservatory for eight years, during which time he won additional prizes for his composition as well as the first prize and silver medal for violin playing.

He was immensely popular with all his fellow students.

Among whom were Motte and Faur, who recognized his extraordinary talent for conducting; and as a parting gift from his class, he was presented with a magnificent baton. He immediately applied for a desk among the first violinists a the Royal Opera and occupied it during four years, receiving in this way the best possible instruction in conducting. During this time he played through an enormous repertoire of operatic and concert music and constantly before him the splendid example of such magnificent conductors as Richter and Jahn. At the end of his experiences as a member of the orchestra (1878) he went with the celebrated manager, Angelo Newmannn, to Leipzic, and was installed as assistant conductor in the old opera house. He remained in this position for a year, drilling the chorus and soloists and conducting the smaller operas and operettas; but Newmann's experience had shown him that he had found a real musical wonder, and at the end of the year he was transferred to the new opera house as head conductor where he has been ever since. He made his debut in this position with one of the most magnificent performances of "Tannhauser" ever heard in Leipzic, and from that moment he was universally acknowledged as one of the most gifted conductors in Europe. Nikisch has also, during these years in Leipzic, distinguished himself quite as much as a concert conductor as in the theatre, and he is particularly successful as a program maker.

Especially noteworthy is the manner in which he conducted the recent monster concert of the Liszt society. With them he achieved a success which caused all the noted German critics to acknowledge that Arthur Nikisch is one of the most brilliant and talented living conductors both in the theatre and on the concert stage. In conclusion it may be said that Mr. Nikisch has earned a place for himself which justly entitles him to be ranked with such great conductors as Richter, Levy and Motte.

This admirably balanced program will be rendered at the concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, tickets for which will be on sale Monday:

Symphonic Poem "Les Preludes".....Liszt
Aria from "Die Entfuehring".....Mozart
Mme. Steinback-Jahns.
Concerto for Violin.....Saint-Saens
M. Adamowski.
Suite for Orchestra—"Peer Gynt".....Grieg
Songs with Piano.....
Mme. Steinback Jahns.
Symphony in C, Minor, No. 5.....Beethoven

Herald Chicago, Ill.
Date 3/15

Superintendent of public instruction—Professor Clark, of Hood.

The prohibition platform was adopted.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The concert given last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was one of the most notable events of the season, and one that will not soon be forgotten by the music-loving people of Chicago. In every respect it was a great success. The audience was the largest, the most brilliant and the most enthusiastic assemblage that has been seen in Central Music Hall for many a day. Society, as if repenting for its shameful neglect of the German opera performances, turned out in full force. Scattered through the thickly peopled Auditorium were the faces of some of the most cultured and most distinguished ladies and gentlemen that grace the highest circles of social life, and mingling with these were the familiar faces of the leading musical talent of the city. Such an outpouring of society and art patrons has seldom been known in connection with an event of similar character, and only once this season, on the occasion of the Sarasate-D'Albert concerts, has an instrumental performance drawn a larger attendance. It was the largest audience that the Boston orchestra ever played to in Chicago. Of the entertainment, so far as concerns the work of the orchestra, nothing can be said except in connection with terms of warmest praise. It was beyond all dispute the finest orchestral performance that has ever been given in this city, and that is, considering the high class of musical entertainments Chicago is accustomed to, the strongest commendation that could possibly be penned. The orchestra has for several years enjoyed a wide degree of popularity in Chicago and the increased fame that preceeded its present visit had a tendency to stimulate public interest. Arthur Nikisch, the new conductor, who is credited by Bostonians with having accomplished wonders in one brief season, was the central figure around which interest clustered, and when he made his first bow to a Chicago audience last evening he was given a cordial welcome. Before the evening was half spent Mr. Nikisch had achieved a genuine triumph, the audience quickly recognizing his superior talents and manifesting its appreciation in the most demonstrative fashion that can be imagined. In appearance he is much finer looking than the portraits that have been so profusely scattered about the city would indicate. Tall, stately, with a noble face and a scholarly, intellectual cast of features, he made an excellent impression as he walked down to the footlights and mounted the conductor's desk, but it was when he tapped the orchestra to order and waved it into motion that the most pleasing part of his personality became apparent. Such charming grace has never been seen here in any orchestral director, not excepting Mr. Thomas, nor has there ever appeared before a Chicago audience a conductor who has manifested such absolute control over every part of his organization, from the leading violinists and celloists down to the artist who beats the cymbals. In former years the orchestra, under Mr. Gericke, became famous for the perfection of its strings, but Mr. Nikisch has made very great improvements in the general tonal effects by still further refining the work of the strings and by developing the power of the wind instruments. It was the unnecessary suppression of the latter that called forth the only adverse criticism the orchestra received during its last western tour, but with that defect remedied and the same degree of precision maintained or even bettered, the orchestra is now very nearly, if not quite, the acme of artistic perfection.

Last night's programme, though presenting no distinct novelty, was one of exceptional merit. The opening number was Liszt's "Les Preludes," the most brilliant and most exquisitely melodious of any of the famous composer's "symphonic poems." It has never been so magnificently performed in Chicago, and probably not in any other city in this country, except where the Boston orchestra has interpreted it under Mr. Nikisch. The second orchestral number, and the one that afforded the greatest enjoyment to the audience, was Grieg's "Peer Gynt," which has once before been admirably performed in this city, though on that occasion the beauties of the score were not so vividly brought out as they were last night. The closing movement, presenting many novel and striking effects of instrumentation, made a pronounced hit and was so persistently encored that Mr. Nikisch graciously performed it a second time. Schumann's fourth symphony in D minor brought the performance to a close. The soloists of the evening were Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, who performed with her usual skill and intelligence Chopin's concerto the pianoforte in F minor, and Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, who made her debut before a Chicago audience as a singer. The latter, although possessing a voice of considerable range, of strong dramatic power, was scarcely in keeping with the general excellence of the entertainment. She is said to have been an artist of considerable repute in her own country, but the manner in which she rendered the aria from the second act of "Der Freischutz" did not impress her hearers with any degree of favor, nor did she redeem herself later in the evening when she sang three songs, accompanied on the piano by Mr. Nikisch. Mrs. Zeisler, however, added to the many good opinions that have been formed of her artistic qualities during her long and successful career in Chicago, and she was well deserving of the generous applause that punctuated each movement of Chopin's popular concerto. Besides Mme. Jahn's the only regrettable feature of the entertainment is the fact that so many engagements elsewhere prevent the orchestra from giving a second concert in Chicago this season.

Journal Minneapolis, Minn.
Date 5/14

The Symphony Orchestra to Visit Minneapolis Every Year.

HERR NIKISCH AND THE COLISEUM

He Says It Is Better for Music than Music Hall, Boston—Louis Miller Replies to Malicious Criticism.

Louis Miller was sought by a reporter this morning for his views in regard to the criticism that appeared in this morning's Tribune as to the make-up of the Coliseum program as rendered by the Boston Symphony orchestra Monday evening. Mr. Miller was unwilling to talk at first but was finally induced to express his views.

"It is absurd from beginning to end, full of malice and abuse. I like honest criticism, in fact I court it, both as to the program and the manner in which the concert was managed. It is a case of sour grapes, and in this case they are very sour. I brought the Boston Symphony Orchestra here at my own risk, assuming all responsibility and I kept faith with the Minnneapolis public. There was not a hitch, everything went off as smoothly as could have been hoped for; the honor of introducing the foremost American orchestra to the Northwest belongs to me and no one shall deprive me of it. The charge that the program was light is too ridiculous. The Boston orchestra does not play light music; it is not in their repertoire; therefore, how could they play it here? The "Symphonic Poem" was played at Music Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, Nov. 30, 1889, at the eighth symphony concert of the series, the solo for violin, orchestral accompaniment, was given at the 16th symphony concert in Boston, Saturday, Feb. 8, the "Peer Gynt" dramatic suite on Saturday, Jan. 25, and Schuman's master piece, his great Symphony No. 4 in D minor, was chosen by Herr Nikisch, himself, as a test number for his first appearance in America, Saturday, Oct. 12, 1889. So that every number as given here was played last season at the regular symphony concerts in Boston Music hall. I had nothing whatever to do with the making up of the program. That belongs to Herr Nikisch himself; he arranged the programs for all the cities on the tour. Sunday noon I received a telegram from Mr. Comee, informing me that Herr Nikisch had decided upon adding the flute solo, with orchestral accompaniment, by Mons. Mole. At only one other city in the whole tour did Nikisch give the Schumann symphony—at St. Louis—and Minneapolis is to be congratulated that it was so highly honored.

"As to the acoustic quality of the Coliseum, Herr Nikisch was simply carried away with it. He made the remark to me that the orchestra had appeared in no place better adapted for concerts, where every note could be distinctly heard, and expressed the wish that he might exchange it for the Music hall in Boston and move the Coliseum thither. He was amazed at the grandeur of the auditorium and its sounding board, which he called perfection, and expressed the hope that at a re-appearance here the orchestra might be heard there again. He admitted that unless the seats were all occupied there would be some echo, but with all available space filled, every seat taken, it would be simply perfection. The opinion of so distinguished and disinterested person as Herr Nikisch surely ought to have weight."

"What is the outlook for a reappearance here?"

"You may say that the appearance of the Boston Orchestra will become an annual affair from this out. Next spring will find the great band of musicians here again for a series of concerts under my management.

"Are you from New York, Mr. Miller?

"Oh no, Boston, is my home; I have, however, been in New York, Brooklyn and Jersey City; for three years I was with Madame Camilla Urso, the violin virtuoso, last season making a tour of the country from Charlottetown, P. E. I., to San Diego, Cal. Yes, I like Minneapolis very much indeed. Your people are so open-hearted. I have made a great many friends here, and I shall anxiously look forward to coming back here again."

Clipping from Tribune Detroit, Mich.
Date 5/

BOSTON'S GREAT ORCHESTRA.

A red letter event of the musical season will be the single concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, 70 performers, under direction of Mr. Arthur Nikisch, which takes place at Miner's theater next Saturday evening. The excellence of the Boston orchestra is well known through previous performances in this city, but unusual interest will attach to this concert, as it will make known to the Detroit public Mr. Arthur Nikisch, who was chosen to succeed Mr. Gericke as conductor. Mr. Nikisch came to America with a great European reputation based upon the splended performances of opera given under his direction at the famous Leipzig Stadt theater. The success of the concerts given during the present season in Eastern cities has fully justified the accounts of his musical achivements which preceded his arrival.

Under Mr. Gericke the orchestra became famous for the excellence of its strings, and if any criticism could justly be made upon the methods of that great conductor it was the undue repression of the wind instruments. Under Mr. Nikisch it is said that the organization has become better balanced and gained much in power and effectiveness. With the orchestra on Saturday will appear as soloists Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, a noted Leipzig soprano, and Franz Kneisel, a violinist of great gifts. An attractive program is announced, and the occasion deserves the attention of all music lovers.

[153]

Clipping from Richmond Va. Dispatch

Date 1/3.

A GREAT ORCHESTRA.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY UNDER NIKISCH AT THE ACADEMY.

First Night of the May Festival—A Brilliant Audience and a Fine Performance.

By long odds the finest entertainment ever given under the auspices of the Mozart Association was the concert rendered at the Academy last evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under their able director, Mr. Arthur Nikisch. Indeed to our mind Richmond has never before heard such perfection in orchestral playing.

About ten minutes after the hour announced (8:30) for the concert to begin Mr. Nikisch walked upon the stage, and having acknowledged the applause which greeted him and given an "attention" rap with his tiny baton, stepped upon his stand and faced his orchestra of seventy-odd musicians. There was a brilliant audience present and when the first strains of Weber's beautiful overture were sounded many of the vast assemblage which subsequently filled the house were still coming in.

THE CONDUCTOR.

The great leader is thoroughly quiet in his movements and mild-mannered, yet from the moment he takes his position as conductor he looks the master spirit. He directs in a way thoroughly original. The baton in his hands is not wielded as if a threatening cudgel with which to frighten the timid and bring the refractory into subjection; it is as if a very unimportant little reed gracefully waved for the gratification of the conductor, in keeping time to the music, as one pats his foot to inspiring strains. Yet the work of that unostentatious baton is simply immense. It seems electrified with the genius of its holder and transmits his spirit to each individual performer. Nikisch uses his left hand in a way that seems to speak to the performers. He is rather the opposite of his worthy predecessor Gericke, who appeared rather more as a commander; yet the former has conquered in his way and has made the Boston Symphony as near perfection as we poor mortals in earthly matters can expect to attain.

A GREAT PERFORMANCE.

But for the work of last evening. Never before have we heard anything to approach the finished rendering given the Weber Overture. The shading was something delicious, if we might so express it. The last movement (waltz time) of Rubinstein's "Bal Costume" seemed to be the most taking feature of the evening, though as a whole it was beautifully rendered.

Mrs. Steinbach-Jahns, the vocalist of the occasion, received quite an ovation and a triple recall, although no encores were responded to. She has a voice of power and excellent quality, and was heard at her best in the song, "Die Quelle," by Goldmark. We thought her rendering of the grand aria from Freyscheutz rather lacking in animation. Yet this may be accounted for from the fact that she was suffering from a very sore throat, and at one time in the afternoon it was feared she would not be able to sing.

A CHARMING ADDITION.

The management very generously made a charming addition to the programme, which was announced from the stage. It was the "Perpetuo Moto" of Paganini played by all the violins (twenty-six) in unison and accompanied by Mr. Nikisch on the piano. This was simply a remarkable performance. It is difficult to realize how so many violins could play as one man, very rapid and difficult execution kept up throughout, just as the name of the composition has it—in perpetual motion.

When the Mendelssohn symphony in A (Italian) was reached the orchestra got down to its fine work, though it must be admitted, and is still more wonderful to relate, some of the audience seemed to grow wearied as the simply exquisite rendering of this fine composition progressed. It was a fitting conclusion to a fine programme beautifully rendered.

THE ORCHESTRA.

The orchestra is almost faultless in its composition. Yet from the marvellous perfection of the strings and the prominence given them we should say they are Mr. Nikisch's pets. Their prominent position last night, from the extension of the stage away out from the proscenium, must have done their conductor's heart good. Yet it was a matter of regret to us that the wind instruments should have been, as it were, so thrown into the shade. Upon these latter instruments there are in this orchestra some of the finest performers in the world. Heindel, who played with the old "Boston Quintette Club," and whom we used to think the finest of all flute-players, is here as second flute. Only think of it!

PRETTY STAGE SCENE.

The stage setting was very pretty and effective, with a conservatory scene for the background. Only about one half of the stage proper was occupied, but with the staging over of the footlights and entire orchestra the perspective was decidedly effective. Back of the rear scene as arranged last night raised tiers of seats have been erected for the festival chorus tonight. They will seat 285 singers, but were hidden to view last evening.

To-night will close the "festival," and a fine programme will be rendered by the orchestra, the Festival chorus, and Madame Steinbach-Jahns. Grieg's "Peer Gynt" will prove an enjoyable feature.

Nikisch is pronounced with accent on the first syllable.

Press-Albany,

Date 5/18

Vol. 41

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Boston's World Famous Organization Shortly to Appear in Albany.

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH THE DIRECTOR.

The Admirably Balanced Program Which is to be Rendered at Harmanus Bleecker Hall.

MR. ARTHUR NIKISCH.

The coming visit of this orchestra, for a single concert at Harmanus Bleecker Hall next Friday evening, deserves the attention of every lover of fine music. This organization has had a prosperous season, visiting all the large cities. In New York, Washington and all leading places, a series of concerts by the Boston orchestra is one of the regular features of the musical season, and the merits of the organization have won for it in each of these cities a large clientele of cultured and fashionable people.

The orchestra numbers seventy performers, under direction of Mr. Arthur Nikisch, and on Friday will be assisted by Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, a famous Leipzic soprano, and Mr. T. Adamowski, a gifted violinist.

The work of the Boston Symphony orchestra certainly entitles it to be considered one of the finest orchestras in the world. This being so, a short biographical sketch of its present conductor, Arthur Nikisch, will not be unwelcome.

He was born October 12, 1855, in a small town called Szent-Miklos, Hungary. His father occupied the position of auditor to Prince Lichtenstein, and was himself an enthusiastic musical amateur. In earliest childhood the boy showed such extraordinary talent that his parents determined to educate him as a musician. He began his studies with the violin; and he mastered that instrument with such ease that at the early age of eight he appeared in public with most extraordinary success, in fact, the young prodigy received a genuine ovation.

His first studies in harmony and organ playing were made under the direction of the organist Prochazka, in the neighboring town of Buschtowitz; and in all branches the lad made such remarkable progress as to enable him to enter the Royal conservatory in Vienna at the unusually early age of eleven. Here he worked harder than ever and especially devoted himself to all the technical branches of composition, with such success that two years later (being then only thirteen years old) he sent a string sextet to an open competition and received the first prize. He remained at the conservatory for eight years, during which time he won additional prizes for his composition as well as the first prize and silver medal for violin playing.

He was immensely popular with all his fellow students.

Among whom were Motte and Faur, who recognized his extraordinary talent for conducting; and as a parting gift from his class, he was presented with a magnificent baton. He immediately applied for a desk among the first violinists a the Royal Opera and occupied it during four years, receiving in this way the best possible instruction in conducting. During this time he played through an enormous repertoire of operatic and concert music and constantly before him the splendid example of such magnificent conductors as Richter and Jahn. At the end of his experiences as a member of the orchestra (1878) he went with the celebrated manager, Angelo Newmannn, to Leipzic, and was installed as assistant conductor in the old opera house. He remained in this position for a year, drilling the chorus and soloists and conducting the smaller operas and operettas; but Newmann's experience had shown him that he had found a real musical wonder, and at the end of the year he was transferred to the new opera house as head conductor where he has been ever since. He made his debut in this position with one of the most magnificent performances of "Tannhauser" ever heard in Leipzic, and from that moment he was universally acknowledged as one of the most gifted conductors in Europe. Nikisch has also, during these years in Leipzic, distinguished himself quite as much as a concert conductor as in the theatre, and he is particularly successful as a program maker.

Especially noteworthy is the manner in which he conducted the recent monster concert of the Liszt society. With them he achieved a success which caused all the noted German critics to acknowledge that Arthur Nikisch is one of the most brilliant and talented living conductors both in the theatre and on the concert stage. In conclusion it may be said that Mr. Nikisch has earned a place for himself which justly entitles him to be ranked with such great conductors as Richter, Levy and Motte.

This admirably balanced program will be rendered at the concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, tickets for which will be on sale Monday:

Symphonic Poem "Les Preludes".....Liszt
Aria from "Die Entfuchring".....Mozart
Mme. Steinback-Jahns.
Concerto for Violin.. ..... Saint-Saens
M. Adamowski.
Suite for Orchestra—"Peer Gynt".....Grieg
Songs with Piano.....
Mme. Steinback Jahns.
Symphony in C, Minor, No. 5.....Beethoven

III.

ate 3-15

Superintendent of public instruction—Professor A. Clark, of Hood.

The prohibition platform was adopted.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The concert given last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was one of the most notable events of the season, and one that will not soon be forgotten by the music-loving people of Chicago. In every respect it was a great success. The audience was the largest, the most brilliant and the most enthusiastic assemblage that has been seen in Central Music Hall for many a day. Society, as if repenting for its shameful neglect of the German opera performances, turned out in full force. Scattered through the thickly peopled Auditorium were the faces of some of the most cultured and most distinguished ladies and gentlemen that grace the highest circles of social life, and mingling with these were the familiar faces of the leading musical talent of the city. Such an outpouring of society and art patrons has seldom been known in connection with an event of similar character, and only once this season, on the occasion of the Sarasate-D'Albert concerts, has an instrumental performance drawn a larger attendance. It was the largest audience that the Boston orchestra ever played to in Chicago. Of the entertainment, so far as concerns the work of the orchestra, nothing can be said except in connection with terms of warmest praise. It was beyond all dispute the finest orchestral performance that has ever been given in this city, and that is, considering the high class of musical entertainments Chicago is accustomed to, the strongest commendation that could possibly be penned. The orchestra has for several years enjoyed a wide degree of popularity in Chicago and the increased fame that preceded its present visit had a tendency to stimulate public interest. Arthur Nikisch, the new conductor, who is credited by Bostonians with having accomplished wonders in one brief season, was the central figure around which interest clustered, and when he made his first bow to a Chicago audience last evening he was given a cordial welcome. Before the evening was half spent Mr. Nikisch had achieved a genuine triumph, the audience quickly recognizing his superior talents and manifesting its appreciation in the most demonstrative fashion that can be imagined. In appearance he is much finer looking than the portraits that have been so profusely scattered about the city would indicate. Tall, stately, with a noble face and a scholarly, intellectual cast of features, he made an excellent impression as he walked down to the footlights and mounted the conductor's desk, but it was when he tapped the orchestra to order and waved it into motion that the most pleasing part of his personality became apparent. Such charming grace has never been seen here in any orchestral director, not excepting Mr. Thomas, nor has there ever appeared before a Chicago audience a conductor who has manifested such absolute control over every part of his organization, from the leading violinists and celloists down to the artist who beats the cymbals. In former years the orchestra, under Mr. Gericke, became famous for the perfection of its strings, but Mr. Nikisch has made very great improvements in the general tonal effects by still further refining the work of the strings and by developing the power of the wind instruments. It was the unnecessary suppression of the latter that called forth the only adverse criticism the orchestra received during its last western tour, but with that defect remedied and the same degree of precision maintained or even bettered, the orchestra is now very nearly, if not quite, the acme of artistic perfection.

Last night's programme, though presenting no distinct novelty, was one of exceptional merit. The opening number was Liszt's "Les Preludes," the most brilliant and most exquisitely melodious of any of the famous composer's "symphonic poems." It has never been so magnificently performed in Chicago, and probably not in any other city in this country, except where the Boston orchestra has interpreted it under Mr. Nikisch. The second orchestral number, and the one that afforded the greatest enjoyment to the audience, was Grieg's "Peer Gynt," which has once before been admirably performed in this city, though on that occasion the beauties of the score were not so vividly brought out as they were last night. The closing movement, presenting many novel and striking effects of instrumentation, made a pronounced hit and was so persistently encored that Mr. Nikisch graciously performed it a second time. Schumann's fourth symphony in D minor brought the performance to a close. The soloists of the evening were Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, who performed with her usual skill and intelligence Chopin's concerto the pianoforte in F minor, and Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, who made her debut before a Chicago audience as a singer. The latter, although possessing a voice of considerable range, of strong dramatic power, was scarcely in keeping with the general excellence of the entertainment. She is said to have been an artist of considerable repute in her own country, but the manner in which she rendered the aria from the second act of "Der Freischutz" did not impress her hearers with any degree of favor, nor did she redeem herself later in the evening when she sang three songs, accompanied on the piano by Mr. Nikisch. Mrs. Zeisler, however, added to the many good opinions that have been formed of her artistic qualities during her long and successful career in Chicago, and she was well deserving of the generous applause that punctuated each movement of Chopin's popular concerto. Besides Mme. Jahn's the only regrettable feature of the entertainment is the fact that so many engagements elsewhere prevent the orchestra from giving a second concert in Chicago this season.

Journal Minneapolis, MI

Date 5/14

THE MINNEAPOLIS AFFAIR

The Symphony Orchestra to Visit Minneapolis Every Year.

HERR NIKISCH AND THE COLISEUM

He Says It Is Better for Music than Music Hall, Boston—Louis Miller Replies to Malicious Criticism.

Louis Miller was sought by a reporter this morning for his views in regard to the criticism that appeared in this morning's Tribune as to the make-up of the Coliseum program as rendered by the Boston Symphony orchestra Monday evening. Mr. Miller was unwilling to talk at first but was finally induced to express his views.

"It is absurd from beginning to end, full of malice and abuse. I like honest criticism, in fact I court it, both as to the program and the manner in which the concert was managed. It is a case of sour grapes, and in this case they are very sour. I brought the Boston Symphony Orchestra here at my own risk, assuming all responsibility and I kept faith with the Minneapolis public. There was not a hitch, everything went off as smoothly as could have been hoped for; the honor of introducing the foremost American orchestra to the Northwest belongs to me and no one shall deprive me of it. The charge that the program was light is too ridiculous. The Boston orchestra does not play light music; it is not in their repertoire; therefore, how could they play it here? The "Symphonic Poem" was played at Music Hall, Boston, Saturday evening, Nov. 30, 1889, at the eighth symphony concert of the series, the solo for violin, orchestral accompaniment, was given at the 16th symphony concert in Boston, Saturday, Feb. 8, the "Peer Gynt" dramatic suite on Saturday, Jan. 25, and Schuman's master piece, his great Symphony No. 4 in D minor, was chosen by Herr Nikisch, himself, as a test number for his first appearance in America, Saturday, Oct. 12, 1889. So that every number as given here was played last season at the regular symphony concerts in Boston Music hall. I had nothing whatever to do with the making up of the program. That belongs to Herr Nikisch himself; he arranged the programs for all the cities on the tour. Sunday noon I received a telegram from Mr. Comee, informing me that Herr Nikisch had decided upon adding the flute solo, with orchestral accompaniment, by Mons. Mole. At only one other city in the whole tour did Nikisch give the Schumann symphony—at St. Louis—and Minneapolis is to be congratulated that it was so highly honored.

"As to the acoustic quality of the Coliseum, Herr Nikisch was simply carried away with it. He made the remark to me that the orchestra had appeared in no place better adapted for concerts, where every note could be distinctly heard, and expressed the wish that he might exchange it for the Music hall in Boston and move the Coliseum thither. He was amazed at the grandeur of the auditorium and its sounding board, which he called perfection, and expressed the hope that at a re-appearance here the orchestra might be heard there again. He admitted that unless the seats were all occupied there would be some echo, but with all available space filled, every seat taken, it would be simply perfection. The opinion of so distinguished and disinterested person as Herr Nikisch surely ought to have weight."

"What is the outlook for a reappearance here?"

"You may say that the appearance of the Boston Orchestra will become an annual affair from this out. Next spring will find the great band of musicians here again for a series of concerts under my management.

"Are you from New York, Mr. Miller?

"Oh no, Boston, is my home; I have, however, been in New York, Brooklyn and Jersey City; for three years I was with Madame Camilla Urso, the violin virtuoso, last season making a tour of the country from Charlottetown, P. E. I., to San Diego, Cal. Yes, I like Minneapolis very much indeed. Your people are so open-hearted. I have made a great many friends here, and I shall anxiously look forward to coming back here again."

Clipping from Tribune Detroit, Mich

Date 5

BOSTON'S GREAT ORCHESTRA.

A red letter event of the musical season will be the single concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, 70 performers, under direction of Mr. Arthur Nikisch, which takes place at Miner's theater next Saturday evening. The excellence of the Boston orchestra is well known through previous performances in this city, but unusual interest will attach to this concert, as it will make known to the Detroit public Mr. Arthur Nikisch, who was chosen to succeed Mr. Gericke as conductor. Mr. Nikisch came to America with a great European reputation based upon the splended performances of opera given under his direction at the famous Leipzig Stadt theater. The success of the concerts given during the present season in Eastern cities has fully justified the accounts of his musical achivements which preceded his arrival.

Under Mr. Gericke the orchestra became famous for the excellence of its strings, and if any criticism could justly be made upon the methods of that great conductor it was the undue repression of the wind instruments. Under Mr. Nikisch it is said that the organization has become better balanced and gained much in power and effectiveness. With the orchestra on Saturday will appear as soloists Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, a noted Leipzig soprano, and Franz Kneisel, a violinist of great gifts. An attractive program is announced, and the occasion deserves the attention of all music lovers.

[153]

News, St. Paul, Minn.

Date 5/11

Rev. Dr. Forbes will preach ... Hamline at 10:30 a. m., and in Wesley Chapel at 7:30 p. m.

THE GREAT MUSICAL EVENT.

Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the People's Church.

The day is rapidly approaching when the great Boston Symphony Orchestra will be here. Tuesday next will find the People's Church filled to the doors to welcome the debut in this city of the greatest orchestral organization in the United States. The Western tour this season has been almost phenomenal—audiences of 3,000 people greeted the orchestra in Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore and Cincinati. The enthusiasm has in every city ran high, amounting in many instances to ovations. The orchestra comes from St. Louis tomorrow by special train, seventy strong, arriving at the Ryan Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock.

The conductor, Mr. Nikisch, has been most enthusiastically received everywhere. When one considers that Nikisch directs everything without notes or stand before him, one realizes how remarkable a director he is.

Mme. Stembach-Jahns, the dramatic soprano, prima donna of Leipsig, has made a tremendous success. In Cincinnati encores, flowers and shouts were in order at the conclusion of her numbers.

The St. Paul programme is one of the most popular ever played by the orchestra, and contains some of the masterpieces of orchestral work. It is as follows:

Wagner—Overture.....Tannhauser
Wagner—Aria, O Lovely Halls —Tannhauser
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Saint-Saens—Two movements from Concerto for Violin, in B minor, No. 3, Op. 61.
Andante quasi allegretto.
Molto moderato e maestoso; Allegro non troppo.
Mr. Timothee Adamowski.
Grieg.....Suite, Peer Gynt, Op. 46
Daybreak.
The Death of Aase.
Anitra's Dance.
In the Halls of the King of the Dovre Mountains.
(The imps are chasing Peer Gynt.
Songs With Piano.
Rubinstein.....Es blinkt der Thau
Sommer.....Lullaby
Goldmark.....Die Quelle
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Mendelssohn...Symphony in A (Italian)
Allegro vivace.
Andante con moto.
Con moto moderato.
Saltarello.

Pioneer Press, St. Paul, Minn

Date 5/11

MINNEAPOLIS MUSICAL MENTION.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra To-morrow Night—Musical Events Announced.

The event of the week, in fact of the season, is the concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, which is to be given at the Coliseum to-morrow evening. It is scarcely necessary to add to the comments which have been printed from time to time concerning this entertainment. The rank which this orchestra sustains, among the best not only in America but the world, is a sufficient assurance of its excellence. Madame Steinbach-Jahns, the soprano who accompanies them, while less well known in this country, has made an excellent impression during her short stay, and the Eastern press unite in praising her. The company will arrive in Minneapolis from St. Louis this evening and will register at the West. The Coliseum is in readiness for the concert, and the music will be heard to the best possible advantage. If the concert is a success financially, and there is every indication that it will be, the orchestra promises to pay Minneapolis an annual visit.

The following is the programme for the concert:

Liszt.....Symphonic Poem, "Les Preludes"
Meyerbeer.....Pages' Aria from "Les Huguenots"
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Lalo.....Symphonic espagnole for violin and orchestra—Op. 21. (a) Allegro non troppo. (b) Scherzando. (c) Andante. (d) Rondo.
Herr C. M. Loeffler.
Grieg.....Suite, "Peer Gynt"—Op. 46. "Day Break," "The Death of Aase." "Anitra's Dance," "In the Halls of the King of the Dovre Mountains."
Songs, with piano.....(a) Liszt—"O, Lieb." (b) Schubert—"Du bist die Ruh." (c) Grieg —"Hoffnung."
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Schumann.....Symphony No. 4, in D minor—Op. 120, Introduction (Adagio non troppo); Allegro; Romance (Adagio non troppo); Scherzo; Finale (Allegro).

LEADER, Cleveland, O.

Date 5/11

new lights were laid over for future consideration.

FOR THE MUSICIANS.

The Coming Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of National Reputation.

The Attempt to Prevent the Landing of the Strauss Orchestra—Two Cleveland Dates.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which appears at Music Hall on the evening of the 21st inst., is too well known to need introduction. It has made and retained a high national reputation, and the simple announcement that it will appear in a concert is enough to fill the house. Under the management of Mr. Georg Henschel for three years, then under the renowned conductor, Mr. William Gericke, of Vienna, for five, and now under the able conduct of Mr. Arthur Nikish, the Hungarian, it has all along flourished and prospered. It was originally, and is still, composed of the best available players to be found in Boston and New York, and contains representatives from the best schools of Vienna, Paris, Leipsig, Berlin, and London. The concertmeister is the talented Franz Kneisel, and Messrs. C. M. Loeffler and T. Adamowski are members of it, while in every department the orchestra has been brought as near to perfection as possible. In the concert on the 30th, Madame Magdeline Steinbach-Jahns, will appear as solo vocalist. This singer has been for some years the leading dramatic soprano of the Leipsig Opera House, and is said to enjoy the highest favor of the critical Leipsig public.

Clipping from Globe Chicago Ill.

Date 5/11

during the past season, and the time for next season is already nearly filled with a strong line of attractions.

A MUSICAL TREAT.

The Concert to Be Given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The musical event of the coming week will be the concert to be given at Central Music hall on Wednesday evening by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the leadership of Arthur Nikisch. In addition to the seventy members of the orchstra Mmes. Steinback-Jahn, the dramatic soprano, and Bloomfield-Zirsler, the pianiste, will appear as soloists. Of the work of the orchestra the critic of The Philadelphia Inquirer writes as follows:

"It is scarcely probable that the majority of the great audience which attended the concert of the Boston orchestra last evening at the Academy of Music was prepared for the excellence of the entertainment. Audiences here have liberally attended the concerts of the Boston orchestra from its first season. But it has been necessary to praise its work during several seasons, chiefly for the extraordinary power and purity of the string tones. Since Mr. Nikisch replaced the former leader a change, a constantly increasing change, has been manifest at every concert. The orchestra has become better balanced. The tones of wood, wind and brass have been improved. Even the strings, more particularly the violoncellos and violas, have received a softening of tone and delicacy of treatment which they never had before. The bassoons, oboes, flutes and horns were last night, one and all simply delightful."

Tribune Minneapolis, MINN

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

This music-loving community may well congratulate itself upon so important an event in the musical history of the city as the appearance here of the Boston symphony orchestra, at the University Coliseum, next Monday evening. The Boston organization is probably unrivaled in the Western hemisphere, while it has only three or four superiors in Europe. It will be extremely interesting to hear this best orchestra in America in the auditorium that, of all in the country, is best adapted for the purpose. The Coliseum's wonderful sounding-board is quite too infrequently put to a test. The building was constructed with reference to its fitness for great orchestras and choruses, and it has a magnificent stage. As we have said, there is not to be found its like in America. It ought to delight Herr Nikitsch and inspire him and his seventy artistic performers to their grandest efforts.

The Boston orchestra has visited St. Louis several times before, but this will be its first excursion into the Northwest. It should be greeted with an audience worthy of such visitors. The Coliseum is a mammoth structure that will seat somewhere near four thousand people; and the scene next Monday evening will doubtless be a brilliant and memorable one. It is said to be the intention of the management to return to Minneapolis from year to year if the reception on this first visit should justify such plans. Certainly it is for the interest of the city, musically and otherwise, to encourage ... sions of so important a character.

SAINT PAUL.

DAILY GLOBE MAY 13

AT THE COLISEUM.

Rare Music Discoursed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It was an extremely fashionable audience that crowded to the university Coliseum last night to listen to the programme of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and well were they rewarded for the time spent for the journey. The Coliseum is not, in the first place, the auditorium for a musical event of this sort. Such a thing as full dress there last evening would have been out of the question. The Coliseum is not sufficiently well heated for an early spring entertainment, but the acoustic properties of the chamber for a concert partially make up for other defects. That the concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra had been looked forward to with interest was attested by the size of the audience. There were but few seats vacant in the galleries, and more than two-thirds of the orchestra was filled. It was an enthusiastic audience, too, and the way it lavished applause upon the seventy-three performers under the direction of Herr Arthur Nikisch showed that Minneapolitans appreciate classic music, faultlessly rendered. The first number on the programme was the symphonic poem, "Les Preludes," bs Liszt, and well is it called a symphonic poem. It tells as clearly as the most lucid poetry and as sweetly as the most divine music, the preludes to the final dissolution which are passed through by a sensitive spirit. "Les Preludes" is written for full orchestra, and so well is this orchestra trained that the fine shades of meaning in this exquisite piece of music are as delicately shaded as if rendered by a single violin. Mme. Stembach-Jahns sang the page's aria from Meyerbeer's "Huguenots" in a manner that would please the most cultivated ear. She possesses a pure soprano of great range and remarkable power. These qualities, combined with an excellent stage bearing, should make Mme Steinbach-Jahns a brilliant success in grand opera. Later she sang three selections in one number, Schumann's "Widmung," Brahms' "Stændchen," and Umlauft's "Erwartung," rendering a German love song as an encore. These three displayed the various qualities of her voice, and nothing but praise was heard for her. Greig's suite, "Peer Gynt," Op. 46, was probably as enjoyable as any number of the evening. Especially expressive were the second, third and fourth numbers, illustrating the death of Peer Gynt's mother, the dance of Anitra, the Bedouin maid, and the torture of Peer Gynt by the imps, the last a grotesque march. C. M. Loeffler, in Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole," for violin and orchestra, showed himself a master of the violin. But particularization is useless. Too much can scarcely be said of this incomparable body of musicians and of their performance. Each and every number on the programme was rendered with such rare expression, such delicate shadery, that criticism is almost out of the question.

Clipping from Express Buffalo N.Y.

Date 5/25

... vocal novelties.

The throng of people that gathered last Thursday evening at Music Hall to listen to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as directed by Mr. Nikisch, must have decided in their individual minds that conductors, like poets, "are born and not made." Not all the musical knowledge, not all the training, not all the skill of the most accomplished musicians will suffice of themselves to make a good conductor, hence it is that so many, even men of the highest gifts, fail in that one particular line. In Nikisch is found one of those exceptions to the rule, a musician possessed of qualities rarely found in combination and full of a poetical and picturesque feeling for orchestral coloring. This was most evident in the Schumann D minor symphony, in which, with naught but his wonderfully correct memory to guide him, he was fully alive to those delicate shades of tone and expression which are to music what an exquisite form of diction is to the cultivated poet. It was as though the man who wrote the music led this splendid band. Nikisch returned to his own individuality only after the last chord was played.

Clipping from Express Albany, N.Y.

Date 5/14

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra—Notable Events for Next Week.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, assisted by Mme. Steinbach-Jahns and Timothee Adamowski, delighted a large audience in Harmanus Bleecker hall last evening with a concert whose superior has never been heard in Albany. The audience was of the most cultured, and was very much more enthusiastic than Albany audiences are wont to be.

The orchestra itself is a very impressive sight, and its conductor, Arthur Nikisch, is a man of distinguished bearing, whose dignity and gracefully unobtrusive leadership is one of the most fascinating peculiarities of the concerts of this great organization.

The work of the orchestra was faultless in every particular, and detailed description of its performance could be little but reiterated praise. The interpretation of the four movements of Grieg's "Peer Gynt" was probably the most thoroughly appreciated. It is a curious composition, instinct throughout with the wild Norse spirit, and the last movement the chase of the imps, after Peer Gynt, was encored and repeated by the orchestra.

Mme. Steinbach-Jahns is a magnificent appearing woman, of splendid figure and queenly bearing, and her singing was applauded till the building fairly shook. She was most becomingly dressed in pink, with her dark hair parted in the middle and drawn loosely down on either side. Her voice is deliciously clear and strong and pure, and her performance was most delightful.

Timothee Adamowski is no stranger to Albany's musical audiences, and his playing was better than ever. His rendering of the two movements from the Saint-Saens violin concerto was a most artistic performance, characterized by rare delicacy of execution and purity of tone. He was rapturously applauded.

The concert throughout was most satisfactory, and the probability that the orchestra will be secured for a series of concerts next winter will awaken great interest and enthusiasm. The programme of the concert is given in full:

Liszt.....Symphonic poem, "Les Preludes"
Mozart.....Aria, "Thou May'st Learn to Hate Me," from "Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail."
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Saint-Saens.....Two movements from Concerto for Violin, in B minor, No. 3, Op. 61.
Andante quasi allegretto.
Molto moderato e maestoso; allegro non troppo.
Timothee Adamowski.
Grieg.....Suite, "Peer Gynt," Op. 46
"Daybreak."
"The Death of Aase."
"Anitra's Dance."
"In the Halls of the King of the Dovre Mountains."
(The imps are chasing Peer Gynt.)
Songs with piano.
(a) Rubinstein.....("Es blinkt der Thau"
(b) Liszt.....("Liebeslust"
(c) Umlauft.....("Erwartung"
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Beethoven.....Symphony No. 5, in C minor
Allegro con brio.
Andante con moto.
Allegro (Scherzo).
Allegro (Finale).

The presence of the redoubtable Indian chief, "Thorn-in-his-eye," in the "Wild West" and Forepaugh establishment lends additional ... incident

[154]

News, St. Paul, Minn.

Date 5/11

Rev. Dr. Forbes will preach ... Hamline at 10:30 a. m., and in Wesley Chapel at 7:30 p. m.

THE GREAT MUSICAL EVENT.

Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the People's Church.

The day is rapidly approaching when the great Boston Symphony Orchestra will be here. Tuesday next will find the People's Church filled to the doors to welcome the debut in this city of the greatest orchestral organization in the United States. The Western tour this season has been almost phenomenal—audiences of 3,000 people greeted the orchestra in Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore and Cincinnati. The enthusiasm has in every city ran high, amounting in many instances to ovations. The orchestra comes from St. Louis tomorrow by special train, seventy strong, arriving at the Ryan Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock.

The conductor, Mr. Nikisch, has been most enthusiastically received everywhere. When one considers that Nikisch directs everything without notes or stand before him, one realizes how remarkable a director he is.

Mme. Stembach-Jahns, the dramatic soprano, prima donna of Leipsig, has made a tremendous success. In Cincinnati encores, flowers and shouts were in order at the conclusion of her numbers.

The St. Paul programme is one of the most popular ever played by the orchestra, and contains some of the masterpieces of orchestral work. It is as follows:

Wagner—Overture.....Tannhauser
Wagner—Aria, O Lovely Halls —Tannhauser
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Saint-Saens—Two movements from Concerto for Violin, in B minor, No. 3, Op. 61.
Andante quasi allegretto.
Molto moderato e maestoso; Allegro non troppo.
Mr. Timothee Adamowski.
Grieg.....Suite, Peer Gynt, Op. 46
Daybreak.
The Death of Aase.
Anitra's Dance.
In the Halls of the King of the Dovre Mountains.
(The imps are chasing Peer Gynt.
Songs With Piano.
Rubinstein.....Es blinkt der Thau
Sommer.....Lullaby
Goldmark.....Die Quelle
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Mendelssohn...Symphony in A (Italian)
Allegro vivace.
Andante con moto.
Con moto moderato.
Saltarello.

Pion[illegible], St. Paul, Minn

Date 5/11

MINNEAPOLIS MUSICAL MENTION.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra To-morrow Night—Musical Events Announced.

The event of the week, in fact of the season, is the concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, which is to be given at the Coliseum to-morrow evening. It is scarcely necessary to add to the comments which have been printed from time to time concerning this entertainment. The rank which this orchestra sustains, among the best not only in America but the world, is a sufficient assurance of its excellence. Madame Steinbach-Jahns, the soprano who accompanies them, while less well known in this country, has made an excellent impression during her short stay, and the Eastern press unite in praising her. The company will arrive in Minneapolis from St. Louis this evening and will register at the West. The Coliseum is in readiness for the concert, and the music will be heard to the best possible advantage. If the concert is a success financially, and there is every indication that it will be, the orchestra promises to pay Minneapolis an annual visit.

The following is the programme for the concert:

Liszt.....Symphonic Poem, "Les Preludes"
Meyerbeer.....Pages' Aria from "Les Huguenots"
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Lalo.....Symphonic espagnole for violin and orchestra—Op. 21. (a) Allegro non troppo. (b) Scherzando. (c) Andante. (d) Rondo.
Herr C. M. Loeffler.
Grieg.....Suite, "Peer Gynt"—Op. 46. "Day Break," "The Death of Aase," "Anitra's Dance," "In the Halls of the King of the Dovre Mountains."
Songs, with piano.....(a) Liszt—"O, Lieb." (b) Schubert—"Du bist die Ruh." (c) Grieg—"Hoffnung."
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Schumann.....Symphony No. 4, in D minor—Op. 120, Introduction (Adagio non troppo); Allegro; Romance (Adagio non troppo); Scherzo; Finale (Allegro).

LEADER, Cleveland, O.

Date 5/11

new lights were laid over for future consideration.

FOR THE MUSICIANS.

The Coming Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of National Reputation.

The Attempt to Prevent the Landing of the Strauss Orchestra—Two Cleveland Dates.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which appears at Music Hall on the evening of the 21st inst., is too well known to need introduction. It has made and retained a high national reputation, and the simple announcement that it will appear in a concert is enough to fill the house. Under the management of Mr. Georg Henschel for three years, then under the renowned conductor, Mr. William Gericke, of Vienna, for five, and now under the able conduct of Mr. Arthur Nikish, the Hungarian, it has all along flourished and prospered. It was originally, and is still, composed of the best available players to be found in Boston and New York, and contains representatives from the best schools of Vienna, Paris, Leipsig, Berlin, and London. The concertmeister is the talented Franz Kneisel, and Messrs. C. M. Loeffler and T. Adamowski are members of it, while in every department the orchestra has been brought as near to perfection as possible. In the concert on the 30th, Madame Magdeline Steinbach-Jahns, will appear as solo vocalist. This singer has been for some years the leading dramatic soprano of the Leipsig Opera House, and is said to enjoy the highest favor of the critical Leipsig public.

Clipping from Globe Chicago Ill.

Date 5/11

during the past season, and the time for next season is already nearly filled with a strong line of attractions.

A MUSICAL TREAT.

The Concert to Be Given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The musical event of the coming week will be the concert to be given at Central Music hall on Wednesday evening by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the leadership of Arthur Nikisch. In addition to the seventy members of the orchstra Mmes. Steinback-Jahn, the dramatic soprano, and Bloomfield-Zirsler, the pianiste, will appear as soloists. Of the work of the orchestra the critic of The Philadelphia Inquirer writes as follows:

"It is scarcely probable that the majority of the great audience which attended the concert of the Boston orchestra last evening at the Academy of Music was prepared for the excellence of the entertainment. Audiences here have liberally attended the concerts of the Boston orchestra from its first season. But it has been necessary to praise its work during several seasons, chiefly for the extraordinary power and purity of the string tones. Since Mr. Nikisch replaced the former leader a change, a constantly increasing change, has been manifest at every concert. The orchestra has become better balanced. The tones of wood, wind and brass have been improved. Even the strings, more particularly the violoncellos and violas, have received a softening of tone and delicacy of treatment which they never had before. The bassoons, oboes, flutes and horns were last night, one and all simply delightful."

Tribune Minneapolis, MINN

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

This music-loving community may well congratulate itself upon so important an event in the musical history of the city as the appearance here of the Boston symphony orchestra, at the University Coliseum, next Monday evening. The Boston organization is probably unrivaled in the Western hemisphere, while it has only three or four superiors in Europe. It will be extremely interesting to hear this best orchestra in America in the auditorium that, of all in the country, is best adapted for the purpose. The Coliseum's wonderful sounding-board is quite too infrequently put to a test. The building was constructed with reference to its fitness for great orchestras and choruses, and it has a magnificent stage. As we have said, there is not to be found its like in America. It ought to delight Herr Nikitsch and inspire him and his seventy artistic performers to their grandest efforts.

The Boston orchestra has visited St. Louis several times before, but this will be its first excursion into the Northwest. It should be greeted with an audience worthy of such visitors. The Coliseum is a mammoth structure that will seat somewhere near four thousand people; and the scene next Monday evening will doubtless be a brilliant and memorable one. It is said to be the intention of the management to return to Minneapolis from year to year if the reception on this first visit should justify such plans. Certainly it is for the interest of the city, musically and otherwise, to encourage ventures of so important a character.

SAINT PAUL.

DAILY GLOBE MAY 13.

AT THE COLISEUM.

Rare Music Discoursed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It was an extremely fashionable audience that crowded to the university Coliseum last night to listen to the programme of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and well were they rewarded for the time spent for the journey. The Coliseum is not, in the first place, the auditorium for a musical event of this sort. Such a thing as full dress there last evening would have been out of the question. The Coliseum is not sufficiently well heated for an early spring entertainment, but the acoustic properties of the chamber for a concert partially make up for other defects. That the concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra had been looked forward to with interest was attested by the size of the audience. There were but few seats vacant in the galleries, and more than two-thirds of the orchestra was filled. It was an enthusiastic audience, too, and the way it lavished applause upon the seventy-three performers under the direction of Herr Arthur Nikisch showed that Minneapolitans appreciate classic music, faultlessly rendered. The first number on the programme was the symphonic poem, "Les Preludes," bs Liszt, and well is it called a symphonic poem. It tells as clearly as the most lucid poetry and as sweetly as the most divine music, the preludes to the final dissolution which are passed through by a sensitive spirit. "Les Preludes" is written for full orchestra, and so well is this orchestra trained that the fine shades of meaning in this exquisite piece of music are as delicately shaded as if rendered by a single violin. Mme. Steinbach-Jahns sang the page's aria from Meyerbeer's "Huguenots" in a manner that would please the most cultivated ear. She possesses a pure soprano of great range and remarkable power. These qualities, combined with an excellent stage bearing, should make Mme Steinbach-Jahns a brilliant success in grand opera. Later she sang three selections in one number, Schumann's "Widmung," Brahms' "Stændchen," and Umlauft's "Erwartung," rendering a German love song as an encore. These three displayed the various qualities of her voice, and nothing but praise was heard for her. Greig's suite, "Peer Gynt," Op. 46, was probably as enjoyable as any number of the evening. Especially expressive were the second, third and fourth numbers, illustrating the death of Peer Gynt's mother, the dance of Anitra, the Bedouin maid, and the torture of Peer Gynt by the imps, the last a grotesque march. C. M. Loeffler, in Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole," for violin and orchestra, showed himself a master of the violin. But particularization is useless. Too much can scarcely be said of this incomparable body of musicians and of their performance. Each and every number on the programme was rendered with such rare expression, such delicate shadery, that criticism is almost out of the question.

Clipping from Courier Buffalo N.Y.

Date 5 9

[illegible] vocal novelties.

The throng of people that gathered last Thursday evening at Music Hall to listen to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as directed by Mr. Nikisch, must have decided in their individual minds that conductors, like poets, "are born and not made." Not all the musical knowledge, not all the training, not all the skill of the most accomplished musicians will suffice of themselves to make a good conductor, hence it is that so many, even men of the highest gifts, fail in that one particular line. In Nikisch is found one of those exceptions to the rule, a musician possessed of qualities rarely found in combination and full of a poetical and picturesque feeling for orchestral coloring. This was most evident in the Schumann D minor symphony, in which, with naught but his wonderfully correct memory to guide him, he was fully alive to those delicate shades of tone and expression which are to music what an exquisite form of diction is to the cultivated poet. It was as though the man who wrote the music led this splendid band. Nikisch returned to his own individuality only after the last chord was played.

Clipping from Express Albany, N.Y.

Date 5/14

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra—Notable Events for Next Week.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, assisted by Mme. Steinbach-Jahns and Timothee Adamowski, delighted a large audience in Harmanus Bleecker hall last evening with a concert whose superior has never been heard in Albany. The audience was of the most cultured, and was very much more enthusiastic than Albany audiences are wont to be.

The orchestra itself is a very impressive sight, and its conductor, Arthur Nikisch, is a man of distinguished bearing, whose dignity and gracefully unobtrusive leadership is one of the most fascinating peculiarities of the concerts of this great organization.

The work of the orchestra was faultless in every particular, and detailed description of its performance could be little but reiterated praise. The interpretation of the four movements of Grieg's "Peer Gynt" was probably the most thoroughly appreciated. It is a curious composition, instinct throughout with the wild Norse spirit, and the last movement the chase of the imps, after Peer Gynt, was encored and repeated by the orchestra.

Mme. Steinbach-Jahns is a magnificent appearing woman, of splendid figure and queenly bearing, and her singing was applauded till the building fairly shook. She was most becomingly dressed in pink, with her dark hair parted in the middle and drawn loosely down on either side. Her voice is deliciously clear and strong and pure, and her performance was most delightful.

Timothee Adamowski is no stranger to Albany's musical audiences, and his playing was better than ever. His rendering of the two movements from the Saint-Saens violin concerto was a most artistic performance, characterized by rare delicacy of execution and purity of tone. He was rapturously applauded.

The concert throughout was most satisfactory, and the probability that the orchestra will be secured for a series of concerts next winter will awaken great interest and enthusiasm. The programme of the concert is given in full:

Liszt.....Symphonic poem, "Les Preludes"
Mozart.....Aria, "Thou May'st Learn to Hate Me," from "Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail."
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Saint-Saens.....Two movements from Concerto for Violin, in B minor, No. 3, Op. 61.
Andante quasi allegretto.
Molto moderato e maestoso; allegro non troppo.
Timothee Adamowski.
Grieg.....Suite, "Peer Gynt," Op. 46
"Daybreak."
"The Death of Aase."
"Anitra's Dance."
"In the Halls of the King of the Dovre Mountains."
(The imps are chasing Peer Gynt.)
Songs with piano.
(a) Rubinstein.....("Es blinkt der Thau"
(b) Liszt.....("Liebeslust"
(c) Umlauft.....("Erwartung"
Mme. Steinbach-Jahns.
Beethoven.....Symphony No. 5, in C minor
Allegro con brio.
Andante con moto.
Allegro (Scherzo).
Allegro (Finale).

The presence of the redoubtable Indian chief, "Thorn-in-his-eye," in the "Wild West" and Forepaugh establishment lends additional [illegible] thrilling incidents

[154]

HERMANN EMIL ZOCH,
PIANIST.
Century Piano and Organ Building.

A. W. PORTER,
Solo Baritone and Teacher of Singing. Voice Placing a Specialty.
STUDIO, ROOM 55 EASTMAN BLOCK.

FANNY McLEOD,
Teacher of Voice Culture in its Fullest Development. Particular Attention Paid to Young Voices.
STUDIO AT DYER BRO.'S MUSIC HALL.

MISS FLORENCE LILLIE.
Classes in Oil, China, and Water Colors.
Studio, 608 Nicollet Ave., Room 622 Kenyon Block, MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.

HEINRICH HOEVEL,
CONCERT VIOLINIST.
And Instructor for Private Pupils and Ensemble Playing.
DYER MUSIC STORE.
511 Nicollet Avenue, Minneapolis.

WILLIAM H. CLARKE,
VOICE AND PIANO.
ROOM 6, DYER MUSIC HALL,
511 Nicollet Avenue, - - Minneapolis.

WILLARD PATTEN,
Teaches Voice Culture, Solo, and Quartette Singing. Training to Clubs and Choruses.
511 NICOLLET AVENUE, MINNEAPOLIS.

THE STANDARD PIANOS OF THE WORLD.

STEINWAY & SONS.

Grand Pianos and Upright Pianos,

IN FANCY WOODS AND IN GREAT VARIETY.

W. J. DYER & BRO.,

SYNDICATE · BLOCK,

Now have on exhibition an elegant assortment of these unrivaled instruments, which are the recognized Standard Pianos of the world, pre-eminently the best instruments at present made, exported to and sold in all centers of the globe, prefered for private and public by the greatest living artists, and endorsed, among hundreds of others, by such as:

RICHARD WAGNER, FRANZ LISZT, CAMILLE SAINT-SAENS, CHARLES GOUNOD, ANTON RUBINSTEIN, RAFAEL JOSEFFY, ALFRED JAELL, THEODORE THOMAS, ANTON SEIDL, WILLIAM MASON, STEPHEN HELLER, W. TAUBERT,

AND BY MESDAMES

ANNETTE ESSIPOFF, ANNA MEHLIG, ADELE AUS DER OHE, ADELINA PATTI, EMMA JUCH. etc.

ALSO SOLE AGENTS FOR THE OTHER LEADING PIANOS, INCLUDING

Chickering, Ivers & Pond, Gabler, Etc.

Wholesale and Retail Dealers and Importers,
MUSICAL MERCHANDISE,
IN GREAT VARIETY, AT ALL PRICES.
SHEET MUSIC AND BOOKS
FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

OUR PRICES ARE THE LOWEST POSSIBLE FOR THE BEST WORKMANSHIP.
TERMS
EXTREMELY FAVORABLE.
EASY PAYMENTS WHEN DESIRED.

W. J. DYER & BRO.,

Minneapolis. St. Paul.

The Sun.

SATURDAY, JUNE 21, 1890.

The Progress of Temperance in Boston.

The cause of temperance in Boston continues to go forward or backslide, according to the point of view. There seems to be some evidence that the Boston ordinance for sedentary drinking was a stroke of genius, after all. Some of the police officers say that there is less drunkenness than under the stand-up-at-the-bar system; and it is said that the number of arrests for drunkenness has been diminished. By taking a cracker with their cocktails the Bostonians escape the dangers that environ drinking on an empty stomach, and perhaps the habit of calm and leisurely imbibition has been promoted by the new plan. An orderly and well-digesting fashion of philosophical compotation may have taken the place of the rash and feverish tossing off of bumpers at the bar. Apparently the Bostonian either drinks less or can hold more than formerly.

The refusal of the Police Commissioners to issue a license to the managers of the Music Hall summer concerts is another step in the evolution of temperance in Boston. These concerts have been given for a number of summers past by an orchestra of superior merit. Many of the members of the famous Symphony orchestra played at the Music Hall. The programmes were good, and the audiences were highly respectable. Even the Boston swell, the loftiest of his species, didn't disdain the concerts, and women high up in IBSEN used to resort to them. The amount of beer and wine consumed was not great, as the Bostonians are before everything economical in regard to personal luxuries; but you could get a drink with your music if you wanted to. Visitors from New York were perhaps more impressed by the solemn hush which prevailed while the orchestra played than by any evidence of enjoyment on the part of the audience. Although the Great Organ was there no more, you vaguely suspected that its ghost haunted the spot and poured majestic remonstrance from the shadowy big pipes. If you were a mere frivolous stranger, familiar with the customs of foreign concert gardens and music halls, and dared to attempt to converse while the orchestra was at work, you were frowned down and taught that you had not come there for conversation, but for deep and reverential audience of blown brass and sighing strings. There sat the "best people" of Boston, looking self-conscious and as if their whole souls were concentrated in wondering whether their collars were unbuttoned. In other words, they were happy in their way.

To this music and decorous festivity the Police Commissioners of Boston have put an end. Why did they do it? Are they cranks, like certain good people in this town who fancy that sin and danger lurk in beer drunk with music? We should really know why the Music Hall concerts have been abolished. What can a chap do who has to pass a summer evening in Boston?

TWENTY-FOUR PAGES.

SUNDAY, JUNE 29, 1890.

—In the absence of the Music Hall "Pops," for which cruel loss we shall never cease to grieve, the stay-at-home contingent will have the Oakland Garden to resort to after tonight, when Mr. Barnum's great spectacle, the "Fall of Babylon," will be given with splendid effects. Several of the private boxes, which the management has thoughtfully provided, have been engaged for this, the opening week, by a number of suburban society people, who are making up parties to attend the show. It will be well worth seeing.

THE CHILDREN'S VICTORY.

A BOTTLED-UP POLICE BOARD.

Our odious State Police Board has been completely bottled-up for the Glorious Fourth, and its ridiculous fireworks order along with it. What with its revival of the old sit-down-to-take-a-drink law, its persecution of the marketmen and sidewalk venders generally, its stupid refusal of a license to the Popular Concerts, and its raid on the annual celebration of the Fourth, the tyrannical trio of Pemberton Square have about used up the patience of the people. Thanks to the persistence of The Globe and the grit shown by Mayor Hart, however, they are side-tracked for this week, and our boys and girls can get ready to "let her go" with more than ordinary enthusiasm.

Republican, Springfield Mass

Date 7/11 July 9.

We have realized, too, this week more than ever before, our loss of the promenade concerts in Music hall. That popular and pleasing feature of past years would have been doubly welcome this week, and the protests against the policy of the police commission in not granting the necessary license has been renewed with an emphasis that must grate harshly on the sensibilities of that much-abused board. Hope has for the moment been revived that the license must yet be forthcoming in view of the latest reports of our population, under which it is estimated that nearly 100 more licenses can be issued this year, but there is little prospect that it will amount to anything. The granting of the new licenses—if indeed they can be given—must await the receipt of the official returns from Washington, and even if those should be immediately forthcoming, it is hardly probable that the Music hall management would care to open the concerts at so late a date, and with the musicians scattered over the country almost all out of recall. Indeed, the managers of the concerts in past years do not appear to have taken the slight so much at heart as has the public. The former have very little to say about the matter, either in public or in private, but the ordinary citizen who goes up and down our streets seeing saloons in full blast, which cater simply to the greed of one man and the thirst of others, can hardly be blamed for the feeling that one of these resorts might have been cut off in favor of the music-loving public which has been wont to resort to Music hall for a few weeks in the summer.

Boston Symphony Orchestra,

Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

PROGRAMME

Overture,	"Penthesilea,"	GOLDMARK.
Air and Variations,		RODE.
Miss FRANKLIN.
Variations on the Austrian National Hymn,		HAYDN.
Symphonic Poem,	"Phaeton,"	SAINT-SAENS.
Introduction to Act III.,
Dance of the Apprentices,	from "Die Meistersinger,"
Procession of the Masters,
Homage to Hans Sachs,		WAGNER.
Waltz Song,	from "Romeo and Juliet,"	GOUNOD.
Miss FRANKLIN.
Largo,		HANDEL.
L' Arlesienne, No. 2,		BIZET.
Hungarian Rhapsody, No. I,		LISZT.

Soloist,

Miss GERTRUDE FRANKLIN.

[156]

The Sun.

SATURDAY, JUNE 21, 1890.

The Progress of Temperance in Boston.

The cause of temperance in Boston continues to go forward or backslide, according to the point of view. There seems to be some evidence that the Boston ordinance for sedentary drinking was a stroke of genius, after all. Some of the police officers say that there is less drunkenness than under the stand-up-at-the-bar system; and it is said that the number of arrests for drunkenness has been diminished. By taking a cracker with their cocktails the Bostonians escape the dangers that environ drinking on an empty stomach, and perhaps the habit of calm and leisurely imbibition has been promoted by the new plan. An orderly and well-digesting fashion of philosophical compotation may have taken the place of the rash and feverish tossing off of bumpers at the bar. Apparently the Bostonian either drinks less or can hold more than formerly.

The refusal of the Police Commissioners to issue a license to the managers of the Music Hall summer concerts is another step in the evolution of temperance in Boston. These concerts have been given for a number of summers past by an orchestra of superior merit. Many of the members of the famous Symphony orchestra played at the Music Hall. The programmes were good, and the audiences were highly respectable. Even the Boston swell, the loftiest of his species, didn't disdain the concerts, and women high up in IBSEN used to resort to them. The amount of beer and wine consumed was not great, as the Bostonians are before everything economical in regard to personal luxuries; but you could get a drink with your music if you wanted to. Visitors from New York were perhaps more impressed by the solemn hush which prevailed while the orchestra played than by any evidence of enjoyment on the part of the audience. Although the Great Organ was there no more, you vaguely suspected that its ghost haunted the spot and poured majestic remonstrance from the shadowy big pipes. If you were a mere frivolous stranger, familiar with the customs of foreign concert gardens and music halls, and dared to attempt to converse while the orchestra was at work, you were frowned down and taught that you had not come there for conversation, but for deep and reverential audience of blown brass and sighing strings. There sat the "best people" of Boston, looking self-conscious and as if their whole souls were concentrated in wondering whether their collars were unbuttoned. In other words, they were happy in their way.

To this music and decorous festivity the Police Commissioners of Boston have put an end. Why did they do it? Are they cranks, like certain good people in this town who fancy that sin and danger lurk in beer drunk with music? We should really know why the Music Hall concerts have been abolished. What can a chap do who has to pass a summer evening in Boston?

Republican, Springfield Mass

Date 7/11 July 9.

We have realized, too, this week more than ever before, our loss of the promenade concerts in Music hall. That popular and pleasing feature of past years would have been doubly welcome this week, and the protests against the policy of the police commission in not granting the necessary license has been renewed with an emphasis that must grate harshly on the sensibilities of that much-abused board. Hope has for the moment been revived that the license must yet be forthcoming in view of the latest reports of our population, under which it is estimated that nearly 100 more licenses can be issued this year, but there is little prospect that it will amount to anything. The granting of the new licenses—if indeed they can be given—must await the receipt of the official returns from Washington, and even if those should be immediately forthcoming, it is hardly probable that the Music hall management would care to open the concerts at so late a date, and with the musicians scattered over the country almost all out of recall. Indeed, the managers of the concerts in past years do not appear to have taken the slight so much at heart as has the public. The former have very little to say about the matter, either in public or in private, but the ordinary citizen who goes up and down our streets seeing saloons in full blast, which cater simply to the greed of one man and the thirst of others, can hardly be blamed for the feeling that one of these resorts might have been cut off in favor of the music-loving public which has been wont to resort to Music hall for a few weeks in the summer.

Boston Sunday Globe.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGES.

SUNDAY, JUNE 29, 1890.

—In the absence of the Music Hall "Pops," for which cruel loss we shall never cease to grieve, the stay-at-home contingent will have the Oakland Garden to resort to after tonight, when Mr. Barnum's great spectacle, the "Fall of Babylon," will be given with splendid effects. Several of the private boxes, which the management has thoughtfully provided, have been engaged for this, the opening week, by a number of suburban society people, who are making up parties to attend the show. It will be well worth seeing.

THE CHILDREN'S VICTORY.

A BOTTLED-UP POLICE BOARD.

Our odious State Police Board has been completely bottled-up for the Glorious Fourth, and its ridiculous fireworks order along with it. What with its revival of the old sit-down-to-take-a-drink law, its persecution of the marketmen and sidewalk venders generally, its stupid refusal of a license to the Popular Concerts, and its raid on the annual celebration of the Fourth, the tyrannical trio of Pemberton Square have about used up the patience of the people. Thanks to the persistence of The Globe and the grit shown by Mayor Hart, however, they are side-tracked for this week, and our boys and girls can get ready to "let her go" with more than ordinary enthusiasm.

Boston Symphony Orchestra,

Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

Overture, - "Penthesilea," GOLDMARK.

Air and Variations, RODE.

Miss FRANKLIN.

Variations on the Austrian National Hymn, HAYDN.

Symphonic Poem, - "Phaeton," SAINT-SAENS.

Introduction to Act III.,
Dance of the Apprentices,
Procession of the Masters,
Homage to Hans Sachs, from "Die Meistersinger," WAGNER.

Waltz Song, from "Romeo and Juliet," GOUNOD.

Miss FRANKLIN.

Largo, HANDEL.

L' Arlesienne, No. 2, BIZET.

Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 1, LISZT.

Soloist,

Miss GERTRUDE FRANKLIN.

[156]

1890.

The Fourth Annual Tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Sunday evening, April 27, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, seventy performers,—Mr. Arthur Nikisch, conductor, accompanied by Mme. Steinbach-Jahns, dramatic soprano from the Leipzig Opera House,—will start via the Fall River Line on their Western tournée. Monday evening, April 28, the final concert in the series of five given at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, will be the initial concert of the trip. The following night, a similar series in Baltimore will be closed. Then come two concerts in Washington,—the first by the orchestra alone, closing a series of five, the second with the Washington Choral Society, when Dudley Buck's "Light of Asia" will be given. On Friday and Saturday, May 2 and 3, the orchestra will make its first appearance in Richmond, Va., under the auspices of the Mozart Association. Then comes a long jump to Columbus, Ohio, where the orchestra gives a single performance, on Monday evening, May 5, under the auspices of the Orpheus Club, the leading vocal organization of the city. From Columbus, the orchestra goes to Cincinnati, giving two concerts on Tuesday and Wednesday. A single concert in Louisville, Ky., on Thursday, May 8, under the management of Daniel Quilp, in his beautiful amphitheatre auditorium, will be one of the musical events of the season in a city always quick to recognize and appreciate standard organizations. Then follow two concerts in the Grand Music Hall, St. Louis, on Friday and Saturday, May 9 and 10. Directly after the concert on Saturday, a special train of three sleeping-cars will convey the orchestra to Minneapolis for one concert, on Monday evening, May 12, in the University Coliseum, under the management of Mr. Louis Miller, to whom is due the credit of introducing this famous organization to Minneapolis. On Tuesday, May 13, the orchestra makes its début in St. Paul, under the direction of Mr. E. C. Murdock, manager of the Star Course and associated with nearly every first-class organization visiting St. Paul. A special train will take the orchestra from St. Paul to Chicago, where but a single concert will be given in Central Music Hall, on Wednesday evening, May 14. From Chicago, the organization goes to Milwaukee for a concert under the auspices of the Arion Club, with which society the orchestra appeared last season. The next objective point is Ann Arbor, Mich., where the University Musical Society undertakes the concert on Friday, May 16, as a grand finale to a series of four entertainments under the personal direction of Prof. A. A. Stanley. On Saturday evening, May 17, a single concert will be given in Detroit; and directly after the concert the orchestra goes by steamer across Lake Erie to Cleveland, then on to Pittsburg for two concerts in connection with the Mozart Club, Monday and Tuesday, May 19 and 20, presenting on the second night Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise." From Pittsburg back to Cleveland for one concert on Wednesday evening, May 21, under the management of Mr. N. Coe Stewart, director of music in the public schools. Buffalo has a concert on Thursday, the 22d, and Albany on Friday, the 23d. It may be of interest to know that, in the entire four weeks, sleeping-cars are used only on seven nights, when special train service is also necessary. There seems to be no reason why this celebrated orchestra should not achieve abroad the same signal success that attends the Boston concerts, the advance indications already assuring full houses and presumably enthusiastic receptions.

BOSTON MUSIC HALL BULLETIN

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, Music Hall.

BOSTON, FRIDAY, AUGUST 24, 1888.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. III. No. 80.

S. S. P. & CO.

GUINNESS' STOUT
—AND—
BASS' ALE.

FOSTER'S BOTTLING,
DOG'S HEAD and
WHITE LABEL.

S. S. PIERCE & CO.

Importers and Grocers,

Scollay Square. Copley Square.

209 and 211 State St.

W. T. VAN NOSTRAND & CO.

Crystal Lake Brewery,

BOSTON - - - - MASS.

Established 1821.

P. B. Stock, Old Musty Ale,

And STOUT PORTER

In Wood and Bottles, also Half and Half in Bottles. Order by Telephone 868.

Sold by Wine Dealers, Grocers, and Apothecaries.

SUMMER SEASON OF 1888.

THE MUSIC HALL
Promenade Concerts.

FOURTH SEASON

Mr. AD. NEUENDORFF, Conductor.

C. A. ELLIS - - - - - - - - - - Manager.

PROGRAMME FOR THIS EVENING.

FROM 8 TO 11.

GEORGINE VON JANUSCHOWSKY, Soloist.

1. MARCH AND CORTEGE . . . . . GOUNOD
2. OVERTURE ("Hans Heiling") . . . . . MARSCHNER
3. WALTZ ("Schatz") . . . . . STRAUSS
4. ARIA (from "Mignon") . . . . . A. THOMAS

GEORGINE VON JANUSCHOWSKY.

5. OVERTURE ("Rienzi") . . . . . WAGNER
6. a. NOCTURNE . . . . . DVORAK
   b. LIEBESLIEDCHEN (from "The Tempest") . . . TAUBERT
7. WALTZ SONG ("Where the orange blooms") . . . STRAUSS

GEORGINE VON JANUSCHOWSKY.

8. SCENES ALSACIENNES . . . . . MASSENET
   a. Sunday Morning. b. At the Inn.
   c. Under the Linden Tree. d. Sunday Evening.
9. OVERTURE ("Tantalusqualen") . . . . . SUPPE
10. POLKA CANTABILE ("The Daisy") . . . . . ARDITI

GEORGINE VON JANUSCHOWSKY.

11. BRIDAL PROCESSION ("Lohengrin") . . . . . WAGNER
12. GALOP ("Avec Plaisir") . . . . . STRAUSS

*The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during this number.

Tickets now ready for Wednesday, Aug. 29. First "Grand Operatic Night."
JANUSCHOWSKY and CAMPANARI in Solos and Duets.

THE PIANOFORTE USED IS A CHICKERING.

The Programme for to-morrow Evening appears on Page III.

SCHMIDT'S

Music Store,

18 WEST STREET

N. B. — All music performed at these Concerts in stock, generally in the well-known cheap editions.

LET US GO TO PARK'S,

Bosworth St., near Horticultural Hall, opposite the burying ground, and have a Brace of English Chops, a nice dish of ~~Snipe, Peep, Plover~~ or a Broiled Live Lobster, with a Mug of the Famous Musty Ale, and by the by this Ale is not sold by any other firm in Boston, even if it is so advertised.

F. Thomas

Ice Cream Soda

A SPECIALTY.

Pure Fruit Syrups,

Fine Bon Bons and Chocolates

487 Washington St. and 65 Temple Place

LOUIS ROEDERER · CREAMING · STATES · UNITED · Champagne

FOR SALE BY THE LEADING WINE MERCHANTS AND GROCERS.

Smoke DANIEL FRANK & CO.'s ORIGINAL N S. CIGARS. NONE GENUINE BUT THOSE STAMPED N S. ONLY.

If you contemplate purchasing DIAMONDS or other precious STONES, a visit to our office will satisfy you that it is

Boston Music Hall Bulletin

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING

DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.

The advertising columns in the "Bulletin" are controlled SOLELY by Carl G. Zerrahn, 257 Washington Street. Room 6, to whom all communications should be addressed, and who will be pleased to furnish rates upon application.

Mr. George H. Adams is authorized to receive advertisements for this programme.

CARL G. ZERRAHN.

PRESS OF ALFRED MUDGE & SON.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

For the Fisherman — Castanet.
For the Lawyer — Lyre.
For the Politician — Organ.
For the Whist Player — Trumpet.
For the Horse-Jockey — Hautboy.
For the Toper — Horn.
For the Laundress — Flute.
For the Pawnbroker — Jewsharp. — Life.

HERE is how it looked in the programme book: "From mighty kings he took the spoil, And with his acts made Judah smile." And this is about the way it sounded after the singer had put her dramatic soul into it: "Fro miyilyiyte kang ze toohoowoohoowoohook th spoioioioil an' we thees ax mad Judah smiyiehismiyeihismiyehile." — Cincinnati News Journal.

AT THE BOSTON SYMPHONY. — Miss Sonata (to Western escort) — "Do you know Wagner, Mr. Hamlard?"

Mr. Hamlard — "No; but I am well acquainted with Pullman. He lives in Chicago, you know." — Life.

"Is there going to be any music at the church festival to-night?" asked Snooks of the pastor.

"I do not know," responded that dignitary, who had been many times snubbed by the leader, "I do not know, — but the choir will sing!"

He (turning the music) — "Ah, Miss Chestah, I was weading this mawning that a man in Dwesden, Saxony, had invented a thing faw turning music leaves, don't you know."

She — "Ah, indeed? I wonder if it will be any improvement on the things we have to turn them now, Mr. Peanut?"

He (innocently) — "Weally, Miss Chestah, I cawnt say, don't you know, I have nevah seen them." — Washington Critic.

Miss Begonia — "I love music. Do you play on any instrument, Mr. Smith?"

Smith (who acted as college waiter last summer, absent mindedly) — "Only the gong."

AN AMATEUR.

She took the note, and at a bound
Y-ravished the regions round.
Some refuge on the roof-tops found,
Some hunted holes within the ground,
Some fell into a deadly swound,
While she did pound and pound and pound
The poor piano.

And still she bawled and bawled and bawled,
And most incontinently mauled
The master's music till, appalled
And gored unto the soul and galled,
Deep down in caves the cities crawled
And stayed there till the angels called
That sweet soprano.

St. Peter — "Do you want to get in?"
Applicant — "If you please."
St. Peter — "Do you think you are fit to go in?"
Applicant (hesitatingly) — "Well, I'm not much of a singer."
St. Peter — "Oh, that doesn't matter; we have a paid choir here to do the singing. Go right in." — Courier.

Now Open, 9 a. m. to 10 p. m., 401 Tremont St., near the Bridge.

J. C. GERLACH,

Sole N. E. Agent for the

Bartholomay Brewing Co.'s

CELEBRATED

ROCHESTER LAGER BEER.

Bottled for hotel and family use. Delivered free to any part of the city. This Beer is supplied to the patrons of these Concerts.

Also, Sole Agent of the RHENS NATURAL MINERAL WATER.

361 Atlantic Avenue and 22 Purchase Street.

Ritz

Photographic Portraiture.

Only those studios which pursue an all-the-year-round policy of lowest prices have the public confidence, and enjoy a steady and increasing patronage. Everybody knows that RITZ is the chief champion of steady, unsensational prices. No wonder, then, that all seasons find us equally busy, no spurts, no sacrifices in prices, but lowest prices always for the very best work. Active specialties now are the Boudoir, Elite and Panel sizes of Photographs, adapted for either large, splendidly retouched and finished heads or full figures of children or ladies in bridal or party dresses.

Our old and original system of securing best Cabinet Photographs at special low rates is still in vogue, more successful than ever. If you don't know the plan, send or call for a card explaining it fully. We'll cheerfully furnish all you desire. 58 Temple Place.

FIRE INSURANCE

JOHN C. PAIGE,

20 Kilby Street,

BOSTON.

LE DÉJEUNER

132 Tremont St.

MAILLARD'S CANDIES,

DELICIOUS FRESH ICES.

OUR SPECIALTY,

ICE CREAM SODA

Made from the pure fruit flavors only.

PHILIP KRIM,

IMPORTER OF

RHINE WINES,

Warranted Unadulterated, and Dealer in

GROCERIES and FOREIGN PRODUCE,

No. 163 Shawmut Avenue.

THE LATEST EVENING TRAIN FOR NEW YORK

Leaves Boston daily (Sundays excepted) at 11.30 P. M.

VIA THE

N. Y. & N. E. R. R.

This late departure affords AMPLE time to reach the depot after the Concert. Pullman Sleeping-Cars run through to New York.

OFFICE, 322 WASHINGTON ST.

DEPOT, FOOT OF SUMMER ST.

VINCENT HATHAWAY & CO. IMPORTERS AND BOTTLERS BOSTON MASS U.S.A. BASS & CO'S PALE ALE TRADE MARK.

LOIN DU BAL

Sounds from the Ball-Room,

JUST PUBLISHED FOR

String Instruments.....75 cts.
Violin and Piano.....25 cts.
Flute and Piano.....25 cts.

For sale by

W. H. CUNDY,
No. 1 Columbia St.

Or at any Music Store.

J. H. LEWIS,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

417 WASHINGTON STREET.

All the Latest Novelties in Foreign and Domestic Goods for Gentlemen's Summer Wear.

DRESS SUITS TO LET.

HARDMAN

36,000 PIANOS IN USE

C. C. HARVEY & CO. . . . Salesrooms, 177 Tremont St., BOSTON.

the place to buy the best quality at the lowest prices. C. T. SEAVERNS & CO., 403 Washington St. { Opp. Macullar, Parker & Co. Room 8. Elevator.

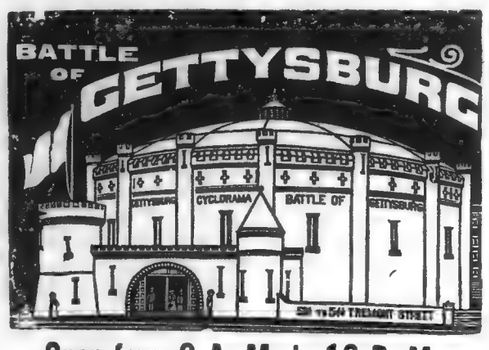
Estey Organs Pianos

Fully Warranted. Sold on Instalments.

ESTEY,

159 Tremont Street - - - Boston.

DO NOT FAIL TO SEE THE



Open from 9 A. M. to 10 P. M.

Horse Cars pass the Door every minute.

A. L. BEARSE,

33 WINTER STREET,

HEADQUARTERS FOR

FANS

— AND —

JEWELRY.

MOXIE

Has created the greatest excitement, demand and sale as a beverage, in two years, ever witnessed in the history of trade, from the fact that it brings nervous, exhausted, overworked women to good powers of endurance in a few days. Cures the uncontrollable appetite for liquors and tobacco at once, and has recovered a large number of cases of old, helpless paralysis as a food only.

SUMMER

It has lately created an immense excitement in Malden, Mass., in recovering the twelve year old daughter of John Nicholson, 735 Main Street, of an old, helpless case of general paralysis, from which she was speechless. She is now a romping, healthy school-girl.

DRINK

It is neither medicine nor stimulant, but a plant that yields a rich nutrition for the nerves, which repairs the hard wear of life or the effects from dissipation within a few days or weeks, and contains no more alcohol than bread or ice-cream, and is the richest beverage known. Druggists have it. For home use buy the Moxie Syrup for 75 cents a 26 oz. bottle, mix three dessert-spoonfuls with a tumbler of ice or soda water, and it will cost you but two cents a tumbler. Three tumblers a day will give you double powers of endurance. MOXIE NERVE FOOD CO., LOWELL, MASS.

Saturday Evening, August 25, 8 to 11.

Mr. CARL HAMPE - - - Soloist.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH (" En Avant ") . . . . . RESCH
2. OVERTURE (" Ruler of Spirits "). . . . . WEBER
3. WALTZ (" Wiener Kinder ") . . . . . STRAUSS
4. SELECTION (" Erminie ") . . . . . JAKOBOWSKI
5. OVERTURE (" Rosamunde ") . . . . . SCHUBERT
6. a.* NOCTURNE . . . . . DVORAK
   b.* DANSE BOHEMIENNE (from the Suite " Tasso ") . GODARD
7. SOLOS FOR TROMBONE.
   a. ELEGIE, No. 2 . . . . . HAMPE
   b. CONCERT MILITAIRE (1st Movement) . . . . LANGEY
   Mr. HAMPE.
8. SCENES ALSACIENNES . . . . . MASSENET
   a. Sunday Morning b. At the Inn.
   c. Under the Linden Tree. d. Sunday Evening.
9. OVERTURE (" Stradella ") . . . . . FLOTOW
10. WALTZ (" Am Neckarstrand ") . . . . . MILLOCKER
11. SCHERZO . . . . . MENDELSSOHN
12. GALOP (" Im tollen Lauf ") . . . . . FAUST

* The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during these numbers.

OBER'S

RESTAURANT PARISIEN,

3 & 4 Winter Place.

Most Elegant Cafe in the City.

Rooms for Private Supper Parties before and after Theatres.

Wines of my own importation.

Bird Dinners, Oyster Suppers, Welsh Rarebits, Golden Buck, etc.

Oysters received fresh daily.

The French Cuisine is unexcelled.

European Waiters.

BESSE'S,

167 Tremont Street,

ICE CREAM PARLORS.

The best Ice Cream and Confectionery. The coolest and most comfortable place in Boston. Orders taken for delivery to any part of the city.

WE INVITE ATTENTION TO OUR

$5 HAND-SEWED

Lace, Button and Congress Calf Boots.

JOHN F. PRAY & SON,

321 Washington St., opp. Milk St.

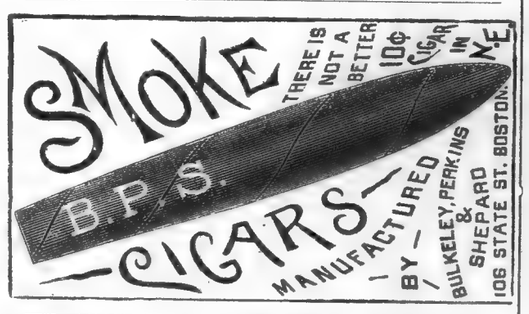
KNABE

Manufacturers of

GRAND, UPRIGHT, AND SQUARE PIANO-FORTES

Unequalled in Tone, Touch, Workmanship, and Durability.

E. W. TYLER, Agent, 178 Tremont St.



R. H. WHITE & CO.

Washington Street, near Bedford.

The "Sembrich" Corset.

(REGISTERED.)

R. H. White & Co., Sole Owners.

THE MOST PERFECT FITTING CORSET IN THE WORLD. LENGTHENS THE WAIST AND REDUCES THE SIZE OF THE HIPS.

We take especial pleasure in showing this corset, as we know it is worthy the attention of every lady who is in want of a shapely, and, at the same time, a comfortable corset.

R.H.W.&CO.

Washington Street, near Bedford.

THE Bartholomay Brewing Company's Lager Beer has been carefully analyzed by Prof. Lattimore, Professor of Chemistry at the University of Rochester, who pronounced it to be pure and healthful. Send your orders to J. C. Gerlach, N. E. Agent, 361 Atlantic Ave.

THE

Collateral Loan Com'ny

328 WASHINGTON ST.

LOANS MADE ON

Diamonds,
Watches,
Jewelry,
Silverware,
Books, Etc.

The only Institution Chartered by the State.

FERD. F. FRENCH & CO.

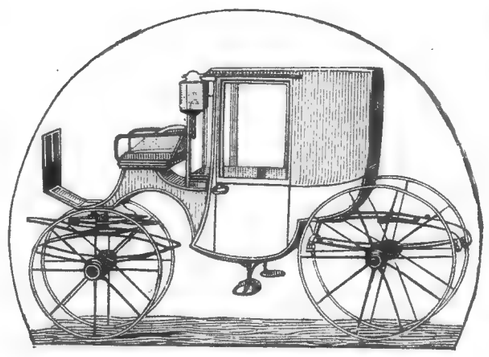
(LIMITED),

CARRIAGE BUILDERS.

FAMILY CARRIAGES

IN ALL THE

Latest Designs.



FALL AND WINTER

PATTERNS

Now Finished and in Preparation.

All Styles Finished to Order. Repairing of Best Grade at Reasonable Prices. All Work Guaranteed as Represented.

155 Tremont Street, BOSTON. 14 to 22 Sudbury Street,

THE "Live Lobsters" broiled is original with the Park House, and is copied by other hotels and restaurants with great success, as it were

NO MATTER WHAT YOU WANT

From an apothecary store, you can save money by buying it at 40 Bromfield Street. We sell

ALL PATENT MEDICINES,

and all other drug store goods at

LOWER REDUCED PRICES

Than they can be bought for at any store on earth.

Physicians' Prescriptions put up for less than half of others' prices.

WOODWARD'S,

40 BROMFIELD STREET.

LOOK for the BLUE STORE.
for the RAINBOW SIGNS.
for the GOLDEN MORTAR over the door.

Remember that 40 is the number of the Original Cut Price Drug Store.

A ROSE by any other name
Could never smell the sweeter,
Nor could P. B. have greater fame
If called, in Greek, "PI BETA."

A. Stowell & Co.,

Summer JEWELRY. The Largest Variety of Fans, Opera Glasses, Worcester Porcelains, English Art Glass and China. Large and Attractive Stock. Lowest Prices.

NEW GOODS THIS WEEK.

24 WINTER ST.

Elmer Chickering,

THE LEADING PHOTOGRAPHER.

The surpassing excellence of our work, and the ever increasing magnitude of our business, have indelibly stamped us as the leaders of our craft. None now contest the title, and we are better prepared than ever to merit the patronage of all who desire THE BEST.

PRICES ALWAYS REASONABLE.

21 West St. - - - Boston.

Those who would recall Boston and vicinity as they appeared during the Revolutionary period should visit the New Cyclorama Building, 401 Tremont Street, and view the wonderfully realistic representations of the Battle of Bunker Hill, and the Boston Tea Party.

LE DÉJEUNER, 132 Tremont Street, make a specialty of their Ice Cream Soda, which is unsurpassed. Only pure fruit flavors are used.

WE recommend highly the Rhine Wines imported by Philip Krim, 163 Shawmut Avenue. They are warranted unadulterated.

C. S. WILLIAMS & CO. 28 Congress St.

66 Devonshire Street, 26 Congress Square and Quincy House.

LYNN OFFICE, MOWER'S BLOCK.

Large or Small Lots on 1 per ct. margin. No Interest. Profits Unlimited.

STOCKS, GRAIN & PROVISIONS.

COUNTRY and SEASHORE.

5 Quires Crown Imperial Linen
And 100 Envelopes, 55 cents.

PAPER BY THE POUND.

W. W. DAVIS & CO.
23 West Street.

THE new entrance to the Park House for ladies is on Bosworth Street. Musty Ale, Broiled Live Lobsters and Game are specialties.

The Boston Times.

"The most Enjoyable Musical and Dramatic Weekly published in Boston."

REGULAR FEATURES:

Society Gossip, Letters from Summer Resorts, Musical Mention, Dramatic News, Current Literature, Base Ball Games and Gossip, etc.

☞ For sale at all Hotels and News Stands every Sunday morning.

D. S. KNOWLTON, Publisher, 20 Hawley St.

Conundrums.

Why is it that so many cigar manufacturers desire to imitate the N S. Cigar?

A. Because it is and always has been a good and fine cigar, and has an excellent reputation.

How can you tell the genuine from the various imitations that exist at present?

A. By examining that nothing but the letters N S. are stamped in the cigar. All others are inferior, and are intended to mislead the public.

BOSTON MUSIC HALL BULLETIN

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, Music Hall.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1888.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. III. No. 93

S. S. P. & CO.

GUINNESS' STOUT
—AND—
BASS' ALE.

FOSTER'S BOTTLING,
DOG'S HEAD and
WHITE LABEL.

S. S. PIERCE & CO.

Importers and Grocers,
Scollay Square. Copley Square.
209 and 211 State St.

W. T. VAN NOSTRAND & CO.

Crystal Lake Brewery,

BOSTON - - - MASS.
Established 1821.

P. B. Stock, Old Musty Ale,

And STOUT PORTER

In Wood and Bottles, also Half and Half in Bottles. Order by Telephone 868.

Sold by Wine Dealers, Grocers, and Apothecaries.

SUMMER SEASON OF 1888.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts.

FOURTH SEASON

Mr. AD. NEUENDORFF, Conductor.

C. A. ELLIS - - - - - - - - - - Manager.

PROGRAMME FOR THIS EVENING.

FROM 8 TO 11.

THE TEMPLE QUARTET.

W. R. BATEMAN, E. F. WEBBER, H. A. COOK, A. C. RYDER.

1. MARCH ("Boccaccio"). . . . . SUPPE
2. OVERTURE ("The Water Carrier") . . . . . CHERUBINI
3. WALTZ ("Freut euch des Lebens") . . . . . STRAUSS
4. SELECTION (from "Herodias") . . . . . MASSENET

5. OVERTURE ("Hunyadi Laslo") . . . . . ERKEL
6. *a. SPHAERENKLAENGE (for String Orchestra) . . RUBINSTEIN
   b. MOORISH SERENADE . . . . . JONAS
7. PART SONG ("Summer Night") . . . . . BUCK
   THE TEMPLE QUARTET.
8. BALLET MUSIC (from "The Queen of Sheba") . . GOLDMARK

9. OVERTURE ("Marriage of Figaro") . . . . . MOZART
10. † EXTRAVAGANZA ("Carnival of Venice") . . . . . GENEE
    THE TEMPLE QUARTET.
11. PRAYER (from "Rienzi") . . . . . WAGNER
12. GALOP ("In Eile") . . . . . STRAUSS

* The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during this number.
† For descriptive words see second page.

Wednesday, Sept. 12, and Friday, Sept. 14, GRAND OPERATIC CONCERTS

THE PIANOFORTE USED IS A CHICKERING.

The Programme for Monday Evening appears on Page III.

SCHMIDT'S Music Store,

13 WEST STREET

N. B. — All music performed at these Concerts in stock, generally in the well-known cheap editions.

LET US GO TO PARK'S,

Bosworth St., near Horticultural Hall, opposite the burying ground, and have a Brace of English Chops, a nice dish of Snipe, Peep, Plover or a Broiled Live Lobster, with a Mug of the Famous Musty Ale, and by the by this Ale is not sold by any other firm in Boston, even if it is so advertised.

F. Thomas

Ice Cream Soda

A SPECIALTY.

Pure Fruit Syrups,
Fine Bon Bons and Chocolates
487 Washington St. and 65 Temple Place.

FOR SALE BY THE LEADING WINE MERCHANTS AND GROCERS.

Smoke DANIEL FRANK & CO.'s ORIGINAL N S. CIGARS. NONE GENUINE BUT THOSE STAMPED N S. ONLY.

If you contemplate purchasing DIAMONDS or other precious STONES, a visit to our office will satisfy you that it is

Boston Music Hall Bulletin

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING

DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.

The advertising columns in the "Bulletin" are controlled SOLELY by Carl G. Zerrahn, 257 Washington Street. Room 6, to whom all communications should be addressed, and who will be pleased to furnish rates upon application.

Mr. George H. Adams is authorized to receive advertisements for this programme.

CARL G. ZERRAHN.

PRESS OF ALFRED MUDGE & SON.

EXTRAVAGANZA.

"CARNIVAL OF VENICE" . . . . . Genee

Carnival of Venice!
That is the name of a famous concert piece,
Often have you heard it given
Earnestly, with gay caprice.

Plenty of fiddling and fluting,
Tubas and trumpets a-tooting!
Artists have in it their talent oft displayed.
By Virtuosi is played.
Ah! why should we not also take it?
Just to see what we can make it.
Jolly singers, all join in!
Now prepare! now begin!

The Theme at first is simple,
Very soft and timid too,
Yet no one can imagine
What will come before 't is through.
Then follows the first variation,
Lightly, daintily tripping along.
With innocent, mild intonation,
The beginning is steady and strong.
Very soon all the rhythm grows strange;
Poor Six-Eight measure is lost;
Every note, every beat, every accent we change;
O'er wild waves they 're cruelly tossed.

The melody then grows chromatic,
Flies up and down, never rests,
The Harmony phlegmatic
With peace alone is blest.

Now with an endless tramming
The bass essay the theme,
The tenor softly humming —
They sigh as in a dream.

Now merry and now tearful,
Now a flourish, now monotone,
Now jocund and now fearful,
All in a single variation shown.
The first lines "staccato,"
Like dancers blithe and gay;
The second "molto legato,"
In melancholy way.

Then suddenly all the singers advance,
Chromatics together to try,
And if this the audience fails to entrance,
We 'll ring it out wondrously high,
Now bright, now quick and light,
Tho' it may not be good,
When all is done 't is only fun,
A joke is understood.

{ Bu-ua, Bu-ua, zi, zi, zi, zi,
{ Ha-ha; a joke is understood.

Once more the theme we 'll give you,
Not to make our joke too long,
The Carnival of Venice!
And here we 'll end our song.

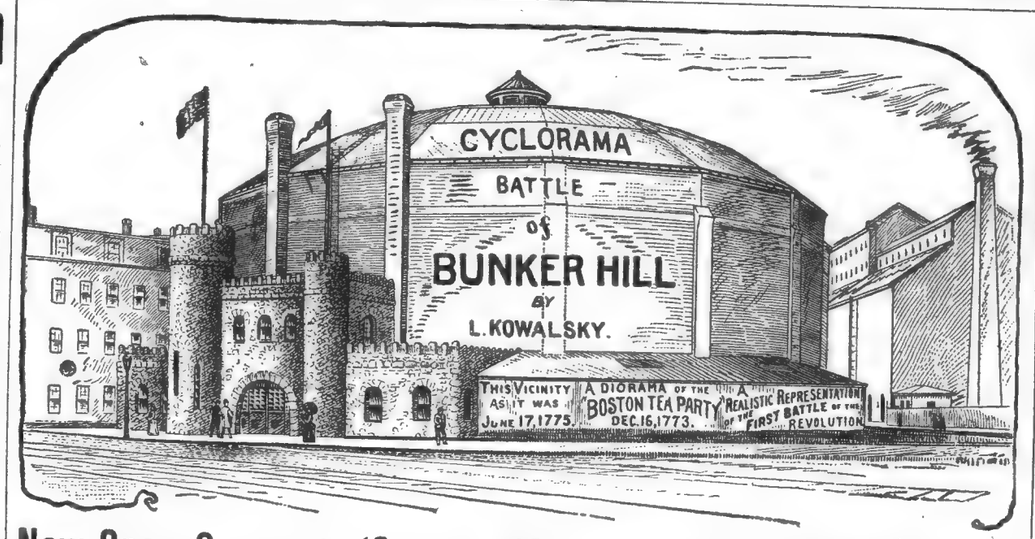
"PA, what are the stops of an organ for?" "They are for varying the tone of an instrument. One causes a flute tone, another a deep tone, and so on." "I see. Has the hand-organ stops?" "No, my son; there is no stop to the hand organ till you tell the man you will stop him with a brick if he does n't move off."

WHEN Music, heavenly maid, was young,
And played upon the lyre,
While yet in early Greece she sung
With soul and lips afire,

Did e'er she dream a girl would play
Upon an upright grand,
Or that there 'd be some future day
An amateur brass band?

Boston Courier.



Now Open, 9 a. m. to 10 p. m., 401 Tremont St., near the Bridge.

J. C. GERLACH,

Sole N. E. Agent for the

Bartholomay Brewing Co.'s

CELEBRATED

ROCHESTER LAGER BEER.

Bottled for hotel and family use. Delivered free to any part of the city. This Beer is supplied to the patrons of these Concerts.

Also, Sole Agent of the RHENS NATURAL MINERAL WATER.

361 Atlantic Avenue and 22 Purchase Street.

Ritz

Photographic Portraiture.

Only those studios which pursue an all-the-year-round policy of lowest prices have the public confidence, and enjoy a steady and increasing patronage. Everybody knows that RITZ is the chief champion of steady, unsensational prices. No wonder, then, that all seasons find us equally busy, no spurts, no sacrifices in prices, but lowest prices always for the very best work. Active specialties now are the Boudoir, Elite and Panel sizes of Photographs, adapted for either large, splendidly retouched and finished heads, or full figures of children or ladies in bridal or party dresses.

Our old and original system of securing best Cabinet Photographs at special low rates is still in vogue, more successful than ever. If you don't know the plan, send or call for a card explaining it fully. We'll cheerfully furnish all you desire. 58 Temple Place.

FIRE INSURANCE

JOHN C. PAIGE,

20 Kilby Street,

BOSTON

Boston Symphony Orchestra

EIGHTH SEASON.

24 Saturday Evening Concerts,

BEGINNING OCTOBER 13.

24 Friday Afternoon Public Rehearsals

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12.

Auction Sale of $12 seats for the Rehearsals, at Music Hall, Monday, September 17, at 10 o'clock A. M.

Auction Sale of $12 seats for the Concerts, at Music Hall, Thursday, September 20, at 10 o'clock A. M.

THE

LATEST EVENING TRAIN FOR NEW YORK

Leaves Boston daily (Sundays excepted) at 11.30 P. M.

VIA THE

N. Y. & N. E. R. R.

This late departure affords AMPLE time to reach the depot after the Concert. Pullman Sleeping-Cars run through to New York.

OFFICE, 322 WASHINGTON ST.

DEPOT, FOOT OF SUMMER ST.

LOIN DU BAL

Sounds from the Ball-Room,

JUST PUBLISHED FOR

String Instruments.....75 cts.
Violin and Piano.....25 cts.
Flute and Piano .....25 cts.

For sale by

W. H. CUNDY,
No. 1 Columbia St.

Or at any Music Store.

J. H. LEWIS,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

417 WASHINGTON STREET.

All the Latest Novelties in Foreign and Domestic Goods for Gentlemen's FALL and WINTER Wear.

DRESS SUITS TO LET.

PHILIP KRIM,

IMPORTER OF

RHINE WINES,

Warranted Unadulterated, and Dealer in

GROCERIES and FOREIGN PRODUCE,

No. 163 Shawmut Avenue.

the place to buy the best quality at the lowest prices. C. T. SEAVERNS & CO., 403 Washington St. { Opp. Macullar, Parker & Co. Room 8. Elevator.

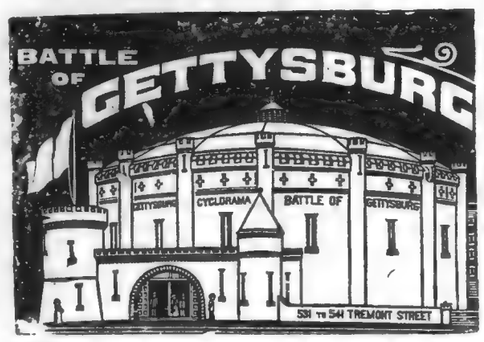
Estey Organs Pianos

Fully Warranted. Sold on Instalments.

ESTEY,

159 Tremont Street - - - Boston.

THE CYCLORAMA



Will close Jan. 1st, to make room for a new subject, now being painted.

CARL C. ZERRAHN,

Exclusive Advertising Manager of the

MUSIC HALL BULLETIN

PARK THEATRE

—AND—

POMPEIAN AMPHITHEATRE PROGRAMMES.

ROOM 6, "HERALD" BUILDING,
257 Washington Street.

Your House, Furniture, Personal or Family Effects, Stable, Horses, Vehicles, Buildings, Rents, Leasehold Interests, Merchandise, Factories, all need the protection of FIRE INSURANCE, which is furnished in small or large amounts, in the best companies, at fair rates, by JOHN C. PAIGE, 20 KILBY STREET, Boston.

Monday Evening, Sept. 10th, 8 to 11.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH ("Egyptian") . . . . . STRAUSS
2. OVERTURE ("French Comedy") . . . . KELER BELA
3. WALTZ ("Lagunen") . . . . . STRAUSS
4. SELECTION (from "Stabat Mater") . . . . . ROSSINI

5. OVERTURE ("Der Freischuetz") . . . . . WEBER
6. a.* IDYLL ("Evening Breezes") . . . . . LANGEY
   b.* AL FRESCO (for String Orchestra) . . . . . ZAVERTHAL
7. Selected.
8. BALLET MUSIC (from the Opera "Henry VIII.") SAINT-SAENS
   a. Introduction: Entree of the Clans. b. Scotch Idyl.
   c. Dance of the Gypsy. d. Gigue and Finale.

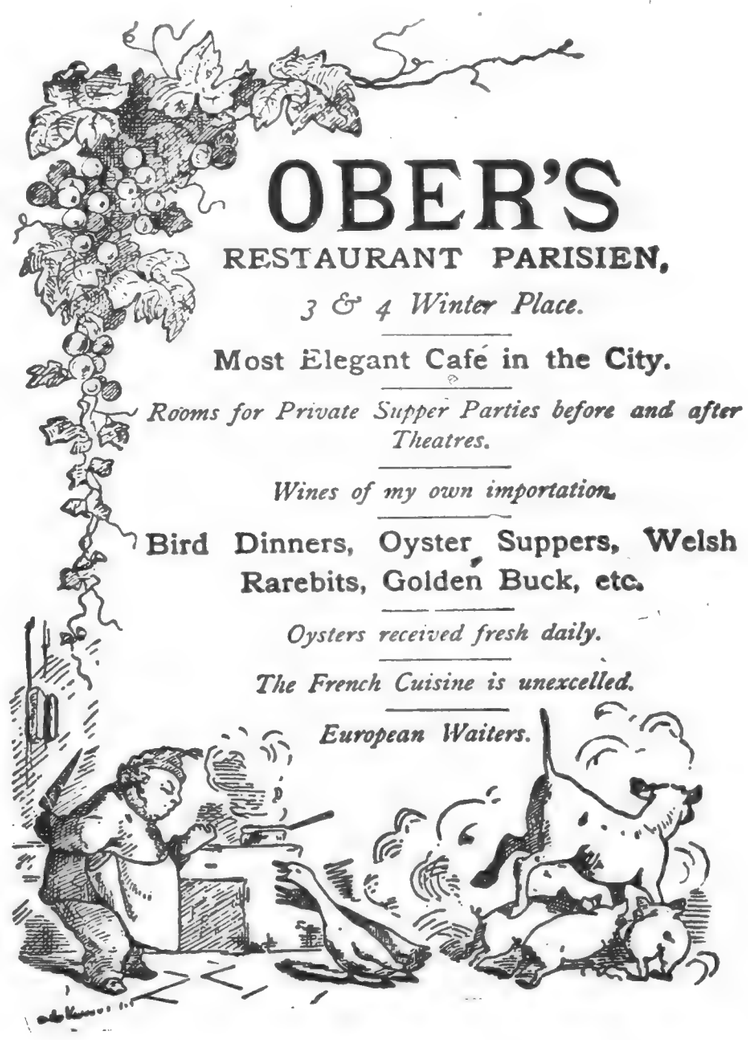
9. OVERTURE ("Le Lac des Fees") . . . . . AUBER
10. Selected.
11. ALBUMLEAF . . . . . WAGNER
12. GALOP ("Ueber Stock und Stein") . . . . . FAUST

*The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during this number.



OBER'S

RESTAURANT PARISIEN,

3 & 4 Winter Place.

Most Elegant Café in the City.

Rooms for Private Supper Parties before and after Theatres.

Wines of my own importation.

Bird Dinners, Oyster Suppers, Welsh Rarebits, Golden Buck, etc.

Oysters received fresh daily.

The French Cuisine is unexcelled.

European Waiters.

BESSE'S,

167 Tremont Street,

ICE CREAM PARLORS.

The best Ice Cream and Confectionery. The coolest and most comfortable place in Boston. Orders taken for delivery to any part of the city.

WE INVITE ATTENTION TO OUR

$5 HAND-SEWED

Lace, Button and Congress Calf Boots.

JOHN F. PRAY & SON,

321 Washington St., opp. Milk St.

KNABE

Manufacturers of

GRAND, UPRIGHT, AND SQUARE PIANO-FORTES

Unequalled in Tone, Touch, Workmanship, and Durability.

E. W. TYLER, Agent, 178 Tremont St.

R. H. WHITE & CO.

Washington Street, near Bedford.

The "Sembrich" Corset.

(REGISTERED.)

R. H. White & Co., Sole Owners.

THE MOST PERFECT FITTING CORSET IN THE WORLD. LENGTHENS THE WAIST AND REDUCES THE SIZE OF THE HIPS.

We take especial pleasure in showing this corset, as we know it is worthy the attention of every lady who is in want of a shapely, and, at the same time, a comfortable corset.

R. H. W. & CO.

Washington Street, near Bedford.

THE Bartholomay Brewing Company's Lager Beer has been carefully analyzed by Prof. Lattimore, Professor of Chemistry at the University of Rochester, who pronounced it to be pure and healthful. Send your orders to J. C. Gerlach, N. E. Agent, 361 Atlantic Ave.

THE

Collateral Loan Com'ny

328 WASHINGTON ST.

LOANS MADE ON

Diamonds,
Watches,
Jewelry,
Silverware,
Books, Etc.

The only Institution Chartered by the State.

FERD. F. FRENCH & CO.

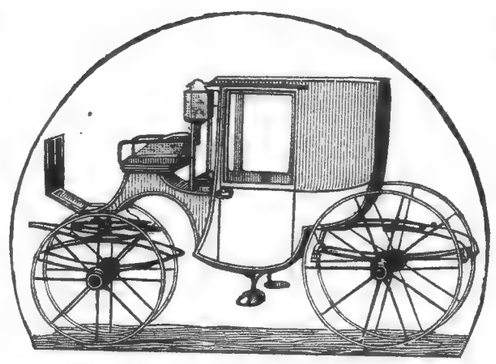
(LIMITED),

CARRIAGE BUILDERS.

FAMILY CARRIAGES

IN ALL THE

Latest Designs.



FALL AND WINTER

PATTERNS

Now Finished and in Preparation.

All Styles Finished to Order. Repairing of Best Grade at Reasonable Prices. All Work Guaranteed as Represented.

155 Tremont Street. — BOSTON. — 14 to 22 Sudbury Street.

THE "Live Lobsters" broiled is original with the Park [illegible] is copied by other hotels and restaurants with great success, as it were

NO MATTER WHAT YOU WANT

From an apothecary store, you can save money by buying it at 40 Bromfield Street. We sell

ALL PATENT MEDICINES,

and all other drug store goods at

LOWER REDUCED PRICES

Than they can be bought for at any store on earth.

Physicians' Prescriptions put up for less than half of others' prices.

WOODWARD'S,

40 BROMFIELD STREET.

LOOK for the BLUE STORE.
for the RAINBOW SIGNS.
for the GOLDEN MORTAR over the door.

Remember that 40 is the number of the Original Cut Price Drug Store.

A ROSE by any other name
Could never smell the sweeter,
Nor could P. B. have greater fame
If called, in Greek, "PI BETA."

A. Stowell & Co.

Summer JEWELRY. The Largest Variety of Fans, Opera Glasses, Worcester Porcelains, English Art Glass and China. Large and Attractive Stock. Lowest Prices.

NEW GOODS THIS WEEK.

24 WINTER ST.

Elmer Chickering,

THE LEADING PHOTOGRAPHER.

21 West St. - - - Boston.

ALFRED MUDGE & SON,
Printers,
24 FRANKLIN STREET,
BOSTON.

With all the most approved modern machinery and material in each department, the excellence of the work, at fair prices, is assured.

"WHISPERED LOVE."

BY ABECASIS.

(A Court Gavote.)

The musical hit of the season, — played with immense success at "Music Hall Promenade Concerts," "Baldwin's Cadet Band," "Reeve's Band," etc. For sale at all music dealers, and published by LOUIS H. ROSS & CO., West Street, Boston.

Those who would recall Boston and vicinity as they appeared during the Revolutionary period should visit the New Cyclorama Building, 401 Tremont Street, and view the wonderfully realistic representations of the Battle of Bunker Hill, and the Boston Tea Party.

WE recommend highly the Rhine Wines imported by Philip Krim, 163 Shawmut Avenue. They are warranted unadulterated.

Conundrums.

Why is it that so many cigar manufacturers desire to imitate the N S. Cigar?

A. Because it is and always has been a good and fine cigar, and has an excellent reputation.

How can you tell the genuine from the various imitations that exist at present?

A. By examining that nothing but the letters N S. are stamped in the cigar. All others are inferior, and are intended to mislead the public.

C. S. WILLIAMS & CO. 28 Congress St.

66 Devonshire Street, 26 Congress Square and Quincy House.
LYNN OFFICE, MOWER'S BLOCK.

Large or Small Lots on 1 per ct. margin.
No Interest. Profits Unlimited.

STOCKS, GRAIN & PROVISIONS.

COUNTRY and SEASHORE.

5 Quires Crown Imperial Linen
And 100 Envelopes, 55 cents.
PAPER BY THE POUND.

W. W. DAVIS & CO.
23 West Street.

THE new entrance to the Park House for ladies is on Bosworth Street. Musty Ale, Broiled Live Lobsters and Game are specialties.

The Boston Times.

"The most Enjoyable Musical and Dramatic Weekly published in Boston."

REGULAR FEATURES:

Society Gossip, Letters from Summer Resorts, Musical Mention, Dramatic News, Current Literature, Base Ball Games and Gossip, etc.

☞ For sale at all Hotels and News Stands every Sunday morning.

D. S. KNOWLTON, Publisher, 20 Hawley St.

ROYAL

TOOTH POWDER

FORMULA BY A FAMOUS DENTIST.

Absolutely pure and harmless. Price, 25 cts. at Druggists, or mailed. B. M. B. Co., 35 & 38 Central Wharf, Boston.

BOSTON MUSIC HALL BULLETIN

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, Music Hall.

BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 29, 1888.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. III. No. 84.

S. S. P. & CO.

GUINNESS' STOUT
—AND—
BASS' ALE.

FOSTER'S BOTTLING,
DOG'S HEAD and
WHITE LABEL.

S. S. PIERCE & CO.

Importers and Grocers,
Scollay Square. Copley Square.
209 and 211 State St.

W. T. VAN NOSTRAND & CO.

Crystal Lake Brewery,

BOSTON - - - - MASS.
Established 1821.

P. B. Stock, Old Musty Ale,
And STOUT PORTER

In Wood and Bottles, also Half and Half in Bottles. Order by Telephone 8d8.

Sold by Wine Dealers, Grocers, and Apothecaries.

SUMMER SEASON OF 1888.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts.

FOURTH SEASON

Mr. AD. NEUENDORFF, Conductor.

C. A. ELLIS - - - - - - - - - - Manager.

PROGRAMME FOR THIS EVENING.

FROM 8 TO 11.

Georgine von Januschowsky and Sig. G. Campanari.

1. TRIUMPHAL MARCH . . . . . BAGLEY
2. OVERTURE ("Mignon") . . . . . A. THOMAS
3. WALTZ ("Wiener Kinder") . . . . . STRAUSS
4. ARIA (from "La Traviata") . . . . . VERDI

Sig. CAMPANARI.

5. OVERTURE AND ORGIE ("Les Huguenots") . . . MEYERBEER
6. ARIA (from "Les Huguenots") . . . . . MEYERBEER

GEORGINE VON JANUSCHOWSKY.

7. DANSE MACABRE (first time) . . . . RIEMENSCHNEIDER
8. GRAND DUO (from "Rigoletto") . . . . . VERDI

GEORGINE VON JANUSCHOWSKY and Sig. CAMPANARI.

9. OVERTURE ("Banditenstreiche") . . . . . SUPPE
10. DEUX MORCEAUX CHARACTERISTIQUES (for String Orchestra).
    a. BABILLAGE (Chit-Chat) . . . . . GILLET
    b. AL FRESCO . . . . . ZAVERTHAL
11. REMINISCENCES (from "Tannhauser") . . . . WAGNER
12. GALOP ("Mit Chic") . . . . . STRAUSS

*The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during these numbers.

Friday, August 31.....SULLIVAN NIGHT

Wednesday, Sept. 5, GALA NIGHT. Only appearance in concert of

MISS BERTHA RICCI

Tickets now ready.

THE PIANOFORTE USED IS A CHICKERING.

The Programme for to-morrow Evening appears on Page III.

SCHMIDT'S Music Store,

13 WEST STREET

N. B. — All music performed at these Concerts in stock, generally in the well-known cheap editions.

LET US GO TO PARK'S,

Bosworth St., near Horticultural Hall, opposite the burying ground, and have a Brace of English Chops, a nice dish of Snipe, Peep, Plover or a Broiled Live Lobster, with a Mug of the Famous Musty Ale, and by the by this Ale is not sold by any other firm in Boston, even if it is so advertised.

F. Thomas' Ice Cream Soda

A SPECIALTY.
Pure Fruit Syrups,
Fine Bon Bons and Chocolates
487 Washington St. and 65 Temple Place.

FOR SALE BY THE LEADING WINE MERCHANTS AND GROCERS.

Smoke DANIEL FRANK & CO.'s ORIGINAL N S. CIGARS. NONE GENUINE BUT THOSE STAMPED N S. ONLY.

If you contemplate purchasing DIAMONDS or other precious STONES, a visit to our office will satisfy you that it is

Boston Music Hall Bulletin

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING

DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.

The advertising columns in the "Bulletin" are controlled SOLELY by Carl G. Zerrahn, 257 Washington Street. Room 6, to whom all communications should be addressed, and who will be pleased to furnish rates upon application.

Mr. George H. Adams is authorized to receive advertisements for this programme.

CARL G. ZERRAHN.

PRESS OF ALFRED MUDGE & SON.

BACCHANALIANA.

Gie him strong drink, until he wink,
That's sinkin' in despair;
And liquor guid, to fire his bluid,
Wha's pressed wi' grief an' care;
There let him booze, and deep carouse,
Wi' bumpers flowin' o'er,
'Til he forgets his loves and debts,
And thinks o' them nae more.

Burns.

"Man shall not live by bread alone,"
But, learned sages think
This means, "be moderate in your meat,
And partly live on drink."
For baser tribes the rivers flow,
Who know not wine nor song;
"Man wants but little here below,"
But wants that little — strong.

Anon.

FATHER GIOVANNI ORISPI REGGHINO, in order to supply a church near Milan with a heap organ, has succeeded in making one with pipes of paper instead of metal. The [illegible] said to be great and its sweetness unequalled.

"WHILE cornet players make their hits,
And wildly shrieks the clarionet,
The dude behind the band-stand sits
And smokes his cigarette.

While piccolos scream long and loud,
And tongues of pretty damsels wag,
The sun-tanned urchin in the crowd
Shouts 'Peanuts, five a bag.'"

THE Bayreuth orchestra comprised thirty-two violins, twelve altos, twelve violoncellos, eight basses, five flutes, five clarinets, five oboes, four bassoons, one counter-bassoon, seven horns, four trumpets, four trombones, one tuba, four harps and two kettle drums, a total of one hundred and six musicians; the chorus numbered ninety six — fourty-four sopranos, twenty-eight tenors and twenty-four basses.

OH! music sweet has charms, you know,
To soothe the savage breast,
It lightens troubles, calms all woe,
And gives the weary rest.

In order, then, to kill his cares,
And all his sorrows check,
The blear-eyed, big-mouthed, bull-dog wears
A brass band round his neck.

New York Journal.

AN amusing incident is said to have occurred during the rehearsal of "The Golden Legend" at the recent Chester Musical Festival. In a particular passage of the legend the maiden who offers her life for Prince Henry, in response to the question, "Have you thought well of this?" replies, "I come not to argue but to die." Here Sir Arthur Sullivan, who was conducting the rehearsal, turned back the page of his score and said, "letter D." This sounded like "let her dee" (Yorkshire dialect for die), and a loud roar of laughter went up from the chorus. Sir Arthur was puzzled to know the reason of the hilarity, and when it was explained to him he joined heartily in the laughter. — Musical World.

Now Open, 9 a. m. to 10 p. m., 401 Tremont St., near the Bridge.

J. C. GERLACH,

Sole N. E. Agent for the

Bartholomay Brewing Co.'s

CELEBRATED

ROCHESTER LAGER BEER.

Bottled for hotel and family use. Delivered free to any part of the city. This Beer is supplied to the patrons of these Concerts.

Also, Sole Agent of the RHENS NATURAL MINERAL WATER.

361 Atlantic Avenue and 22 Purchase Street.

Ritz

Photographic Portraiture.

Only those studios which pursue an all-the-year-round policy of lowest prices have the public confidence, and enjoy a steady and increasing patronage Everybody knows that RITZ is the chief champion of steady, unsensational prices. No wonder, then, that all seasons find us equally busy, no spurts, no sacrifices in prices, but lowest prices always for the very best work. Active specialties now are the Boudoir, Elite and Panel sizes of Photographs, adapted for either large, splendidly retouched and finished heads, or full figures of children or ladies in bridal or party dresses.

Our old and original system of securing best Cabinet Photographs at special low rates is still in vogue, more successful than ever. If you don't know the plan, send or call for a card explaining it fully. We'll cheerfully furnish all you desire. 58 Temple Place.

FIRE INSURANCE

JOHN C. PAIGE,

20 Kilby Street,

BOSTON

POINT OF PINES

THAYER'S NEW FIREWORKS DRAMA

THE FALL OF TUNIS

Every pleasant evening (except Sunday).

Trains via Revere Beach and Lynn R. R. and Eastern Division Boston and Maine R. R.

Fare for the Round Trip, including admission, 35 cents.

THE

LATEST EVENING TRAIN FOR NEW YORK

Leaves Boston daily (Sundays excepted) at 11.30 P. M.

VIA THE

N. Y. & N. E. R. R.

This late departure affords AMPLE time to reach the depot after the Concert. Pullman Sleeping-Cars run through to New York.

OFFICE, 322 WASHINGTON ST.

DEPOT, FOOT OF SUMMER ST.

LOIN DU BAL

Sounds from the Ball-Room,

JUST PUBLISHED FOR

String Instruments.....75 cts.
Violin and Piano.....25 cts.
Flute and Piano .....25 cts.

For sale by

W. H. CUNDY,
No. 1 Columbia St.

Or at any Music Store.

J. H. LEWIS,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

417 WASHINGTON STREET.

All the Latest Novelties in Foreign and Domestic Goods for Gentlemen's FALL and WINTER Wear.

DRESS SUITS TO LET.

PHILIP KRIM,

IMPORTER OF

RHINE WINES,

Warranted Unadulterated, and Dealer in

GROCERIES and FOREIGN PRODUCE,

No. 163 Shawmut Avenue.

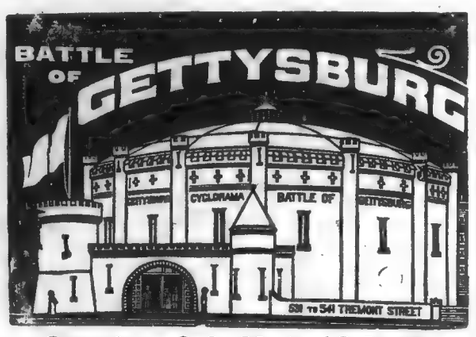
Estey Organs Pianos

Fully Warranted. Sold on Instalments.

ESTEY,

159 Tremont Street - - - Boston.

DO NOT FAIL TO SEE THE



Open from 9 A. M. to 10 P. M.

Horse Cars pass the Door every minute.

CARL C. ZERRAHN,

Exclusive Advertising Manager of the

MUSIC HALL BULLETIN

PARK THEATRE

—AND—

POMPEIAN AMPHITHEATRE PROGRAMMES.

ROOM 6, "HERALD" BUILDING,
257 Washington Street.

MOXIE

Has created the greatest excitement, demand and sale as a beverage, in two years, ever witnessed in the history of trade, from the fact that it brings nervous, exhausted, overworked women to good powers of endurance in a few days. Cures the uncontrollable appetite for liquors and tobacco at once, and has recovered a large number of cases of old, helpless paralysis as a food only.

SUMMER

It has lately created an immense excitement in Malden, Mass., in recovering the twelve year old daughter of John Nicholson, 735 Main Street, of an old, helpless case of general paralysis, from which she was speechless. She is now a romping, healthy school-girl.

DRINK

It is neither medicine nor stimulant, but a plant that yields a rich nutrition for the nerves, which repairs the hard wear of life or the effects from dissipation within a few days or weeks, and contains no more alcohol than bread or ice-cream, and is the richest beverage known. Druggists have it. For home use buy the Moxie Syrup for 75 cents a 26 oz. bottle, mix three dessert-spoonfuls with a tumbler of ice or soda water, and it will cost you but two cents a tumbler. Three tumblers a day will give you double powers of endurance. MOXIE NERVE FOOD CO., LOWELL, MASS.

Thursday Evening, August 30, 8 to 11.

PROGRAMME.

1. WEDDING FESTIVAL MARCH . . . . . RESCH
2. OVERTURE ("Zampa") . . . . . HEROLD
3. WALTZ ("Donauweibchen") . . . . . STRAUSS
4. GRAND SELECTION ("L'Africaine") . . . . MEYERBEER

5. OVERTURE ("Ruy Blas") . . . . . MENDELSSOHN
6. a.* TRAUMEREI AND ROMANCE . . . . . SCHUMANN
   b.* LIEBESLIEDCHEN ("The Tempest") . . . . TAUBERT
7. DANSE MACABRE . . . . . RIEMENSCHNEIDER
8. BALLET MUSIC ("Le Cid") . . . . . MASSENET
   a. Castillane. b. Andalouse. c. Aragonaise.
   d. Aubade. e. Madrilene. f. Navarraise.

9. OVERTURE ("Le Cheval de Bronze") . . . . . AUBER
10. WALTZ ("Longing") . . . . . SEBOR
11. VARIATIONS ON A RUSSIAN FOLKSONG . . . REINBOLD
12. GALOP ("Mit Lust und Liebe") . . . . . FAUST

* The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during these numbers.

OBER'S

RESTAURANT PARISIEN,

3 & 4 Winter Place.

Most Elegant Café in the City.

Rooms for Private Supper Parties before and after Theatres.

Wines of my own importation.

Bird Dinners, Oyster Suppers, Welsh Rarebits, Golden Buck, etc.

Oysters received fresh daily.

The French Cuisine is unexcelled.

European Waiters.

BESSE'S,

167 Tremont Street,

ICE CREAM PARLORS.

The best Ice Cream and Confectionery. The coolest and most comfortable place in Boston. Orders taken for delivery to any part of the city.

WE INVITE ATTENTION TO OUR

$5 HAND-SEWED

Lace, Button and Congress Calf Boots.

JOHN F. PRAY & SON,

321 Washington St., opp. Milk St.

KNABE

Manufacturers of

GRAND, UPRIGHT, AND SQUARE PIANO-FORTES

Unequalled in Tone, Touch, Workmanship, and Durability.

E. W. TYLER, Agent, 178 Tremont St.

R. H. WHITE & CO.

Washington Street, near Bedford.

The "Sembrich" Corset.

(REGISTERED.)

R. H. White & Co., Sole Owners.

THE MOST PERFECT FITTING CORSET IN THE WORLD. LENGTHENS THE WAIST AND REDUCES THE SIZE OF THE HIPS.

We take especial pleasure in showing this corset, as we know it is worthy the attention of every lady who is in want of a shapely, and, at the same time, a comfortable corset.

R.H.W.&CO.

Washington Street, near Bedford.

THE Bartholomay Brewing Company's Lager Beer has been carefully analyzed by Prof. Lattimore, Professor of Chemistry at the University of Rochester, who pronounced it to be pure and healthful. Send your orders to J. C. Gerlach, N. E. Agent, 361 Atlantic Ave.

THE

Collateral Loan Com'ny

328 WASHINGTON ST.

LOANS MADE ON

Diamonds,
Watches,
Jewelry,
Silverware,
Books, Etc.

The only Institution Chartered by the State.

FERD. F. FRENCH & CO.

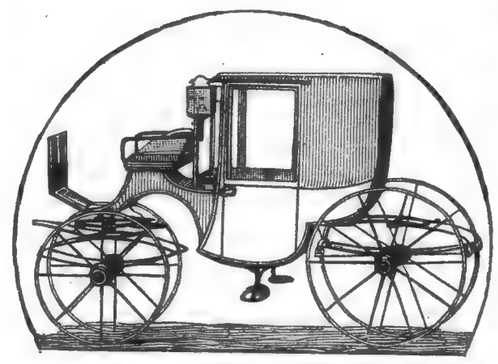
(LIMITED),

CARRIAGE BUILDERS.

FAMILY CARRIAGES

IN ALL THE

Latest Designs.



FALL AND WINTER

PATTERNS

Now Finished and in Preparation.

All Styles Finished to Order. Repairing of Best Grade at Reasonable Prices. All Work Guaranteed as Represented.

155 Tremont Street. — BOSTON. — 14 to 22 Sudbury Street,

THE "Live Lobsters" broiled is original with the Park [illegible] copied by other hotels and restaurants with great success, as it were

NO MATTER WHAT YOU WANT

From an apothecary store, you can save money by buying it at 40 Bromfield Street. We sell

ALL PATENT MEDICINES,

and all other drug store goods at

LOWER REDUCED PRICES

Than they can be bought for at any store on earth.

Physicians' Prescriptions put up for less than half of others' prices.

WOODWARD'S,

40 BROMFIELD STREET.

LOOK for the BLUE STORE.
for the RAINBOW SIGNS.
for the GOLDEN MORTAR over the door.

Remember that 40 is the number of the Original Cut Price Drug Store.

A ROSE by any other name
Could never smell the sweeter,
Nor could P. B. have greater fame
If called, in Greek, "PI BETA."

A. Stowell & Co.

Summer JEWELRY. The Largest Variety of Fans, Opera Glasses, Worcester Porcelains, English Art Glass and China. Large and Attractive Stock. Lowest Prices.

NEW GOODS THIS WEEK.

24 WINTER ST.

Elmer Chickering,

THE LEADING PHOTOGRAPHER.

The surpassing excellence of our work, and the ever increasing magnitude of our business, have indelibly stamped us as the leaders of our craft. None now contest the title, and we are better prepared than ever to merit the patronage of all who desire THE BEST.

PRICES ALWAYS REASONABLE.

21 West St. - - - Boston.

Those who would recall Boston and vicinity as they appeared during the Revolutionary period should visit the New Cyclorama Building, 401 Tremont Street, and view the wonderfully realistic representations of the Battle of Bunker Hill, and the Boston Tea Party.

WE recommend highly the Rhine Wines imported by Philip Krim, 163 Shawmut Avenue. They are warranted unadulterated.

Conundrums.

Why is it that so many cigar manufacturers desire to imitate the N S. Cigar?

A. Because it is and always has been a good and fine cigar, and has an excellent reputation.

How can you tell the genuine from the various imitations that exist at present?

A. By examining that nothing but the letters N S. are stamped in the cigar. All others are inferior, and are intended to mislead the public.

C. S. WILLIAMS & CO. 28 Congress St.

66 Devonshire Street, 26 Congress Square and Quincy House.

LYNN OFFICE, MOWER'S BLOCK.

Large or Small Lots on 1 per ct. margin. No Interest. Profits Unlimited.

STOCKS, GRAIN & PROVISIONS.

COUNTRY and SEASHORE.

5 Quires Crown Imperial Linen
And 100 Envelopes, 55 cents.

PAPER BY THE POUND.

W. W. DAVIS & CO.

23 West Street.

THE new entrance to the Park House for ladies is on Bosworth Street. Musty Ale, Broiled Live Lobsters and Game are specialties.

The Boston Times.

"The most Enjoyable Musical and Dramatic Weekly published in Boston."

REGULAR FEATURES:

Society Gossip, Letters from Summer Resorts, Musical Mention, Dramatic News, Current Literature, Base Ball Games and Gossip, etc.

☞ For sale at all Hotels and News Stands every Sunday morning.

D. S. KNOWLTON, Publisher, 20 Hawley St.

ROYAL

TOOTH POWDER

FORMULA BY A FAMOUS DENTIST.

Absolutely pure and harmless. Price, 25 cts. at Druggists, or mailed. B. M. B. Co., 35 & 38 Central Wharf, Boston.

BOSTON MUSIC HALL BULLETIN

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, Music Hall.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 25, 1888.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. III. No. 81.

S. S. P. & CO.

GUINNESS' STOUT
—AND—
BASS' ALE.

FOSTER'S BOTTLING,
DOG'S HEAD and
WHITE LABEL.

S. S. PIERCE & CO.

Importers and Grocers,
Scollay Square. Copley Square.
209 and 211 State St.

W. T. VAN NOSTRAND & CO.

Crystal Lake Brewery,

BOSTON - - - - MASS.
Established 1821.

P. B. Stock, Old Musty Ale,
And STOUT PORTER

In Wood and Bottles, also Half and Half in Bottles. Order by Telephone 868.

Sold by Wine Dealers, Grocers, and Apothecaries.

SUMMER SEASON OF 1888.

THE MUSIC HALL
Promenade Concerts.

FOURTH SEASON

Mr. AD. NEUENDORFF, Conductor.

C. A. ELLIS - - - - - - - - - - Manager.

PROGRAMME FOR THIS EVENING.

FROM 8 TO 11.

Mr. CARL HAMPE - - - Soloist.

1. MARCH ("En Avant") . . . . . RESCH
2. OVERTURE ("Ruler of Spirits") . . . . . WEBER
3. WALTZ ("Wiener Kinder") . . . . . STRAUSS
4. SELECTION ("Erminie") . . . . . JAKOBOWSKI

5. OVERTURE ("Rosamunde") . . . . . SCHUBERT
6. a.* NOCTURNE . . . . . DVORAK
   b.* DANSE BOHEMIENNE (from the Suite "Tasso") . GODARD
7. SOLOS FOR TROMBONE.
   a. ELEGIE, No. 2 . . . . . HAMPE
   b. CONCERT MILITAIRE (1st Movement) . . . . LANGEY
   Mr. HAMPE.
8. SCENES ALSACIENNES . . . . . MASSENET
   a. Sunday Morning b. At the Inn.
   c. Under the Linden Tree. d. Sunday Evening.

9. OVERTURE ("Stradella") . . . . . FLOTOW
10. WALTZ ("Am Neckarstrand") . . . . . MILLOCKER
11. SCHERZO . . . . . MENDELSSOHN
12. GALOP ("Im tollen Lauf") . . . . . FAUST

* The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during these numbers.

Tickets now ready for Wednesday, Aug. 29. First "Grand Operatic Night."
JANUSCHOWSKY and CAMPANARI in Solos and Duets.

THE PIANOFORTE USED IS A CHICKERING.

The Programme for Monday Evening appears on Page III.

SCHMIDT'S
Music Store,
13 WEST STREET

N. B. — All music performed at these Concerts in stock, generally in the well-known cheap editions.

LET US GO TO PARK'S,

Bosworth St., near Horticultural Hall, opposite the burying ground, and have a Brace of English Chops, a nice dish of Snipe, Peep, Plover or a Broiled Live Lobster, with a Mug of the Famous Musty Ale, and by the by this Ale is not sold by any other firm in Boston, even if it is so advertised.

F. Thomas
Ice Cream Soda
A SPECIALTY.
Pure Fruit Syrups,
Fine Bon Bons and Chocolates
487 Washington St. and 65 Temple Place

FOR SALE BY THE LEADING WINE MERCHANTS AND GROCERS.

Smoke DANIEL FRANK & CO.'s ORIGINAL N S. CIGARS. NONE GENUINE BUT THOSE STAMPED N S. ONLY.

If you contemplate purchasing DIAMONDS or other precious STONES, a visit to our office will satisfy you that it is

Boston Music Hall Bulletin

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING

DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.

The advertising columns in the "Bulletin" are controlled SOLELY by Carl G. Zerrahn, 257 Washington Street. Room 6, to whom all communications should be addressed, and who will be pleased to furnish rates upon application.

Mr. George H. Adams is authorized to receive advertisements for this programme.

CARL G. ZERRAHN.

PRESS OF ALFRED MUDGE & SON.

BACCHANALIANA.

Gie him strong drink, until he wink,
That's sinkin' in despair;
And liquor guid, to fire his bluid,
Wha's pressed wi' grief an' care;
There let him booze, and deep carouse,
Wi' bumpers flowin' o'er,
'Til he forgets his loves and debts,
And thinks o' them nae more.

Burns.

"Man shall not live by bread alone,"
But, learned sages think
This means, "be moderate in your meat,
And partly live on drink."
For baser tribes the rivers flow,
Who know not wine nor song;
"Man wants but little here below,"
But wants that little — strong.

Anon.

FATHER GIOVANNI ORISPI REGGHINO, in order to supply a church near Milan with a heap organ, has succeeded in making one with pipes of paper instead of metal. Its power is said to be great and its sweetness unequalled.

"WHILE cornet players make their hits,
And wildly shrieks the clarionet,
The dude behind the band-stand sits
And smokes his cigarette.

While piccolos scream long and loud,
And tongues of pretty damsels wag,
The sun-tanned urchin in the crowd
Shouts 'Peanuts, five a bag.'"

THE Bayreuth orchestra comprised thirty-two violins, twelve altos, twelve violoncellos, eight basses, five flutes, five clarinets, five oboes, four bassoons, one counter bassoon, seven horns, four trumpets, four trombones, one tuba, four harps and two kettle drums, a total of one hundred and six musicians; the chorus numbered ninety six — fourty-four sopranos, twenty-eight tenors and twenty-four basses.

OH! music sweet has charms, you know,
To soothe the savage breast,
It lightens troubles, calms all woe,
And gives the weary rest.

In order, then, to kill his cares,
And all his sorrows check,
The blear-eyed, big-mouthed, bull-dog wears
A brass band round his neck.

New York Journal.

AN amusing incident is said to have occurred during the rehearsal of "The Golden Legend" at the recent Chester Musical Festival. In a particular passage of the legend the maiden who offers her life for Prince Henry, in response to the question, "Have you thought well of this?" replies, "I come not to argue but to die." Here Sir Arthur Sullivan, who was conducting the rehearsal, turned back the page of his score and said, "letter D." This sounded like "let her dee" (Yorkshire dialect for die), and a loud roar of laughter went up from the chorus. Sir Arthur was puzzled to know the reason of the hilarity, and when it was explained to him he joined heartily in the laughter. — Musical World.

Now Open, 9 a. m. to 10 p. m., 401 Tremont St., near the Bridge.

J. C. GERLACH,

Sole N. E. Agent for the

Bartholomay Brewing Co.'s

CELEBRATED

ROCHESTER LAGER BEER.

Bottled for hotel and family use. Delivered free to any part of the city. This Beer is supplied to the patrons of these Concerts.

Also, Sole Agent of the RHENS NATURAL MINERAL WATER.

361 Atlantic Avenue and 22 Purchase Street.

Ritz

Photographic Portraiture.

Only those studios which pursue an all-the-year-round policy of lowest prices have the public confidence, and enjoy a steady and increasing patronage. Everybody knows that RITZ is the chief champion of steady, unsensational prices. No wonder, then, that all seasons find us equally busy, no spurts, no sacrifices in prices, but lowest prices always for the very best work. Active specialties now are the Boudoir, Elite and Panel sizes of Photographs, adapted for either large, splendidly retouched and finished heads, or full figures of children or ladies in bridal or party dresses.

Our old and original system of securing best Cabinet Photographs at special low rates is still in vogue, more successful than ever. If you don't know the plan, send or call for a card explaining it fully. We'll cheerfully furnish all you desire. 58 Temple Place.

FIRE INSURANCE

JOHN C. PAIGE,

20 Kilby Street,

BOSTON

LE DÉJEUNER

132 Tremont St.

MAILLARD'S CANDIES,

DELICIOUS FRESH ICES.

OUR SPECIALTY,

ICE CREAM SODA

Made from the pure fruit flavors only.

PHILIP KRIM,

IMPORTER OF

RHINE WINES,

Warranted Unadulterated, and Dealer in

GROCERIES and FOREIGN PRODUCE,

No. 163 Shawmut Avenue.

THE

LATEST EVENING TRAIN FOR NEW YORK

Leaves Boston daily (Sundays excepted) at 11.30 P. M.

VIA THE

N. Y. & N. E. R. R.

This late departure affords AMPLE time to reach the depot after the Concert. Pullman Sleeping-Cars run through to New York.

OFFICE, 322 WASHINGTON ST.

DEPOT, FOOT OF SUMMER ST.

LOIN DU BAL

Sounds from the Ball-Room,

JUST PUBLISHED FOR

String Instruments.....75 cts.
Violin and Piano.....25 cts.
Flute and Piano.....25 cts.

For sale by

W. H. CUNDY,
No. 1 Columbia St.

Or at any Music Store.

J. H. LEWIS,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

417 WASHINGTON STREET.

All the Latest Novelties in Foreign and Domestic Goods for Gentlemen's Summer Wear.

DRESS SUITS TO LET.

HARDMAN

36,000 PIANOS IN USE

C. C. HARVEY & CO. . . . Salesrooms, 177 Tremont St., BOSTON.

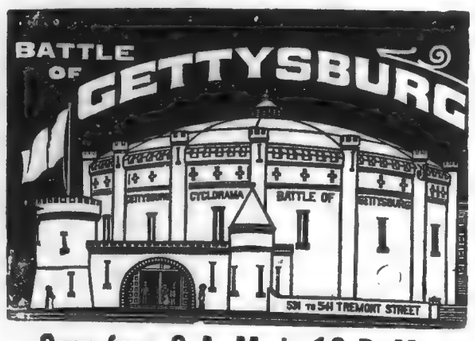
Estey Organs Pianos

Fully Warranted. Sold on Instalments.

ESTEY,

159 Tremont Street - - - Boston.

DO NOT FAIL TO SEE THE



Open from 9 A. M. to 10 P. M.

Horse Cars pass the Door every minute.

A. L. BEARSE,

33 WINTER STREET,

HEADQUARTERS FOR

FANS

—AND—

JEWELRY.

MOXIE

Has created the greatest excitement, demand and sale as a beverage, in two years, ever witnessed in the history of trade, from the fact that it brings nervous, exhausted, overworked women to good powers of endurance in a few days. Cures the uncontrollable appetite for liquors and tobacco at once, and has recovered a large number of cases of old, helpless paralysis as a food only.

SUMMER

It has lately created an immense excitement in Malden, Mass., in recovering the twelve year old daughter of John Nicholson, 735 Main Street, of an old, helpless case of general paralysis, from which she was speechless. She is now a romping, healthy school-girl.

DRINK

It is neither medicine nor stimulant, but a plant that yields a rich nutrition for the nerves, which repairs the hard wear of life or the effects from dissipation within a few days or weeks, and contains no more alcohol than bread or ice-cream, and is the richest beverage known. Druggists have it. For home use buy the Moxie Syrup for 75 cents a 26-oz. bottle, mix three dessert-spoonfuls with a tumbler of ice or soda water, and it will cost you but two cents a tumbler. Three tumblers a day will give you double powers of endurance. MOXIE NERVE FOOD CO., LOWELL, MASS.

Monday Evening, August 27, 8 to 11.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH ("Boccaccio")	SUPPE
2.	OVERTURE ("Nabuccodonosor")	VERDI
3.	WALTZ ("Wiener Kinder")	STRAUSS
4.	SELECTION ("Falka")	CHASSAIGNE
5.	OVERTURE ("Festival")	LASSEN
6.	a. INTRODUCTION to 5th Act "Manfred"	REINECKE
	b. NORWEGIAN WEDDING MARCH	GRIEG
7.	ALBUMBLATT	WAGNER
8.	BALLET MUSIC ("Henry VIII.")	SAINT-SAENS
9.	OVERTURE ("Girofle-Girofla")	LECOCQ
10.	GAVOTTE ("My heart's delight")	A. E. WARREN
11.	TWO SONGS (arranged for Orchestra).
	a. "AM MEER"	SCHUBERT
	b. MY MESSENGERS	GERICKE
12.	GALOP ("Im Laufschritt")	FAHRBACH

*The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during this number.

OBER'S

RESTAURANT PARISIEN,

3 & 4 Winter Place.

Most Elegant Café in the City.

Rooms for Private Supper Parties before and after Theatres.

Wines of my own importation.

Bird Dinners, Oyster Suppers, Welsh Rarebits, Golden Buck, etc.

Oysters received fresh daily.

The French Cuisine is unexcelled.

European Waiters.

BESSE'S,

167 Tremont Street,

ICE CREAM PARLORS.

The best Ice Cream and Confectionery. The coolest and most comfortable place in Boston. Orders taken for delivery to any part of the city.

WE INVITE ATTENTION TO OUR

$5 HAND-SEWED

Lace, Button and Congress Calf Boots.

JOHN F. PRAY & SON,

321 Washington St., opp. Milk St.

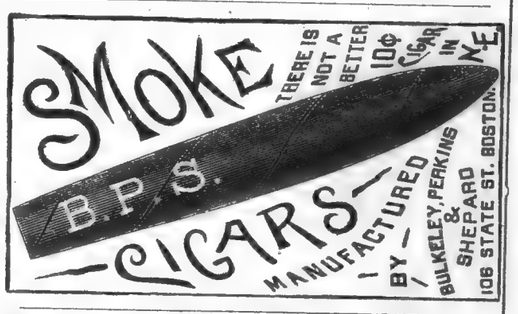
KNABE

Manufacturers of

GRAND, UPRIGHT, AND SQUARE PIANO-FORTES

Unequalled in Tone, Touch, Workmanship, and Durability.

E. W. TYLER, Agent, 178 Tremont St.



R. H. WHITE & CO.

Washington Street, near Bedford.

The "Sembrich" Corset.

(REGISTERED.)

R. H. White & Co., Sole Owners.

THE MOST PERFECT FITTING CORSET IN THE WORLD. LENGTHENS THE WAIST AND REDUCES THE SIZE OF THE HIPS.

We take especial pleasure in showing this corset, as we know it is worthy the attention of every lady who is in want of a shapely, and, at the same time, a comfortable corset.

R.H.W.&CO.

Washington Street, near Bedford.

THE Bartholomay Brewing Company's Lager Beer has been carefully analyzed by Prof. Lattimore, Professor of Chemistry at the University of Rochester, who pronounced it to be pure and healthful. Send your orders to J. C. Gerlach, N. E. Agent, 361 Atlantic Ave.

THE

Collateral Loan Com'ny

328 WASHINGTON ST.

LOANS MADE ON

Diamonds,
Watches,
Jewelry,
Silverware,
Books, Etc.

The only Institution Chartered by the State.

FERD. F. FRENCH & CO.

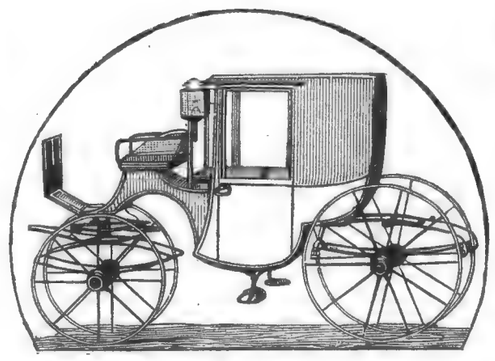
(LIMITED),

CARRIAGE BUILDERS.

FAMILY CARRIAGES

IN ALL THE

Latest Designs.



FALL AND WINTER

PATTERNS

Now Finished and in Preparation.

All Styles Finished to Order. Repairing of Best Grade at Reasonable Prices. All Work Guaranteed as Represented.

155 Tremont Street. — BOSTON. — 14 to 22 Sudbury Street,

THE "Live Lobsters" broiled is original with the Park House, and is copied by other hotels and restaurants with great success, as it were

NO MATTER WHAT YOU WANT

From an apothecary store, you can save money by buying it at 40 Bromfield Street. We sell

ALL PATENT MEDICINES,

and all other drug store goods at

LOWER REDUCED PRICES

Than they can be bought for at any store on earth.

Physicians' Prescriptions put up for less than half of others' prices.

WOODWARD'S,

40 BROMFIELD STREET.

LOOK for the BLUE STORE.
for the RAINBOW SIGNS.
for the GOLDEN MORTAR over the door.

Remember that 40 is the number of the Original Cut Price Drug Store.

A ROSE by any other name
Could never smell the sweeter,
Nor could P. B. have greater fame
If called, in Greek, "PI BETA."

A. Lowell & Co.

Summer JEWELRY. The Largest Variety of Fans, Opera Glasses, Worcester Porcelains, English Art Glass and China. Large and Attractive Stock. Lowest Prices.

NEW GOODS THIS WEEK.

24 WINTER ST.

Elmer Chickering,

THE LEADING PHOTOGRAPHER.

The surpassing excellence of our work, and the ever increasing magnitude of our business, have indelibly stamped us as the leaders of our craft. None now contest the title, and we are better prepared than ever to merit the patronage of all who desire THE BEST.

PRICES ALWAYS REASONABLE.

21 West St. - - - Boston.

Those who would recall Boston and vicinity as they appeared during the Revolutionary period should visit the New Cyclorama Building, 401 Tremont Street, and view the wonderfully realistic representations of the Battle of Bunker Hill, and the Boston Tea Party.

LE DÉJEUNER, 132 Tremont Street, make a specialty of their Ice Cream Soda, which is unsurpassed. Only pure fruit flavors are used.

WE recommend highly the Rhine Wines imported by Philip Krim, 163 Shawmut Avenue. They are warranted unadulterated.

C. S. WILLIAMS & CO. 28 Congress St.

66 Devonshire Street, 26 Congress Square and Quincy House.

LYNN OFFICE, MOWER'S BLOCK.

Large or Small Lots on 1 per ct. margin. No Interest. Profits Unlimited.

STOCKS, GRAIN & PROVISIONS.

COUNTRY and SEASHORE.

5 Quires Crown Imperial Linen
And 100 Envelopes, 55 cents.

PAPER BY THE POUND.

W. W. DAVIS & CO.

23 West Street.

THE new entrance to the Park House for ladies is on Bosworth Street. Musty Ale, Broiled Live Lobsters and Game are specialties.

The Boston Times.

"The most Enjoyable Musical and Dramatic Weekly published in Boston."

REGULAR FEATURES:

Society Gossip, Letters from Summer Resorts, Musical Mention, Dramatic News, Current Literature, Base Ball Games and Gossip, etc.

☞ For sale at all Hotels and News Stands every Sunday morning.

D. S. KNOWLTON, Publisher, 20 Hawley St.

Conundrums.

Why is it that so many cigar manufacturers desire to imitate the N S. Cigar?

A. Because it is and always has been a good and fine cigar, and has an excellent reputation.

How can you tell the genuine from the various imitations that exist at present?

A. By examining that nothing but the letters N S. are stamped in the cigar. All others are inferior, and are intended to mislead the public.

HERRICK, COPLEY SQUARE, Telephones 608 and 950 (Back Bay), CHOICE TABLES for Music Hall "Pops."

GREAT WESTERN

CHAMPAGNE

A natural, genuine champagne, of the finest quality produced in America.

Sold by Wine Merchants, Grocers, and Druggists.

TUESDAY, MAY 9.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Under the Double Eagle" . . . . . Wagner
2. OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry" . . . . . Suppé
3. WALTZ, "Snowballs" . . . . . Ziehrer
4. PEARLS FROM THE OPERAS OF . . . . . Meyerbeer

---

5. MARCH from "El Capitan" . . . . . Sousa
6. WALTZ, "Emperor" . . . . . Strauss
7. BOSNIAN SONG AND KOLO (National Dance) . . . Komzak
   (First Time.)
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
8. FINALE from Act I., "Lohengrin" . . . . . Wagner

---

9. TWO SPANISH DANCES . . . . . Moszkowski
10. LARGO . . . . . Händel
    Violin Solo, MR. K. ONDRICEK.
11. WALTZ, "Jolly Fellows" . . . . . Vollstedt
12. TEUFELSMARSCH . . . . . Suppé

Handsomest Dining Hotel in New England.

THE HAYWARD

20 Private Dining-rooms.

Beer and Ale drawn direct from wood in THE DUTCH TAP.

SMITH & KERRISSEY, Proprietors.

"M. S."

GINGER ALE.

An epicurean beverage, made with Myles Standish Spring Water and compounded with scrupulous care from the highest grade materials.

To be had at the Promenade Concerts.

L. BOYER'S SONS,

Proprietors,

No. 27 Devonshire St., Boston.

MAIN OFFICE.

No. 90 Wall St., New York.

"AMERICA'S FINEST PRODUCT."

Bartholomay's "APOLLO"

LAGER BEER IN BOTTLES.

Sold at these Concerts.

ALBRECHT & KOELLNER,

SOLE AGENTS,

Telephone, Boston 1751. 295-305 A Street.

Also Agents for the "Crystal Rock" Mineral Water.

PURE BEER

Harvard

BREW. CO'S $1000.00

PURE BEER

Sold at these Concerts

IN BOTTLES ONLY

20¢ PER BOTTLE.

TABLE LINEN USED AT THESE CONCERTS LAUNDERED BY THE L. K. HUSTED LAUNDERING COMPANY, 27 and 29 BROADWAY, CHELSEA, MASS.

Inglenook Vineyard.

The only California Wines sold at these Concerts.

THE CODMAN & HALL CO.,

Opposite the South Union Station.

Sole Agents for New England.

IND. COOPE & CO.'S English Ale.

THE SECOND LARGEST BREWERY IN ENGLAND.

Brewers of the finest light quality ale. Very highly endorsed by the medical profession. : : : : :

THE CODMAN & HALL CO.,

Opposite South Union Station.

Sole Agents for the United States.

Instruct your waiter to bring a bottle of Pfaff's "Monogram" Lager.

If you will do this, it will not be necessary for us to expatiate upon the good qualities of our production.

YOU CAN JUDGE FOR YOURSELF.

H. & J. PFAFF BREWING COMPANY,

Telephone 2608. 16 ARCH STREET, BOSTON.

DRINK only the

PURE

WHISKY

FINE OLD KY. TAYLOR

If you want and rich flavor, only ge and ori

OLD KEN TAYLO

Eight years own distilla guaranteed Bottled and direct fr warehouse None genu out our on both la ware of i For con indigestio ailments stimulants KENTUCK LOR h superior.

Sold by class d grocers, a dealers.

Wright &
Dist
Fine K
Whi
Louisvi

Hirshfiel
New Ag
31 Doa
Bo

DRINK only the PUREST
WHISKY
FINE OLD KY. TAYLOR WHISKY.

If you want purity and richness of flavor, try our only genuine and original

OLD KENTUCKY TAYLOR,

Eight years old, our own distillation and guaranteed pure. Bottled and shipped direct from our warehouses by us. None genuine without our signature on both labels. Beware of imitations. For consumption, indigestion, and all ailments requiring stimulants, OLD KENTUCKY TAYLOR has no superior.

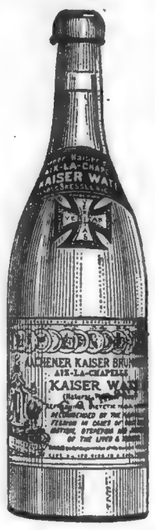
Sold by all first-class druggists, grocers, and liquor dealers.

Wright & Taylor,
Distillers,
Fine Kentucky Whiskies,
Louisville, Ky.

Hirshfield & Co.,
New England Agents,
31 Doane Street, Boston.

They cannot sell you here
Canadian Club Whisky,
Ruinart Champagne,
Royal Liqueur Scotch,
Carstair's Philadelphia Rye,
Fort Hill Bourbon,
Alhambra Sherry,
All of which you will find of excellent quality;

But you can get



Kaiser Water,

the most refreshing of all table waters,

Chateau d'Arsac Claret,
N. Johnston & Sons' Medoc,
and . . .
California Inglenook Clarets.

SUPPLIED BY

CODMAN & HALL COMPANY,

WINE MERCHANTS,

Opposite New South Station.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 10.

PROGRAMME.

1. PERSIAN MARCH . . . . . Strauss
2. OVERTURE, "Merry Wives of Windsor" . . . . Nicolai
3. WALTZ, "Nachtschwärmer" . . . . . Ziehrer
   (First Time.)
4. SELECTION from "The Serenade" . . . Victor Herbert

5. WALTZ, "Du und Du," from "The Bat" . . . . . Strauss
6. EN RÊVE . . . . . Gabriel Marie
   (First Time.)

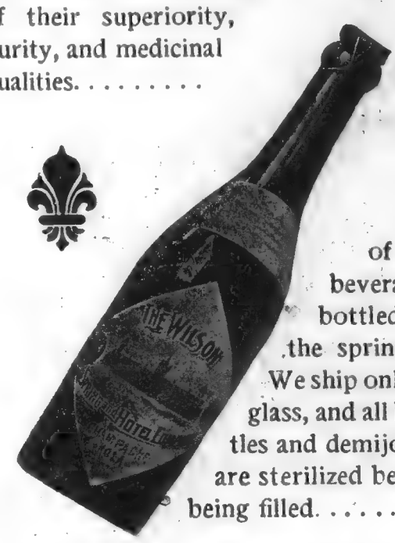
The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.

7. TWO MOVEMENTS from "Feramors" . . . . Rubinstein
8. OVERTURE to "The Mastersingers" . . . . . Wagner

9. GAVOTTE for String Orchestra . . . . . Bach
10. SELECTION from "Erminie" . . . . . Jakobowsky
11. WALTZ, "España" . . . . . Waldteufel
12. MARCH, "Vienna Dude" . . . . . Wagner

THE WILSON,
AMERICA'S PUREST
Mineral Spring Water,

Is used in making our celebrated
Belfast Ginger Ale,
Champagne Kola,
Lemon Soda, Club Soda, Vichy, etc. Hotels and Families supplied. Try a sample order of these goods, and be convinced of their superiority, purity, and medicinal qualities. . . . . .



All of our beverages bottled at the spring. . . . We ship only in glass, and all bottles and demijohns are sterilized before being filled. . . . . .

Wilson Spring and Hotel Co.,
Tel., 3129 Boston. | 45 ARCH STREET.

"THE RECOGNIZED FAVORITE OF ALL BEERS."

Schlitz
THE BEER THAT MADE MILWAUKEE FAMOUS.

HIGHEST AWARD FOR PURITY.

Sold at these Concerts. JOS. GAHM & CO., N.E. AGENTS, 125-127 PURCHASE ST.

THE ONLY BEER ON DRAUGHT AT THESE CONCERTS.

"the beer that's brewed"

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS.
ROCHESTER BREWING Co's.
NOTED THE WORLD OVER FOR ITS PURITY.
FAMOUS BOTTLED BEER
RIENZI, PREMIER, BOHEMIAN, BAVARIAN, STANDARD.
HOME OFFICE & BREWERY ROCHESTER, N.Y.
NEW ENGLAND BRANCH ROCHESTER BREWING CO.
295-305 A STREET BOSTON
Free delivery in City and Suburbs

THE FALL RIVER LINE

OCCUPYING THE LONG ISLAND SOUND ROUTE BETWEEN

Boston and New York

Has the finest quintette of great steamboats that the world has ever seen. The

Priscilla, Puritan, Plymouth, Pilgrim, and Providence

Are the largest, best equipped, safest, and handsomest steamboats ever constructed. This route is one of the most attractive and naturally beautiful traversed by any transportation agency in the world.

Trips of the Fall River Line are made throughout the year. Each steamboat has its own orchestra, and the service on each member of the fleet is maintained at the highest possible standard.

Tickets via this route are on sale at all of the principal Ticket Offices in the United States.

From BOSTON. Trains, connecting with steamers at Fall River in 80 minutes, leave Park Square Station, New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad (Old Colony System), daily at 6 p.m.

From NEW YORK. Steamers leave Pier 19, North River, foot of Warren Street, daily at 5.30 p.m.

S. A. GARDNER, Superintendent, NEW YORK.

GEO. L. CONNOR, Passenger Traffic Manager, NEW HAVEN, CONN.

O. H. TAYLOR, General Passenger Agent, NEW YORK CITY.

HOTEL LANGWOOD,

Middlesex Fells Reservation.

P.O. Address, Melrose, Mass. Wyoming Station, B. & M. R.R.

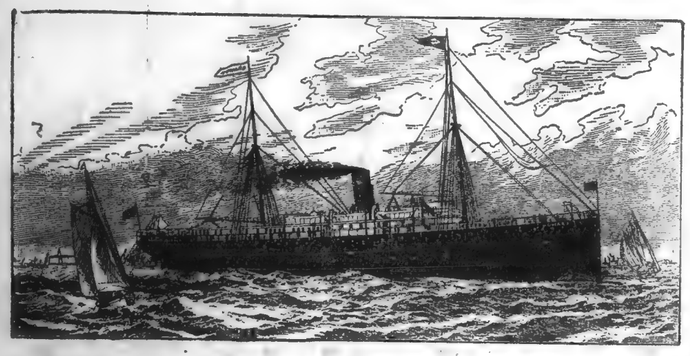
Twenty minutes by rail from Boston. Sixty trains daily. Hotel coaches meet trains each way. Four hundred feet above sea level. Beautiful rides, drives, and walks. Golf links, tennis courts, and ball grounds.

OPENS ABOUT MAY 20.

For plans and prices address:

F. W. GASKILL, Manager.

BOSTON OFFICE:
Hemenway Building, 10 Tremont Street, Room 29.



S.S. "Howard." Boston to Norfolk, 522 miles. Norfolk to Baltimore, 200 miles.

Boston		1.	2.	3.
	Leave	July 2	July 15	August 19
	Arrive	July 12	July 31	September 4

S.S. "Toronto." Toronto to Montreal, through the "Thousand Islands" and the "Rapids," 376 miles.

Third Season.

3 Ideal Outings

Personally conducted by F. R. COMEE, Music Hall, Boston.

No. 1. Ten days. Saratoga. Lake George. 2,130 miles from Buffalo to Duluth, and return on the steamer "North-Land" through the Great Lakes, Erie, Huron, St. Clair, and Superior.

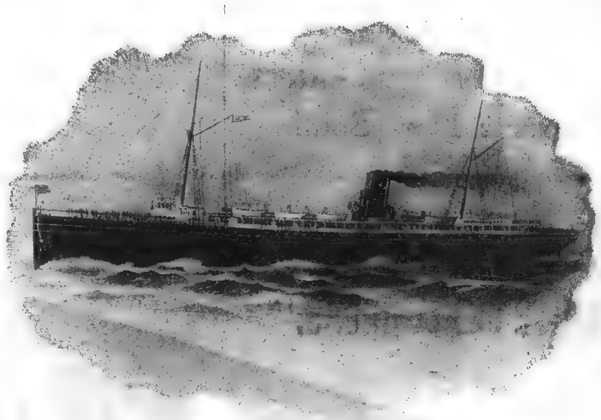
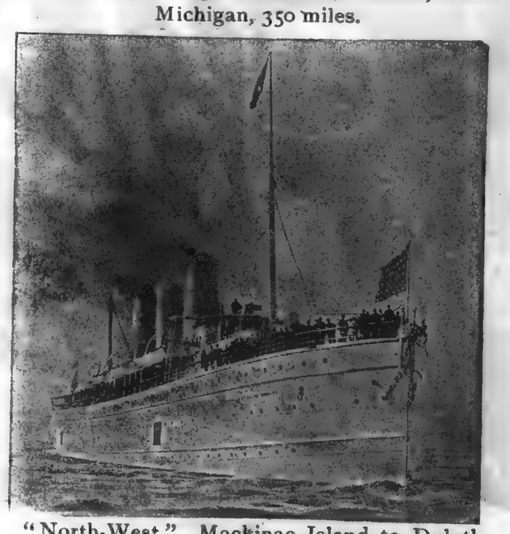
Nos. 2 and 3. Sixteen days. Exactly alike. 700 miles' ocean sail to Norfolk and Baltimore. Over Alleghany Mountains and a day in Chicago. Up Lake Michigan and three days at Mackinac Island. 1,546 miles on steamer "North-West" to Duluth and return to Buffalo through the Great Lakes. Niagara Falls to Toronto. Across Lake Ontario, through the Thousand Islands, and down the St. Lawrence River to Montreal and Boston.

SEND FOR CIRCULARS.



S.S. "Manitou." Chicago to Mackinac Island, across Lake Michigan, 350 miles.



"North-West." Mackinac Island to Duluth and return to Buffalo, 1,555 miles.

BLANK PAGE

END OF VOLUME

END OF REEL

PLEASE REWIND